Mr. MORTON. I am told that under the management of these two clerks they have no power, perhaps, to prevent it; they do not know what was necessary. In a certain hospital not very far from this city there was charged for, in the account sent here to be adjusted, enough of a certain article of medicine purchased for the use of that hospital at large prices that would supply all the ordinary practitioners in the United States for one year. I was told so by a very eminent physician who was speaking about this matter. But believing that that difficulty is about to be removed I want to say that on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers marine hospitals can scarcely be too abundant. Why? They may not be full of patients. It is better that there should be no patients than that they should be full. They are required at various points along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. A bill passed the Senate here by inadvertence the other day to sell the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana. I am told the hospital has been abandoned in some way. I was written to by the people in Evansville, saying that the hospital ought not to be sold, but ought to be carried on as a marine hospital, that there was great demand for it. Provision was made for the sale of that hospital by a bill that passed the Senate, but was recalled on my motion from the House; and it was to be sold for $10,100—property that cost the Government more than $60,000—and which is demanded now for the very purposes for which it was constructed.

It is well known that the policy of those conducting steamboats and every kind of craft, not only on the rivers but on the lakes, is to put their sick off at the earliest moment; they are afraid of contagion on the boat; it may be yellow fever; it may be small-pox; it may be typhoid fever. It is necessary to remove the sick persons for the purpose of keeping the boat healthy, and therefore the demand for having these hospitals at many points on the rivers, lakes, and coast. Some of them may have but few patients, but those few patients are entitled to be taken care of. Humanity belongs to the few as well as to the many; and I deprecate the policy of selling these hospitals, and I hope that the amendment of the committee striking out this appropriation will not pass. I say it is a mere question of humanity.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the policy of taking care of seamen has been adopted almost from the beginning of navigation by every commercial nation. We adopted it, I think, in 1798, without any doubt of the power to do it, under the authority conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce; and it has been continued from that time to the present. The mode of doing it originally, which is still carried out, was to retain a certain proportion of their pay, twenty cents a month, I think, to constitute a fund with which to pay the expenses of the hospitals that might be erected. That fund proved altogether inefficient, I think, in 1815, and from that time to this, appropriations have been annually made as they were needed.

As was stated by the honorable member from Maine, this class of people is a peculiar one. They are reckless; they are subjected to hardships greater than those to which men in other occupations are subjected; and the result of their hardships, being tossed upon the ocean in all weather, subjected to every variety of temperature, and frequently disease in various ways, is that when they are unfit for service on board a ship they are unfit for service on land. They must then die or be supported. We have thought as all other commercial nations have thought, as I have said, that it is policy, and as the honorable member from Indiana says, humanity, to take care of them. It is true, in the beginning we needed few hospitals, but at that time there was comparatively very little commerce. Our inland commerce is now greater than our commerce with other nations. The result is that all our rivers are filled with vessels, filled with seamen; they get sick, particularly those who ply up the Ohio and Mississippi; they get the diseases consequent upon the malaria which is to be found in those sections, and those diseases are more or less contagious. They cannot be kept on board the vessel, because the disease at once spreads and the vessels could not be navigated. They will not be taken care of on the shore generally, for the same reason: the people on the shore are anxious to avoid the spread of the disease. The only way therefore to protect them is to put them in hospitals where they will be the patients of the Government. And there is no class of our citizens to whom we have been more indebted in the past, and to whom we shall be more indebted in the future for the commercial prosperity which has attended the growth of the nation.

The appropriation may be too large; I do not know how that is; but looking over the list of the patients who have from time to time been received at these hospitals, it will be found that for several years the deficit between the amount received from the hospital fund and the amount expended is very great. I think the deficit in New York during the year, the statement of which is before the honorable chairman, is some fifty thousand dollars; I think in Portland, Maine, it is about six thousand dollars, and the same proportion exists in the other hospitals upon the sea-coast, and particularly those in the interior. I trust that the appropriation will remain.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce has had the subject of marine hospitals under consideration for two or three years. A year ago last winter the committee recommended, and Congress passed a bill, disposing of a large number of these hospitals where there were few patients, and providing for disposing of all where the number of patients did not average twenty. It was likewise discovered that very great abuses did exist in these hospitals, as was stated by my friend from Indiana, and this past winter the committee reported a bill creating an inspector of hospitals. I think the measures that have been adopted within the last two or three years may have reduced the expenditures in these hospitals a considerable extent, and, with the consent of the Committee on Appropriations, I will move to amend this clause by reducing the appropriation from $250,000 to $100,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think that will be large enough.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will say $125,000.

Mr. MORTON. It will be better to make it $150,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; then I will move to make it $150,000; but of course it will not be expended unless it is needed. I am very sure that the measures adopted within the last two years must have diminished the necessities of expenditures for this purpose to that extent. I move now to perfect the clause by reducing the appropriation from $250,000 to $150,000.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Michigan says $150,000 are needed. Is he sure of that?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what was the appropriation made last year for this purpose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How much was expended?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know that; but I am sure the measures we have introduced lately will reduce the expenses very considerably, and particularly the measure providing for a supervising inspector.

Mr. SUMNER. But that bill has not yet passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has passed the Senate, and will pass the other House. If we find that this appropriation is not enough we can appropriate more in another bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee were of the opinion that the amount now proposed would be ample to meet any deficiency that might be expected from a reasonable administration.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There have been, undoubtedly, improvements made recently, and I have no doubt that the appointment of a superintendent will be of a good deal of value. There has been, as my friend from Indiana suggests, a mismanagement produced by ignorance. I have some little acquaintance with that. We have one hospital in the State of Maine, and the gentleman in charge of it told me at one time that he had received directions in regard to medicines, that he must use such and such medicines, and buy of so-and-so. He said this regulation was absurd. In the first place, many of the medicines he was ordered to buy were not needed; and in many cases other medicines, which he could not buy under the regulations, were absolutely necessary. These regulations were made many years ago, and the clerk in the Treasury Department, at the head of the system, put down regulations: "You must have such and such medicines; so much in quantity and of certain kinds, and those are all you can have." The physician to whom I refer applied to me, and I told him to write an account of the matter to the Department, and to express his views fully, and see if he could not get this changed. He said it was a gross absurdity, and it was only making more expense; that it piled up medicines he could not use, and deprived him of medicines that he absolutely needed for diseases that came under his observation. I submitted his letter to the Department, and he at once had authority to make the necessary changes. I have no doubt that a provision for a responsible superintendent will be of value in reforming the whole system.

Mr. SUMNER. My hesitation now is whether it is advisable to interfere with this clause as it stands in the bill at all. The Senator from Michigan proposes to cut down the appropriation $100,000. If the Senator could furnish any well-tried calculations to justify such a cutting down, of course that would be in the interest of economy, and I should not hesitate to follow his suggestion; but why will you risk so important a charity as this when you have not the facts that shall guide you?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say that we have disposed of nearly half our marine hospitals, which were a large item of expense. The bill passed a year ago last winter, and they have been sold from time to time. It is a very large diminution of the expense. Then, again, this superintendent whom we have provided for the appointment of will, we hope and expect, cut off the abuses that from ignorance have crept into the management of these institutions, so that my friend from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] who is upon the Committee of Commerce, who has devoted a good deal of time to this subject, is of the opinion, and so am I, that $100,000 would be enough. I therefore proposed to reduce the appropriation from $250,000 to $100,000. I think so yet; but perhaps it would be as well to put in $150,000, because it will not be expended unless needed.

Mr. SUMNER. I would not give a dollar too much, but I am anxious not to give a dollar too little.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is better to let it go.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; on the assurance of the Senator I will say nothing further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, to strike out $250,000 and insert $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on striking out the clause as amended.

Mr. HOWE. I think that is a step in the right direction. I think you have made $100,000 this morning, and if you agree to the amendment reported by the committee you will make $150,000 more.

Mr. SUMNER. And hurt the sailors.

Mr. HOWE. You have not hurt a sailor, and you will not hurt a sailor by striking out the appropriation. That there is any interest of humanity subserved by this appropriation I do not believe; and the evidence of that is that humanity did not suffer for almost half a century before you ever made an appropriation of the kind.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How do you know that?

Mr. HOWE. I never knew humanity to suffer in any direction that I did not hear of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You did not live in those days.

Mr. HOWE. I lived in a part of those days; I was born before 1846, and you never made an appropriation but once before 1846.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Because there was no deficiency.

Mr. HOWE. Because there was no deficiency, the Senator says; and he is entirely right, and there was no suffering. If you do not make any appropriation this year there still will not be any deficiency. It is a remarkable fact that these appropriations for marine hospitals are always expended. The Senator asked the question just now how much of the last year's appropriation was expended. I did not answer; but I can tell him now that I presume all the appropriation was expended that was made. I presume it was all expended, for tracing those appropriations up to 1865, where I stopped, I noticed this remarkable fact, that there never was a deficiency in the appropriation, and never was any surplus. They made clean work of it all the time.

I was not entirely accurate in my statement as to the origin of these appropriations or as to the date when they commenced. I stated before that they commenced in 1837. They did commence in 1837, because that year Congress suspended the collection of the twenty cents per month from the sailors, and made an appropriation of $150,000 in lieu of it. It suspended that collection for only one year; and made an appropriation of $150,000 for one year. The next year the twenty cents were collected and no appropriation was made by Congress, and none was asked for; and none was asked for in 1839, and none was made, and none was asked in 1840, nor in 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, or 1845, but in 1846—the Senator from Maine can tell me whether that was a year of remarkable depression in the commercial marine—in 1846, while the tax was being collected from the sailors, there was an appropriation of $25,000 to supply deficiencies in the fund for sick and disabled seamen. The Senator from Maryland was mistaken in supposing that we had made this appropriation every year since 1815. I cannot find a syllable of an appropriation until 1846, except the one that was made in 1837, and that was made in lieu of the tax which had theretofore and has been since that time collected off the seamen.

Mr. JOHNSON. What I intended to say was that appropriations had been made where ever found necessary. Perhaps there was not a deficit before the time mentioned; but the moment the deficit appeared we made an appropriation to meet it.

Mr. HOWE. My impression is that they made the appropriation a good while before the deficit appeared. In 1847 there was an appropriation of $12,000 for this same purpose. In 1848 there was an appropriation of $12,000 for this purpose. In 1849 there was an appropriation of $15,000 for this purpose. In 1850 you have an appropriation of $200,000. What was that for? You had been building hospitals from 1837 up to this time in all places where you wanted a town and had not any, and places where you wanted a commerce but had not any, and you had taken no steps to build hospitals where you had a commerce or where you had a town except in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; I understand they have a hospital at Chelsea. In 1850, I say, you appropriated $200,000. That was "for a deficiency in the fund to support sick and disabled seamen and for furnishing hospitals at Paducah, Chicago, Natchez, Napoleon, and St. Louis." The appropriation was asked to furnish these five hospitals and to supply deficiencies in the fund to support seamen; they asked $200,000 and got it, and having got a large sum once to supply this deficiency in 1851 they came here and asked for the same identical sum to supply deficiencies alone, $200,000, and the appropriation was made. In 1852 they asked for $100,000 to supply deficiencies, and that was made. In 1853, by some carelessness somewhere that I have never heard an explanation of, or else because it was a year of remarkable activity and prosperity in the commercial marine, there was no appropriation asked for and none made. One would have supposed that the appropriation next year should have been enormous, in 1854. I think it was enormous; but it was not more than it was in 1851; it was just $200,000. No deficiency asked for though there was no appropriation made the year before; but they took their regular $200,000, and let by-gones be by-gones. In 1855 they went up to $250,000. In 1857 they dropped down to $150,000.

Mr. SUMNER. Was there nothing in 1856?

Mr. HOWE. In 1856 it was $150,000; in 1857 it was $150,000; in 1858 it was $150,000; in 1859 it was $125,000; in 1860 it was $175,000; in 1861 it was 200,000; in 1862 it was $200,000; in 1863 it was $100,000; in 1864 and 1865 nothing either year.

I asked for an explanation why it was that these seamen had been taken care of from the commencement of our merchant service up to 1846 without any appropriations from the Treasury, except in one year, and the Senator from Maine answers that it is because some years the merchant marine is very prosperous; in others it is unprosperous. He does not define what he means by that. If it is prosperous its prosperity is marked by some evidences. If it is prosperous, I suppose, more seamen are employed in that service; and if there are more seamen employed, they contribute a larger fund, because there are twenty cents every month taken from every sailor. It is impossible, therefore, for me to see how the prosperity or adversity of this branch of service can influence the sufficiency or insufficiency of that fund.

It is admitted that great abuses have heretofore obtained in the disposition of this fund; but it is suggested that those abuses will all be corrected because the Senate has agreed to a bill, and it is predicted the House will agree to a bill, which will do what? Which will provide for the appointment of a superintendent of marine hospitals. We have had a superintendent of marine hospitals ever since we have had a hospital at all. It will be vesting the same jurisdiction in another officer; that is all. If you know that he will be a more vigilant or a more capable officer than the one who has had this superintendency from the beginning, some of the abuses will be corrected; but I should like to be informed what the evidence is, what the assurance is that he will be either more capable or more honest? The trouble with the past expenditure is, as it will be with the future expenditure, that it is a fund appropriated without any adequate provision made directing the disposition of it, or without any adequate accountability for the manner in which it is appropriated.

I find that at some of these hospitals, a very few of them, and those far from being the most important, there are physicians and matrons and stewards employed. I had a book here containing a list of them. Somebody has appropriated it. I think not more than a dozen of those hospitals have physicians appointed to take charge of the seamen. One of those hospitals is that at Galena. The Secretary of the Treasury, or the collector, or somebody who assumes to direct the disposal of the money, pays a physician at the hospital in Galena $600 a year to take care of the sick at that hospital. The Secretary of the Treasury reports that there was one sick seaman admitted to that hospital last year; just one. I think the physician got more than he earned. That is only an instance, only an item in the disposition of this fund; and yet I suppose the Senate will believe that if you do not make this appropriation right along that physician and the others will lose their salaries, and, losing their salaries, that seaman or his first cousin who may stop at Galena the next year will not be taken care of.

Sir, what is the justification for this? The Senator from Maine says that it is of national importance that we should have a commerce. I suppose it is if it is a commerce that will take care of itself, but I do not think it is for the national interest to beggar the Government in order to maintain a commerce. A commerce which will not sustain itself I do not think is good property; I am disposed to assign my interest in it right off. I think we have a commerce that will sustain itself.

It is said that these sailors are thriftless, irresponsible; that they will not take care of themselves. Sir, they will never take care of themselves, nor will any class of people take care of themselves as long as you take care of them. Tell them that they must stand up and go alone and take care of themselves, and they will do it. They are not thriftless men, they are capable men; and put them upon their individual responsibility, and they will meet that responsibility like other men. I stand here and repudiate the whole idea that there is any necessity of dandling these sailors and seamen in the lap of the nation. They are as capable of taking care of themselves as other laboring men are, and they are as willing to do it, and they have done it. I am not the man so credulous as to believe that of the thousands you have appropriated to support sick and disabled seamen they have ever been benefited or bettered in their condition to the amount of ten cents on the dollar of what you have appropriated. They were taken care of for almost half a century, I tell you, out of their own pockets, out of the money they provided themselves, and they not only provided the money themselves to take care of themselves, but, as I have already told you, the fund accumulated so that you abstracted from it $15,000 to build a hospital at Chelsea, and you abstracted from it $50,000 to constitute a fund to take care of seamen employed in the Navy of the United States. It is idle to tell me that they cannot take care of themselves when they did it for fifty years and furnished a fund out of which the nation stole $50,000.

I do not believe that any interest of humanity is to be subserved by making this appropriation, nor that any interest of humanity is to suffer if we refuse to make the appropriation. The reason why we make it this year—I suppose it is to be made—is because it was made last year; for you have seen by the registry I have given you here that when you once find a pretext for putting an appropriation on the statute-book, it is idle to look for pretext to take it off. That cannot be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It strikes me that the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin is very singular. He says he believes these men can take care of themselves as well as any other men, because they have done it. How have they done it? They have done it because Congress by its legislation compelled them to do it; that is to say, took the means to do it out of their own money, did not suffer their money to go into their own hands entirely, but took possession of and retained a portion of it for their benefit, going upon the idea which all nations have recognized with regard to this class of men, that they are perfectly incapable of taking care of themselves, because from the nature of their pursuit they are so improvident and careless. Everybody knows that as a general rule a sailor spends all he has made in three days after he gets ashore, and gets in debt to the keeper of the lodging-house where he stays, and is obliged to ship again, no matter how much money he may have had when he landed. All commercial nations have found it absolutely necessary to make provision for taking care of this class of men. Has Congress legislated to take care of those who get sick and disabled in agricultural pursuits? No. Why? Because they can take care of themselves. Their habits of life are different. They are naturally thrifty; they are among friends; they have people who are interested in them. They are a different class of men altogether. They live in communities steadily; they have homes; they are surrounded by all the good influences of the communities in which they live. But what is a sailor? He has no home except on board his vessel; he knocks about all over the world at foreign ports, and from his habits of life is necessarily incapable of taking care of himself. We provide for sick and disabled soldiers. We give them pensions and we furnish hospitals for them. We furnish hospitals for the sick and disabled seamen of the Navy. We take the money from the sailor in the commercial marine, and this is simply an appropriation to supply the deficiency of that fund by providing for the sick and disabled seamen.

The Senator argues that this fund has been wasted, and he points to the hospitals that have been built, and to the fact that the fund was reduced by building half a dozen hospitals up and down the Mississippi river. Who did that? Did the sailors do it? No. Did they ask for it? No. Individuals representing districts asked for it, and Congress did it. Who robbed the fund? Who reduced it? Who brought about the necessity for making this appropriation to take care of sick and disabled seamen, because the fund furnished by their wages is not large enough? Congress by interfering with the fund and devoting it to these purposes.

Mr. HOWE. Let me inform the Senator that Congress never took any of this fund except $50,000 to constitute a naval fund.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Was nothing taken out for the purpose of building marine hospitals? Did not the Senator just now argue that the fund was reduced for that very reason?

Mr. HOWE. In the first half century $15,000 was taken to build a hospital at Chelsea.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Did not the Senator in his last remarks point to those hospitals that had been built at particular places and comment upon the fact that this money was appropriated for the purpose of building hospitals?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir; that has come out of the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well, then, that argument fails.

Mr. HOWE. I did not make it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understood the Senator to make it. If that be not the fact, then it turns out that this fund was insufficient for the support of the sailors, and hence an appropriation was made from the Treasury for building those hospitals. Then the Senator's argument fails at each end. If an appropriation was found necessary, it was because enough was not taken from the wages of the sailors to answer the purpose of providing for sick and disabled seamen. That may have arisen from several causes. I suggested that it might come from the fact that commerce was not so prosperous in one year as in another. It might also arise from the fact that a great deal more money was expended on account of a greater degree of sickness in one year than another. Or it may be perhaps that the hospital system is more expensive. Undoubtedly it is where you have a case like that at Galena; and where you have such a case it would undoubtedly be better to provide by the contract system for having the sailors taken care of; but the objection found to the contract system has been this: where you have a contract and the sailors are taken care of at so much a week, it is likely that but very few people can be found who will take care of sailors, and those who do are likely to be a class of people who want to make as much money out of them as they can; and the result is that the sailor is neglected or abused and does not get that which is sufficient for him in the way of food or medicine or care. For that reason in large places where there are likely to be many sick sailors hospitals are built to take care of them. They may in some places cost more than they ought, and the fund may have been reduced in that way.

That is a natural consequence, perhaps, but that is nothing against the system, if the system is founded upon general principles applicable to commerce. If the Senator can find any way to compel merchants who own vessels to take care of sick and disabled seamen after they are discharged, that will be one thing; but there would be no more justice in doing that than there would be in passing a law to compel every farmer to take care of a sick or disabled servant or laborer in his employ; and you do not do that. These men, as I said before, the moment they finish a voyage are discharged; they are thrown on the world; and if they are sick or disabled there is nobody to take care of them. If they are able seamen, they ship again. This provision is a matter that arises from the necessity of the case and from the nature of the business. It is not to support commerce, but it is a matter that arises from commerce, and commerce itself is a necessity to every great people and needs encouragement, and every great people does encourage it in every proper way, not by appropriating money, but by passing laws such as are best calculated to effect the purpose. I really hope that we shall not set the example to the civilized people of the world of being the only commercial nation on the face of the earth that will do nothing for the support of sick and disabled seamen who so much need it.

Mr. HOWE. I only want to add a word. I should like to find some common ground on which the Senator from Maine and myself could stand. I was very much inclined to insist on the idea that these seamen could take care of themselves; but the Senator insists that they cannot and will not. Conceding that he knows more about them than I do, let it be admitted, for the purpose of this argument, that they will not, yet the fact remains that up to 1846 the Government did take care of them by means of moneys collected from their wages. The Senator assumes that that fund proved insufficient. I have not seen the evidence of it, and I think there is evidence to the contrary on the statute-book. But suppose it is not sufficient, is not the true remedy to raise it to twenty-five cents a month or thirty cents or forty cents or fifty, or whatever is necessary to do the business, for the Senator asserts that whatever is not collected from them they spend in a thriftless and idle and dissipated way. Then, instead of appropriating money that hard labor has earned and put into the Treasury, let us take it out of moneys which otherwise, according to his theory and his argument would be expended in dissipation, and without any profit or good to the seamen. I do not think that is necessary. I do not think humanity calls for this appropriation in that point of view. We make it, not in the interests of humanity, not in the interests of necessity, but in the interests of dissipation and thriftlessness.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Since the debate sprung up I have been looking at the hospital returns, and I find for the year 1866 that there were one hundred and sixteen places where funds were collected off the sailors and as many places where they were disbursed. There were eighty places where they were disbursed to sailors in private modes; and there were thirty-six hospitals where sailors were cared for. Upon the rough estimate I have been able to make while the debate has been going on, I find in round numbers $300,000 expended for the year 1866 for these purposes, for the support of the hospitals and for the support of sailors according to private modes. Then I find in round numbers about one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars collected from the sailors by the twenty cents a month. That would leave a deficiency of about one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars for that year. The year 1867, which is the last, I think, does not differ materially, although there are not as many hospitals. Some of the hospitals have been sold. I believe there are twenty-six now, and of course there are more persons supported in private modes. I have not added the figures; but glancing at them I should say that the sum collected and disbursed perhaps was just about the same.

My own recollection on the subject when before the committee on the exhibit presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, was that this thing from small beginnings and from prudent economy had grown up to be somewhat improvident, somewhat largely extended and unthrifty, and that there were extravagant and needless and wasteful expenditure, and that it needed a remedy. Whether the remedy is the one proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin and which the committee propose is for the Senate to consider. I do not believe that the expenditures to the extent that they have been made for the last twenty years in the erection of marine hospitals, a great many of which have been sold as worthless in the last two or three years, should be continued in that way.

I should hope that the reform which has been spoken of by the Senator from Michigan, and which he contemplates will take place under the supervision of the new superintendent who is provided by an act which has passed the Senate, will be all that he expects. Whether it will be or not of course experience alone can test. I am satisfied, however, in any view of it, if Senators think the system ought to prevail and ought to be supported and that this deficiency ought to be provided for and the old policy continued, $150,000 is enough; and if the new board of supervision understand that Congress is looking into this subject and the appropriation should be reduced so as to require them to understand it, I believe it would be both salutary to the service and to the health of the sailors and everybody connected with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the clause as amended.

The amendment was rejected—ayes seven, noes not counted.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line sixty-seven, to insert:

Provided, That the building shall be completed without any further appropriation by the Government.

So as to make the clause read:

Toward rebuilding the United States military asylum for disabled soldiers at Fogg, near Augusta, Maine, destroyed by accidental fire, $25,000: Pro- vided, That the building shall be completed without any further appropriation by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seventy-five, to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to increase the appropriation "for the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, and excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy and petty officers and men of the Navy employed in the work," from $200,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seventy-eight, to strike out "sixty" and insert "one hundred and thirty;" so as to increase from $60,000 to $130,000 the appropriation "for continuing the survey of the western coast of the United States, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines seventy-nine to eighty-four, in the following words:

For continuing the survey of the South Florida reefs, shoals, keys, and coast, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, and excluding pay and emoluments of the officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed in the work, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and seventeen, to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred and eight," so as to increase from $150,000 to $208,000 the appropriation "for the necessary repairs and incidental expenses, improving, and refitting light-houses and buildings connected therewith."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and twenty-three, to strike out "forty-three" before "keepers," in the following clause:

For salaries of forty-three keepers of light vessels, $22,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following clause in lines one hundred and seventy-four and one hundred and seventy-five:

For a first order light-house at Point Ano Nuevo, California, or vicinity, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following clause as lines one hundred and seventy-nine and one hundred and eighty:

For two buoy and light-house tenders for service on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and eighty-three to strike out "four," and insert "one;" so as to reduce from $4,000 to $1,000 the appropriation "for enabling the light-house board to experiment with new illuminating apparatus and fog-signals, in addition to former appropriations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to amend the following clause at the close of the appropriations for the revenue-cutter service:

Provided, That the six steam revenue-cutters stationed upon the northern and northwestern lakes and their tributaries shall be laid up, and that no more of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid on their account than so much as may be necessary for their safe and proper care and keeping; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to lay up and withdraw from commission every revenue-cutter off the Atlantic coast, bays, gulfs, and so forth, not actually required and needed for constant service.

So as to make it read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to lay up and withdraw from commission the six steam revenue-cutters stationed upon the northern and northwestern lakes and their tributaries, and every revenue-cutter off the Atlantic coast, bays, gulfs, not actually required and needed for constant service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two hundred and twenty-five, to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the appropriation "for the construction of a custom-house at Portland, Maine, $100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two hundred and twenty-eight, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to increase from $25,000 to $50,000 the appropriation "for the construction of a building, to be used as custom-house and post office at St. Paul, Minnesota."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two hundred and thirty-five, to increase the appropriation for the construction of appraisers' stores at Philadelphia from $25,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line two hundred and forty-six, to insert the following:

For completion of the extension and repairs of the custom-house at Bangor, Maine, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line two hundred and fifty, to insert:

For the completion of the custom-house and post office building at Ogdensburg, New York, $30,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty" and inserting "forty." It should be $40,000 to cover the expense. It is authorized by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was to insert after line two hundred and fifty-six the following:

For heating apparatus for custom-houses and other public buildings, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line two hundred and fifty-eight, to insert:

For vaults and safes for depositaries, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line two hundred and sixty-nine, to insert:

For completion of the branch mint building at Carson City, Nevada, fencing the grounds, and for machinery, fixtures, and apparatus, and for putting up the same, $150,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have some explanation of that amendment. Has there been any money whatever expended for the erection of buildings there?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; $75,000 last year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I thought it had been decided not to go on with the erection of mints in that region, but to establish assay offices.

Mr. STEWART. The Secretary has finally concluded to carry out the law authorizing it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I had the impression that $75,000 were to be appropriated for the purpose of building an assay office.

Mr. STEWART. There was no appropriation made.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, there was last year.

Mr. STEWART. But it was not used for that purpose. I do not think there was any appropriation last year for an assay office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I had that impression. I only wanted to have some explanation of the amendment, because I know I was decidedly of the opinion that it was very unwise to provide for any more mints, and that all we needed there was an assay office.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think an assay office would be of any use.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is all they have in Oregon or Idaho, where I think they need a mint more than in Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator mean to say there is more bullion produced in Idaho than Nevada?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir, in Idaho or Montana; and certainly in Oregon.

Mr. STEWART. Oregon, Idaho, and Montana together do not produce as much bullion as Nevada.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator is very much mistaken about that.

Mr. STEWART. Nevada produces $20,000,000; Idaho, $6,000,000; Montana, $12,000,000. I do not exactly recollect how much Oregon produces; but I think Nevada really produces more than all of them put together.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see the necessity of having so many mints. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint have recommended that they have in these several places merely assay offices. They answer all the purposes, so far as the people are concerned; while the establishment of large mints in these several States increases the expense very much.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the recommendation of the committee in this case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there an estimate for this?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir. There was an appropriation last year of $100,000; I thought it was $75,000; and it has been expended. I have here an account of it.

Mr. STEWART. I now have the estimate of J. Ross Browne of the amount of bullion produced in these States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I concede the correctness of what the Senator says on that point.

Mr. STEWART. It is $20,000,000 for Nevada, $12,000,000 for Montana, $6,000,000 for Idaho, $1,000,000 for Washington, $2,000,000 for Oregon, $2,500,000 for Colorado, $500,000 in New Mexico, and $500,000 in Arizona.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is that the actual yield?

Mr. STEWART. That is estimated to be the actual yield.

Mr. CONKLING. How much for Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. Twenty million dollars; and I will state that in regard to Nevada they can give a more accurate estimate than of the other States and Territories, from the fact that they can take the figures of the shipments to San Francisco by express. There is no guessing about this $20,000,000. California is put down at $25,000,000; but probably some of that comes from the States that do business there. I think Nevada produces as much as any State.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know the facts. If the Government is committed to the policy of establishing a mint at this place, of course I have nothing to say.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think you will find the Government is thoroughly committed to it, and they have proceeded on that idea and expended $100,000. I hold the estimates in my hand. I have here the estimate of the supervising architect of the Treasury Department, who estimates the total cost at $163,302 08, and recommends an appropriation of $75,000. I have also an estimate of $100,000 from Mr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint, for the necessary machinery and apparatus. That is included in the estimate of the total cost. So that what was really asked for was $175,000; but I notice in this estimate in round numbers of $100,000. It is said that possibly may be a little high, and so the committee concluded to put it at $150,000, $25,000 less than was asked for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it has been decided to have a mint there, I have nothing to say.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; that is settled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and eighteen, to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to increase the appropriation "for continuing the work on the north front of the Patent Office building, and for improving G street from Seventh to Ninth streets," from ten to fifteen thousand dollars. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 17, line three hundred and eighty-four, to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveying the public lands in California, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three hundred and eighty-eight, after the clause appropriating $25,000 for surveying the public lands in Oregon to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That out of this appropriation the Commissioner of the General Land Office may pay a sum not exceeding $1,000 for surveys of last year.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have that explained. I suppose there is some explanation of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No explanation except that they exceeded the money appropriated last year.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands recommended and sent to the Committee on Appropriations an addition to the sum appropriated for surveys in Oregon and Nevada; but I do not know what disposition the committee made of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think the committee took any action upon it. This is simply to meet an over expenditure of last year for this purpose.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill down to the following clause:

For surveying the public lands in Montana Territory, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $15,000.

Mr. MORTON. Before that clause is passed I want to call the attention of the committee to an amendment that I propose to it. It is to strike out in line four hundred and three "fifteen" and to insert "twenty-five." I am satisfied from what I know about the public surveys going on in Montana Territory that $15,000 is too small an appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator be kind enough to call attention to that after the reading of the bill and the amendments of the committee are gone through with?

Mr. MORTON. Very well, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and seven, to strike out "fifteen" and to insert "five;" so as to reduce the appropriation "for surveying the public lands in Utah Territory, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines," from $15,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line four hundred and twenty-three, to strike out the following clause:

For improvement and care of reservation No. 2 and La Fayette square, $2,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be stricken out. It is a very small sum appropriated for a necessary object. The reservation No. 2 is the Smithsonian grounds. La Fayette square is the large square in front of the President's House. There is a certain sum necessary every year in the way of improvement in all these public squares; and for the care of them and keeping them in order. It is a very small sum that is appropriated, and it is a very large reduction from what was asked for, and I hope it will be appropriated. I consulted the Superintendent of the Public Grounds, and he thinks it is absolutely necessary. He must have something for those purposes. They are public squares belonging to the Government, and the Government should take care of them. The sum appropriated here is very small. Something is necessary to be done to keep them in order, to take care of the walks, remove weeds, &c., and $2,000 for those two large squares strikes me as little as can possibly be got along with. I should like to have some reason for striking out the appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Committee on Appropriations had no special information on the subject; but we thought we would take this course to bring it to the attention of the proper committee of the Senate. It will be seen that there are in this bill four distinct items for taking care of reservations. In the first place, here is an appropriation "for improvement and care of reservation No. 2 and La Fayette square." Then follows an appropriation "for care and improvement of grounds south of the President's House." On the next page is an appropriation "for care of reservations on New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Maryland avenues;" and then there is another appropriation "for care of the Circle." Besides these, we pay for six watchmen to take care of the Smithsonian grounds, and in addition we pay $208,000 a year to police the District, besides having special policemen at every Department and every bureau, at the Capitol, and elsewhere.

It seemed to the committee that having appropriated so much in a general way for policing the city, and then for special policemen, that is, for watchmen in all the Departments and bureaus, these reservations could be placed under the general care, to say the least of it, of the general police. In addition to that, I would say that we pay for some twenty-five laborers who have the care and improvement of these public grounds. It seemed to the Committee on Appropriations, considering this general and particular and special force, in all directions, that there might be no necessity, perhaps, wherever you have a reservation, big or little, of posting a man there to watch it; for that is what it comes to.

I will say to my colleague also, that if these reservations are appropriated for, there is one other that should be added, Franklin square, a recent square nicely fitted up, and which was appropriated for last year. If that is inserted, then it will be seen that for almost every square, in addition to this general force to which I have alluded, there are these special watchmen, whose whole duty, as I understand it, is simply to care, look on, and see that no mischief or injury is done. The idea of the committee was that that duty might well enough be performed by the general police force of the city. My colleague will know best about that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My colleague will perceive, if he reflects for a moment, that there are two kinds of care. The general police of the city go through these grounds, I suppose, as well as other parts of the city. Then the watchmen are merely to see that persons do not trespass, whether by day or by night, and to take disorderly persons, who are disposed to injure these grounds, into custody. The "care" spoken of in this appropriation is merely to keep the grounds in order. There must be somebody to do it; to take up decayed shrubs and trees, and replace them with new ones, to attend to the general ornamentation of the grounds, the keeping of the walks in order, &c. That must be in charge of some individual to do it. These $2,000 comprise the pay to the individual employed—I suppose there is one in each—and the additional sum is to be appropriated for the improvement of the grounds themselves. General Michler, who has the superintendence, tells me that about six hundred dollars are paid to the individual, and the rest is spent in ornamentation, and one thing and another of that kind. We have these public grounds in the city of Washington; they belong to us; we have always taken care of them, and made the expenditures for them, and must continue to do so. The sum here appropriated is very much less than what was asked for, and I think is the smallest possible sum that could be appropriated for the service. I think it is necessary. It will not do to leave these squares with the trees, shrubs, and so many things to be taken care of, to take care of themselves. I think the appropriations in this bill are reduced already to their minimum. If we strike out these appropriations altogether the Government will lose very much more than these small sums appropriated for this purpose. We must do just as a private person would if he was the owner of one of these reservations, if it was around about his house. We must have some individual to keep the walks in order, and see what is necessary to be done with reference to the trees, shrubs, &c., that are there. I hope the clause will not be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment, and declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know that I ought to divide the Senate on a matter so small as this. I have brought it to the attention of the Senate, and I do not think I ought to detain the Senate about it. But take the first of these items: "for improvement and care of reservation No. 2 and La Fayette square, $2,000." They are entirely fenced in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. La Fayette square is the large square in front of the President's House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I know where it is; but it is all fenced in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is very true; but it will not take care of itself. Anybody can go there at any hour he pleases.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But there are no improvements suggested, and none going on there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the walks take care of themselves?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does it need $2,000 to hire some gentleman to sit there and watch it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. But it is for two squares. The Smithsonian grounds are very large.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is "for improvement and care of reservation No. 2."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the Smithsonian grounds.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have six watchmen for that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You have got watchmen; but nobody to take care of the grounds.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Six watchmen ought to do it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But the watchmen there do not work upon the grounds. They do not do anything in reference to taking care of the walks or taking care of the shrubs or trees.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to suggest that you have a distinct appropriation to keep in repair the public grounds.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not these.

Mr. HOWE. All the public grounds.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Where?

Mr. HOWE. There is a distinct provision for that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. "For repairs and improvement of public buildings and grounds, heretofore under the direction of the Commissioner on Public Buildings."

Mr. FESSENDEN. "To wit;" and then the bill goes on to specify. There is no general appropriation at all. This would leave them all to take care of themselves.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the proposition which the Committee on Appropriations desired the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to consider was whether it was not practicable to dispense with these items, which seemed to be put in to accumulate expenditures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask for a division on that question. There are several of these items, and the Committee on Appropriations have struck them all out.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 18, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senate to divide again. There is a quorum present.

The question being again put, there were, on a division—ayes 20, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 18, after line four hundred and twenty-five, to strike out the following clause:

For care and improvement of grounds south of the President's House, $1,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We may as well strike them all out now, as we have stricken out the other.

The question being put on the amendment, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I shall have to call the yeas and nays unless Senators vote one way or the other. I ask the Senate to divide again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the chairman of the committee explain what this amendment is? I do not understand it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The amendment is to strike out an appropriation of $1,000 for the care and improvement of the grounds south of the President's House.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is, taking care of the walks, trees, shrubs, &c.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir. I stated the case fully a few moments ago. It is one of a class of items here; and having struck out the first one, I supposed that that was the judgment of the Senate, and that they would proceed to strike out the others. They either ought to do that, or else reverse their judgment on the other amendment. There is just as much propriety in one of them as the other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like the gentlemen on this side of the Chamber to understand this question. The clause we struck out was a small appropriation of $2,000 for taking care of and gradually improving La Fayette square, a large square in front of the President's House, where there are many valuable shrubs, trees, &c.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I will move to reconsider the vote by which that clause was stricken out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As soon as I have explained it a little further I will do so. It also provided for reservation No 2, which is the Smithsonian grounds, which belong to the Government. The bill appropriated simply for a person or two persons to take care of them and keep the walks clean, trim the trees, look after them, and keep them in order, the sum of $2,000, a very small appropriation, indeed.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator explain for what the twenty-one laborers and a foreman are employed in the public grounds, for which we appropriated $19,296 in the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are employed as laborers under General Michler in the public grounds. There are public grounds about this building where they are continually employed, and other public grounds.

Mr. HOWE. Are they kept on one part of the public grounds? Are they not employed on both these reservations?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They may be at some portions of the time, but I am instructed by the commissioner who has charge of them that he needs one man something above an ordinary common laborer, who has some judgment about grounds, and the improvement and care of the grounds that are thus laid out, to keep them in order. He needs a skilled gardener in each of them continually to look after them. All that is appropriated for that is $1,000 for each reservation. Then the next clause appropriates $1,000 for the grounds in front of the President's house, on the lower side immediately surrounding his house. Another person is needed there. In regard to these three I have no doubt whatever of their necessity. On the next page of the bill you will see there is an appropriation "for care of reservations on New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Maryland avenues, $3,000." There are four reservations. They are surrounded by common wooden fences. The superintendent says he needs somebody there continually to look after those, and $3,000 are appropriated for the four, and those he wishes to improve as the others have been improved, to set out trees on them, &c. He says that unless you have somebody there to watch them the fences are torn away and burnt; the trees are cut down; and he wants to improve them. We all want that done. They are our public grounds, and gradually we ought to spend some small sum for the sake of beautifying them, and not leave them as dirty, filthy places for all sorts of stuff to be piled up in, to be made an eyesore rather than a place of beauty. He remarked to me that $3,000 was as small a sum as he thought he could get along with for the purpose of taking care of these four reservations and improving them gradually. I think they ought to be improved. I think he is right about that. I think any other idea is a nigardly and mean one. That is my notion about it, although I do not feel particularly interested in this matter in this city.

Then there is an appropriation for the care of the Circle, where the statue of Washington is. He has got there a one-armed or a one-legged soldier, to whom he gives $600 a year to look after it, and for the $400 additional there is some under-draining to be done; so that he needs $1,000 for the next year for the Circle. That is the exposition of it, and understanding it the Senate, of course, will do what they think best.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Maine that if the Superintendent of Public Property, or whatever he is, is going to improve these four reservations at $3,000, it is about as little as it could be done on; but I should like to know if the chairman of the Committee on Public Grounds really means to tell the Senate that he wants $3,000 in order to execute improvements on those reservations!

Mr. FESSENDEN. To execute improvements and to pay the men employed.

Mr. HOWE. Three thousand dollars to be appropriated by the nation to fix up these four public squares!

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator is speaking of its being a very small sum. The commissioner's idea is not to do it all at once, but to do it gradually.

Mr. HOWE. To do it gradually! Doing it so gradually as that, you would never perceive that you were making any improvement at all, and so the nation would be a thousand years older than it is to-day, and you never would begin your improvements. Three thousand dollars is wanted to pay men to sit there on the walks, and to keep other folks out, I suppose, under pretense of preventing trespass, or something of that sort; it is not to make improvements.

If the superintendent will tell what improvements he wants to make on these reservations, what fences, what walks are to be made, what trees are to be set out; if he will tell what he wants to do, and with what sum he will do it, I dare say the Committee on Appropriations will agree to pay the money. But that is not what this appropriation is asked for. Why, sir, you have been appropriating $1,000 a year to take care of that circle ever since you were a child, I suppose. I have not looked back to see how long. But you want $1,000 this year. Why? Because $600 is to go to a one-armed soldier and $400 to do a little more draining. What was done with the $400 appropriated a year ago, and the $400 appropriated the year before that? Was there a little more draining done then?

Mr. President, these appropriations are made to take care of individuals. I have not much objection to it. I do not care much what becomes of the public moneys. I am pretty well satisfied that what you do not pay out in these dribblets you pile up into millions and give to some favorite; so that I have no particular objection to this. But I want you to dismiss the idea that you are going to get any public square benefited or beautified by this appropriation. It is not going to come. You have provided in another bill for a foreman and twenty-one laborers to take care of these grounds, to do the work which the superintendent wants done on them. It is in a proper place, and all the work that he wants done should have been appropriated for there, and all he said he wanted done was appropriated there. These appropriations are really to employ watchmen.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the Senator show where it has been done somewhere else.

Mr. HOWE. In the legislative appropriation bill which passed here a few days ago.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the Senator point it out.

Mr. HOWE. It is on page 18, commencing at the three hundred and eighth line.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator be kind enough to find it and point it out, instead of making a broad assertion?

Mr. HOWE. I am trying to point the Senator to it. I say it is on the thirteenth page, commencing with the three hundred and eighth line, and it reads as follows:

For compensation of a foreman, and twenty-one laborers employed in the public grounds, $19,296.

That is in the appropriations under the head of "public buildings and grounds." That is all he asked for that purpose then; and I say this money is asked for merely to employ men to watch the grounds which these men cultivate and improve; and it was the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations, that inasmuch as we paid an immense police force here to do the watching, they could watch the property of the United States as well as the property of individuals, and were under as much obligation to do it as we paid them for their services.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, my friend from Wisconsin has a wonderful faculty. He knows more about every subject than the men do who are specially employed to ascertain about it, and to do what is necessary. Now, he undertakes to tell General Michler that he has not recommended these things; that he does not need them; that he does not want them; that he has provided for them somewhere else; that he does not know anything about them; and that if he has an idea of stating to me, as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that he wants these sums for these specific purposes, it is all a mistake; he does not want them. Now, how does the Senator happen to be so knowing as to what General Michler wants, and what he does not want, directly in the face and eyes of what he says? These appropriations are recommended by him. Does he not understand his business? He devotes himself all the time to it. He is the Superintendent of the Public Grounds, and he says he wants so many men generally under him, ordinary laborers, and a superintendent of laborers. You see them employed about here in taking care of these grounds, and doing the work about here; and he says in addition to that he wants these particular men and particular sums for these particular purposes. Now, what right has the Senator to say he does not want them, or does not recommend them, to say the least of it, and that he does not know what he is about?

I do not pretend to know anything more about this matter than what I am told by the proper officer, who states not only in writing to the committee in making his recommendation in the first place, but states to me in addition, when I asked him for an explanation, just exactly what I have stated to the Senate; and yet the Senator from Wisconsin says it is a mistake; he does not know anything about it; he does not recommend it in fact; it is all a mistake. Where does the Senator get his information? That is all I want to know about it. If it is such an error, so be it. If Senators undertake to say that the Superintendent of Public Grounds meant to include all these items in that appropriation in the general appropriation bill for so many laborers and a foreman that is one thing. If they think that is enough without this, that is one thing, and Senators can act upon it; but to undertake to tell me that this is all a mistake, and that the Superintendent of Public Grounds does not know what he is saying, does not know what he means, I think is a little beyond the Senator's jurisdiction. We have a right to conclude that he does know what he means. I care nothing about this matter. If the Senate choose to say that these public grounds that have been improved and ornamented shall be left to take care of themselves, so be it. I never go there myself; so I do not care anything about it particularly; but I think it would be a very extraordinary thing to do.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, let the Senator from Maine manufacture the speech he wants to reply to, and he will make about as conclusive a reply as any man I ever heard in debate. But if you confine him to replying to a speech he listens to, he either makes a mistake in his reply or he makes terrible mistakes in his statement of the speech to which he is replying. So the first difference between the Senator from Maine and myself is upon a question of fact as to whether I have said any such thing as he has been replying to. I have not undertaken to say that the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds did not know what his business was. I have not assumed to know more than everybody else about this business. I do not think I do really, if you want to put me on the stand. I will tell you what advantage I really have over other folks. I tell nearer what I know than some do, and I do not undertake to say what I do not. I said of the Superintendent, not that he did not want this money—I think it likely he does—I said of the Superintendent not that he had not recommended these appropriations; I said he did not recommend them in that bill when he was called upon to recommend for the force he wanted to cultivate these public grounds. And I did say one thing more, which the Senator did not accuse me of saying, and that was that if you made these appropriations, you must dismiss the idea of having your grounds look any better next year than they do this year at this time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We want to keep them looking as well. That is the very thing.

Mr. HOWE. They will be kept looking as well, I suppose, by these twenty-one laborers; but "for improvement" is the term implied here; "gradual improvements," the Senator from Maine says, undertaking to interpret the Superintendent. Now, I say that the improvement which is made by these beggarly appropriations will be too gradual. If the Senator means to be understood that the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds is going to improve and beautify these squares with these appropriations, I think he cannot do it; but the Senator really does not say that that is what he proposes to do. If I say they are to pay merely watchmen, or to pay for men who are substituted for the police there, then the argument is: it is not for that, but for improvements. But if I say they cannot improve the grounds with these small appropriations, then the argument is that it is wanted to keep them up to the point they are now.

Mr. President, I have taken altogether too much time in discussing this matter. I really do not care anything about it. It does annoy me a little, in spite of all the experience I have had, to see these little sums of money thrown away. But as I have said before, they will do about as much good to individuals when they are paid to one-armed soldiers, or soldiers with two arms, or men with two arms who never saw the Army, as they will if they are left to accumulate in larger bills and then be thrown away in a bulk; so I am willing that the Senate, if they insist upon it, shall vote this appropriation, but I do insist that we shall not get any better looking grounds.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move to reconsider the vote striking out the appropriation "for improvement and care of reservation No. 2 and La Fayette square, $2,000."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All I desire to say is, that having called the attention of the Senate to this general subject, so to speak, embracing these several items, I have done my duty in regard to it. I suppose the Senate will follow its vote on the item, the reconsideration of which is now moved, and if the Senate please I will regard that as a test question. If the Senate is disposed to reconsider that amendment, then I will take it for granted, so far as I am concerned, as the sense of the Senate, that all these amendments proposed by the committee are not desirable.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNER. I think it will be difficult to get through with this bill to-night. I have already mentioned—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We are very nearly through now with the amendments of the committee. Let us have ten minutes more.

Mr. SUMNER. There will probably be amendments that will lead to discussion. There is occasion for an executive session. I hope, therefore, the Senator will not make any opposition if I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORTON. We can get through in twenty minutes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will withdraw his motion for ten minutes we can dispose of all the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; I am always accommodating.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The next amendment was after line four hundred and thirty-two, to strike out the following clause:

For care of reservations on New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Maryland avenues, $3,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was after line four hundred and forty-two, to strike out the following clause:

For care of the Circle, $1,000.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like an explanation of the chairman of the committee as to the necessity of this appropriation, "for the care of the Circle, $1,000?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The same necessity that obtains in the cases that have just been decided as to the care of these other reservations.

Mr. HOWARD. What necessity has there ever existed for any such appropriation as this?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is the reservation known as the Circle. There is precisely the same necessity for that, I suppose, that there is for the appropriations already made in regard to the others.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think that there is the same reason applicable to that, because it is a very small piece of land. The Superintendent stated to me that there was something necessary for the purpose of underdraining there, and there has been a man stationed there, as he said, a one-armed soldier, and he gave him $600, and he took care of the ground. It is a very small matter and I should not think it would require $1,000 to take care of it, or even $600. If it was in any town except Washington I suppose the mode of taking care of such a small piece of ground as that would be to employ some person living in the neighborhood to look after it and pay him fifty dollars a year or something like that; but here they employ a person to take charge of it. I should think myself that this underdraining and the care of it would not need more than $500. That is my impression. I think the same reason does not apply to that small Circle that applies to these other pieces of ground that I have spoken of.

Mr. HOWARD. Let me ask the Senator from Maine whether he recommends the retention of this appropriation; whether he dissents from or concurs in the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations with regard to this appropriation of $1,000 for the Circle?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think if we were to appropriate $400 it would be enough; but then you would have to dispense with the man who is employed there entirely, and not have a man making it his exclusive business. I think the appropriation might be cut down.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to strike out $1,000 and insert $400.

Mr. SUMNER. Say $500.

Mr. HOWARD. No; $400.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, striking out $1,000 and inserting $400.

Mr. HOWE. I am embarrassed just this much in voting on that motion: we have been voting down some amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations because the specific appropriations which we wished to strike out were recommended by the Superintendent of Public Works. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds said he did not know anything about them; but the Superintendent recommended them, and he must be understood to know what he wanted. The Senate took that view of it, and because the Superintendent asked for the appropriations they voted down the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, and voted the appropriations asked for by the Superintendent. Now, the Superintendent asks for this appropriation of $1,000. We have the same authority for voting this that we had for voting the others. But the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings "goes back" on the Superintendent on this question, and he tells us that $400 are enough in Washington, and fifty dollars would be enough anywhere else for this purpose. I believe the Senator from Maine, really, and I think I shall vote with him, although in doing so I must fly in the face and eyes of the principle just settled by the vote of the Senate on a solemn division. Still, I do not think the Senate will care anything about it; and so I guess I will vote for the measure.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senate will not adopt this amendment. The Senator from Maine says there is a one-legged soldier at this Circle, and therefore this proposition at least has one leg to stand upon, and that is one more leg than any of these other appropriations have, as I understand it. After investigating the subject, as we did in committee, we came to the conclusion, and I have seen nothing to change that conclusion, that there is an abundance of force provided for in the other bills to do all this service, and that what the Senate have now been attaching to the bill are so many excrescences, so much of surplus appropriations, which I believe might as well be flung into the Potomac or into the sea. Now, it seems this man has one leg, and $600 dollars go to him, and the other $400 is dispersed around this Circle. I understood the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] to say it was to be graded. It is about as large as a leather apron now, and I should think that more grading might perhaps be useful; but at any rate I go for the soldier, and particularly for his one leg, and I am against this clause being stricken out after what the Senate have done.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes nine, noes not counted.

The amendment of the committee was rejected.

The next amendment was, after line four hundred and fifty-five, to strike out the following clause:

For care, support, and medical treatment of sixty transient paupers, medical and surgical patients, in some proper medical institution in the city of Washington, under a contract to be formed with such institution, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to make one remark on that amendment. The committee recommend to strike out this clause, because there is a bill already in the House of Representatives providing for the charities of this District, and this belongs in that bill, and we struck it out for that reason.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Suppose that bill does not pass?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It was concluded it would pass, of course. It is a bill providing for the hospitals and institutions here. There will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. HARLAN. What is the objection to permitting it to stand in this bill as the House placed it in this bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What reason was there for dividing them? Why should we act on them by bits? The House departed from the usual course of putting these charities in this bill and thought it best to provide for them by a distinct bill. If that is to be the policy, of course they ought all to go together, I submit, and for that reason the committee thought the charities had better be considered together and not divided, inasmuch as the House had adopted that policy.

Mr. HARLAN. If there is no other reason, I think it wiser to permit this to stand, for if all these charities are put in one bill, and each item should receive some opposition, the bill itself may fail, and this is an item that ought not to be permitted to fail, as it seems to me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But I hardly presume the Senator supposes that this is more deserving than the hospital for the insane, the lunatic asylum, and a great many other objects which I presume will not fail. I do not understand that there is any controversy about this, but it ought to go with the others.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think this clause had better remain in this bill; it will be safer. There is no controversy about it, and there may be a controversy in regard to the other bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to inquire if this is not the appropriation which has been made for several years to the Providence hospital?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think this is the Carroll hospital. I am told it is the same thing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is it in any other bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; it is in no other bill. But the reason the committee did not choose to consider it in this bill, was that all these charities for this District are proposed to be put into a separate bill now before the House, and we thought if that was so, it was hardly worth while to consider them piecemeal.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think this had better stay in this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It should go into some bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONKLING and others. Let us finish the amendments to the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. We cannot finish them. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 18, nays 15.

PRINTING OF AMENDMENTS.

Mr. MORGAN. While the doors are being closed I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer some amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1100) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and for other purposes," which I ask to have printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FOWLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 581) to provide for the election of certain territorial officers by the people; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S.

No. 582) to incorporate the District of Columbia Concrete Stone Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 316) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m.

ARMY RULES AND ARTICLES

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 529) establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States.

The bill was read at length.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, was in article seven, line three, to strike out the word "and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a mere verbal amendment, and will be considered as made unless there be objection.

The next amendment was in line two, article thirty-seven, to strike out the word "powers" and insert "power."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This verbal amendment will also be made, unless there be objection.

The next amendment was in article forty-six, line eight, to strike out the word "delivering" and insert "delivery."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will also be considered as made without objection.

The next amendment was in article eighty-nine, line eleven, to strike out the word "the" and insert "a."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This verbal amendment will be made.

The next amendment was in the second section of the bill, after the word "articles" to strike out "of war;" so as to read, "that the rules and articles by which the armies of the United States have heretofore been governed," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In lines eight, nine, and ten, of article eight, I move to strike out the words "the provisions of an act establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States," and to insert the word "law." This is in the oath of the members of a court-martial, requiring them to try the matter before them and administer justice "according to law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In the third line of article twelve I move to strike out the word "common" before "laws;" so as to make it read:

In time of war or public danger military commissions may be constituted, and shall have jurisdiction over all offenses and offenders against the laws of war not cognizable by courts-martial.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In article seventeen, line fifteen, after the word "required" I move to insert "by the order constituting the court;" so as to provide in regard to courts of inquiry:

This court shall have the same power to summon witnesses as a court-martial, and to examine them on oath; but they shall not give their opinion on the merits of the case excepting they shall be thereto specially required by the order constituting the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. The word "excepting," in the clause last read, ought to be "unless."

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, their being no objection.

Mr. WILSON. In line four of article forty-two, after the word "of," I move to insert "or omission to perform;" so as to read:

Any officer who shall accept money or any other thing by way of bribe or gratification, on mustering any troops, or in signing the muster-rolls thereof, or in consideration of the performance of or omission to perform any other official duty, shall be cashiered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. After the word "foreign," in the fifth line of the forty-eighth section, I move to insert the words "or insurrection;" so as to read, "in time of war, civil or foreign, or insurrection."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In line six of article fifty-two I move to strike out the words "between the ages of sixteen and," and insert "under the age of." The object is not to have any enlistment in the Army of persons under eighteen years of age. Children sixteen years old ought not to be enlisted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In line eight of the same article I move to strike out "sixteen" and insert "eighteen," to conform to the amendment just made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In article sixty-two, line two, after the word "foreign," I move to insert "or insurrection."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In line five of article eighty-five, after the word "President," I move to insert "pursuant to law," so as to read, "which are declared by the President, pursuant to law, to be in a state of insurrection or rebellion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, omitted the insertion of the words "or insurrection" on the twenty-fifth page, in line four, of the sixty-eighth article. I think the words "or insurrection" should be inserted there, after the word "rebellion."

Mr. WILSON. The word "rebellion" is there, and I think that substantially amounts to the same thing. But the words may be put in if the Senator desires. They will not do any harm.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. POMEROY. On the last line of the twenty-sixth page, in the seventy-sixth article, the word "whatsoever" should be "whomsoever."

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is right as it is.

Mr. POMEROY. "Whomsoever" would be better; it refers to persons, not to things.

Mr. WILSON. The clause reads now:

If any officer or non-commissioned officer commanding a guard shall knowingly suffer any person whatsoever to go forth to fight a duel he shall be punished as a challenger.

I think that had better stand as it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is right.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator thinks it is right, I will make no objection.

Mr. WILSON. I offer as an amendment, to come in as a new article, after article one hundred and one:

Any officer in the military service who shall be convicted by court-martial of gambling, shall be cashiered; and any officer having in his possession or being accountable for public funds who shall be convicted by court-martial of gambling or betting, shall be cashiered.

Mr. JOHNSON. What does the honorable member mean by gambling? Does he mean that any officer who, in his mess, bets a quarter or half a dollar, or a dollar, on a game of whist, or any other game of cards, shall be cashiered? It would deprive officers of almost the only pleasure they have in time of peace.

[Laughter.] Besides, there are all sorts of bets. I understand that according to the amendment any officer who bets a dollar upon anything, is to be cashiered.

Mr. WILSON. No, sir; any officer who has the care of funds.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand that; but they all have the care of funds, more or less.

Mr. WILSON. No; it applies to paymasters and others intrusted with public funds, who shall gamble or bet, and be convicted by a court-martial.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then if he bets at all on anything he is to be dismissed.

Mr. WILSON. By all accounts gambling is a very disastrous thing in the Army. It is carried to a great extent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt it is bad out of the Army as well as in the Army; but "gambling" is a very comprehensive term. It may apply to the ordinary and common practice among officers of playing among themselves with small sums as stakes, or of betting upon a horse race, or betting upon a cock fight, which used to be common in the South, and I believe is now, to a certain extent.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. It is carefully drawn.

The amendment was read.

Mr. JOHNSON. The first part covers the second.

Mr. WILSON. No; the first part applies to an officer who has not the custody of public funds being convicted of gambling, and the second part relates to the case of an officer intrusted with the public funds being convicted of gambling or betting.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I understand; but what I mean to say is this: every officer who gambles according to the first part of the amendment is to be cashiered, and then the amendment provides that any officer intrusted with public funds who gambles shall be cashiered. He is just as much an officer, whether intrusted with public funds or not, and the first clause of the amendment embraces all officers, whether intrusted with public funds or not. I submit to the chairman of the Military Committee that, although it is very desirable to guard against gambling, in the criminal sense of that term, it would be very hard, by an amendment like this, to prohibit officers of the Army from betting among themselves, particularly in time of peace.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator think that paymasters and others intrusted with funds—

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not object to putting the prohibition upon the paymasters.

Mr. NYE. Why not simply say "paymasters?"

Mr. JOHNSON. If it applied only to paymasters it would be a different thing.

Mr. WILSON. I would consent to a modification that no officer intrusted with public funds shall bet or gamble.

Mr. JOHNSON. I shall not object to that.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that this section will not be amended as now suggested. As I understand the language, it says that any officer convicted by a court-martial of gambling shall be cashiered. A court-martial will not convict any man of betting in the ordinary acceptance of that term.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not?

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator asks why not. Because courts-martial are presumed to be and are composed of sensible men; and when the offense amounts to that degree of abuse that it will secure the attention of a court-martial and a conviction by a court-martial, the officer is unfit for the service. Gambling has been and is now to some extent, it certainly has been one of the greatest abuses of the Army. It has been a common habit at the western posts, and it constitutes one of the objections to entrance into the Army. The Senator from Connecticut, I understand, wishes to prepare a substitute, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. FERRY. I think this substitute will obviate the objections and cover the whole ground of both classes of officers, and will also sufficiently define the offense to avoid the objection of the Senator from Maryland:

Any officer in the military service of the United States who shall be convicted by court-martial of gambling for gain, shall be dismissed the service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is a man to do who bets half a dollar on a game of whist? Does he gamble for loss?

Mr. FERRY. I suppose he bets for fun.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the word "gambling" a little more accurately defined, so that officers may know precisely how far they may go. I think there is difficulty in leaving it without definition. I once heard a gentleman with whom I was riding say that he had not gambled any since he was eighteen years old; and as he was a gentleman with whom I became acquainted in this city, and whom a great many of us know, I was very much surprised, because he had the reputation of "playing high." The next day I happened to meet here in the Senate Chamber a gentleman who was very well acquainted with him, sitting not very far from me, and I remarked to him that I had heard this gentleman say so. Said he, "What, did he tell you he had not gambled since he was eighteen years old?" I said "Yes, he told me so distinctly." "Well," said he "he meant that he had not been into a gambling-house; and in that sense, I suppose what he said was true; but, as for playing cards, I bet fifty dollars a game playing whist with him every night." And yet he did not think he was a gambler.

Mr. NYE. He came out about even, probably.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now, for the benefit of the Army, I should like to have the offense defined, so that they may know what is gambling, and what is not. All playing of any game for money, risking money, is perhaps in one sense, wrong, because it is dangerous; but I presume there are very few officers in the Army who do not amuse themselves with different kinds of games and small stakes. So undefined is this provision if you pass it, that if one officer finds that another officer whom he does not like is playing cards and making a small wager, he may complain of him, file charges, and a court-martial may be bound to find him guilty, not knowing what "gambling" was within the meaning of the law, and thus create considerable difficulty. Although I should be very glad if any mode could be devised by which the danger and difficulty to which this article refers could be obviated, I think the provision proposed is altogether too general, and may lead to trouble in the Army. I think the definition should be somewhat more accurate than it is.

Mr. FERRY. In the substitute I think the expression "gambling for gain" by the application of plain common sense will distinguish the offense intended to be stopped from ordinary amusements of officers in camp; and any danger such as is suggested by the Senator from Maine is obviated by the language of the proposed substitute that the person charged must be convicted by a court-martial. An officer charged before a court-martial with "gambling for gain" I do not think could possibly be convicted under any circumstances which I can imagine, as courts-martial are constituted for the trial of officers, unless he were actually guilty of what all would agree was gambling so as to be pernicious in its example to his command. If such language as this will not reach the difficulty which now exists I do not know of any that will, and it is seriously true that the practice of gambling for gain is one exceedingly disastrous not only in its example to the command, but disastrous to the officers themselves. I have myself known paymasters that made it a habit when they came to pay off the troops, after having paid the officers to encourage gatherings for the purpose of gambling and win back from them half, three fourths, and frequently the whole of their pay. It does seem as if something ought to be done to reach this evil. It seems to me that when you leave to the common sense of a court-martial of his brother officers the decision of the question whether the thing was that pernicious gambling for gain which all would agree should be prevented in a well-ordered command, you do avoid any serious risk of the evil consequences of ill-disposed persons preferring frivolous charges against officers who had been merely indulging in a harmless amusement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. NYE. I do not understand exactly the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. If a man gambles at all he gambles for one of two purposes. He does not certainly intend to gamble to lose; therefore, if a man wagers anything he wagers it to gain. Suppose an officer should bet upon the result of an election; suppose an officer of the Army should bet that my friend here on my left [Mr. HENDRICKS] would be elected President—

Mr. FERRY. Betting is not in the substitute.

Mr. NYE. Betting has been held to be gambling by courts of the highest authority in the country, and I do not think a distinction can be drawn between gambling and betting. If the honorable Senator wants to define it so as to proscribe certain games that shall be prohibited, that will be very well. But I hardly believe that the Army would hold together unless they had some little amusements. Take a western post where the snow for four or five months in the year ranges from five to twenty feet in depth. Cut off from the world, all by themselves, they play cards. They have not funds enough to make it amount to gambling, probably, in the sense of the term that my friend from Massachusetts would wish to prohibit; but still they gamble. They have got, perhaps, $500 in cash, and it changes hands five hundred times during the winter. It is a sort of excitement they will have, and they have no other. I do not believe that that is what the Senator from Massachusetts means to prohibit.

I do not see what the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut would amount to exactly. "Gambling for gain!" Nobody gambles for anything else. I do not profess to be an expert in the business, [laughter;] and my friend, perhaps, is more expert in it than I am; and he can tell when he ever gambled and did not gamble for gain.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator is making an assumption not to be supposed.

Mr. NYE. The Senator seems to be so familiar with it that he is able to see a distinction between gambling for gain and gambling for loss. If you gamble at all you gamble to gain. There is no doubt about that. No man ever made a bet that did not bet to win if he could. I do not know why this rule should be directed and held against Army officers any more than against officers in civil life here as Senators. In all well-regulated communities they have rules and laws against gambling. They define certain kinds of games and declare them to be illegal, and say they shall not be practiced, and a military officer would fall within such rule the same as a civilian if he practiced them. But I do not believe that it will be possible to carry out this law.

In the next place, it is about as hard work to manage an Army or a Navy as it is a choir of country singers. All sorts of little petty jealousies are got up. Here is a little officer who wants to get another one's place, and he will say "he gambled at Fort Churchill, in Nevada; he bet four shillings; he held a better hand in cards than the Senator from Massachusetts." [Laughter.] Well, sir, it was done harmlessly, nobody injured, the public funds did not suffer. He sleeps on it a month or two until this lingering enmity is aroused, and then he has the officer court-martialed, and it costs the Government two or three or four hundred dollars to try him when he had bet a half dollar; the officer is cashiered, and the little rascal that has meddled with it is promoted as he knocks the one forward of him out of place. I know how easy these things are got up in the Army and in the Navy.

Mr. CONNESS. Have you ever been in the Army?

Mr. NYE. Yes, sir, I have been. Now, I hope the honorable Senator will give me the advantage of my experience. [Laughter.] I have never seen anything but what the honorable Senator knew more about than everybody else. [Laughter.] But I am glad there is one place I have been where he has not. [Laughter.] I know the enmity and the little cliques that are got up in the Army among officers. You never see them at a post in the West, a post on the frontier or anywhere, but what the lower officers are always quarreling with the higher. Adopt this provision, and they can get up little stories about gambling, and have courts-martial out in a snow drift, and the first thing a man knows he wakes up with his commission taken from him by some little fellow whose word you would not take under oath. I do not propose to submit honorable gentlemen in the Army to that liability to be injured. If the honorable Senator from Massachusetts wants to say that any paymaster of the Army that shall be found gambling at any game while he is acting in that capacity shall be cashiered I will vote for it.

Mr. POMEROY. And quartermasters.

Mr. NYE. Any person of that kind; but to say that every officer of the Army who bets half a dollar on a cock fight or half a dollar or $100 on a horse race shall be liable to be court-martialed is nonsense. It is establishing a rule for the Army that is established for no other class of society. I do not believe in singling out that class of men who are as honorable men as are to be found in other positions to be dealt with in that way. Therefore, sir, it was that I interposed in behalf of the officers of the Army that they shall not be subjected to the risk that will follow such a provision; and I hope as my friend near me [Mr. HENDRICKS] expects to be commander-in-chief of all the armies he will come to my aid on this important question.

Mr. WILSON. I have no practical knowledge of this matter. I never saw the inside of a gambling-house in my life, and never saw any gambling; but I remember that during all the years of the war the evils of gambling in the Army were manifest. Some officers to whom were intrusted the funds of the Government gambled, lost the money, and were ruined. Other officers in the Army not only gambled with their fellow-officers, but some of them even got so low as to gamble with the common soldiers, and many such persons were tried and dismissed the service during the war.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Under what law?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know.

Mr. FERRY. If it was gambling with a common soldier, I suppose they were tried for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

Mr. WILSON. It is a fact. I have it from generals in the Army, officers high in rank. This very article was written on the suggestion of a major general, an officer high in the Army.

Mr. NYE. He has probably lost.

Mr. WILSON. No, I think not. I do not know how much deference is to be paid to the opinions of chaplains, but I have received several letters during the present session and in past years from chaplains in the Army, saying that one of the most demoralizing things in the Army is gambling. I think, therefore, it would be wise in these new rules and articles to prohibit gambling. I supposed everybody understood what it meant. I am willing to take the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, with the definition he has there given, "gambling for gain." That amendment says nothing about betting. I think we ought, at any rate, to do as much as will let it be understood that we prohibit gambling. As these officers are to be tried by officers I take it that no man will be punished unless he deserves it.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know that my knowledge extends so far as described by the honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. NYE] when he was up. According to my own estimate it does not. I do not even pretend to know as much of this subject as the honorable Senator. I think it would be double assurance in me to do so. But, sir, I am not in favor of gambling. I believe it to be one of the most serious vices to which human nature is addicted. The officer who learns it in the Army is unfitted for civil life thereafter, if he should see fit to leave the Army, for the habit once formed is very rarely overcome in life. I think gambling is worse than drunkenness as a habit. I think men will do more evil and wrong who are infatuated with that passion than perhaps under any other to which men are addicted.

I do not care whether we have gentlemen among us who like whist-playing, or who certainly have a high estimation of it, judging from their participation in the debate; but gambling may be done by playing whist, although it is not generally, because it is a long game, and gamblers generally seek shorter games. They want to get at the stakes more readily. But a man who should seek to avoid the law and play whist, and bet fifty dollars on a game, would certainly be engaged in gambling, palpably so. All communities protect themselves against gambling by passing laws against it and treating it as a contraband practice, one against morals and good conduct and order. It is our duty especially to do so, I think, in regard to the Army and Navy. They are public servants. They give their lives to a profession; and the interests of a nation often hang upon the conduct of a comparatively few of them, and perhaps a single one. If they are naval officers, and they acquire the habit of gaming, and then go into civil life and engage in the commercial marine of the country, and carry their habits of gaming there, they are often at their game when their ships go upon the rocks and great injury is done to property and society. I believe that the common practice of gaming ought to be prohibited in the Army; and, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, the determination of what constitutes gambling must be left to the courts-martial. They will not certainly take cognizance of an ordinary game at cards, such as all persons, perhaps, or nearly all, certainly very many, engage in; but the habit of gambling, the proneness to bet, make wagers, should be stopped and prohibited, I think. I shall certainly vote for the amendment.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I by no means meant to say that the Senator from California knew more about gambling than I did, though I do not gamble. But ever since the world has been formed into society there have been laws and rules prohibiting gambling. There are laws prohibiting gambling in this city; and yet every officer in the city knows that there are gambling-houses here, and men gamble there almost for fabulous sums. My rule is not to pass laws that are not enforced and cannot be enforced, and I most especially object to leaving it to any board or court-martial to determine what gambling is. The effect, if that were done, would be that one board would construe a bet into gambling, however trifling; another board would say that it was not gambling; and the rule meted out to officers for the offense, if offense it be, would be as different as the different boards who sat and pronounced judgment. No, sir; if we are to make gambling a crime especially applicable to the Army, define with great care and precision what shall constitute gambling. Above all other things, sir, I would not leave it to any board of officers with the prejudice incident to nature and to their employment to determine what gambling was; but they should go to the letter of the law and bring their judgment to square with the law itself. No, sir; the theory that because officers are to sit upon officers there is no danger of wrong being done I do not assent to.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will allow me to suggest that courts-martial have to decide over and over again what is conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and what is conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline.

Mr. NYE. Certainly. Then why not leave it in that way, and say that the court-martial shall have power, as I understand the Senator from Connecticut to say they now have—

Mr. FERRY. Not at all; I was making a parallel.

Mr. NYE. But I understood the Senator to say that officers had been tried to his knowledge.

Mr. FERRY. For gambling with the common soldiers. I never knew an instance of officers being tried for gambling with each other.

Mr. NYE. I suppose they were convicted, if convicted at all, upon the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer, by indulging in too free intercourse with the soldiers over whom he had command.

Mr. FERRY. Conduct prejudicial to good order.

Mr. NYE. I can well see that that would be a good charge, and if I was sitting on a court-martial I think I would convict an officer who would do that. But, sir, that does not answer the objection, or if it does we need no further legislation on the subject. If already officers are allowed to take cognizance of the offense as punishable by court-martial we certainly need no further legislation. And I believe after all, with a full appreciation of the high sense of duty of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, that he will find that any enactment on the subject will be but waste paper. I know that officers of the Army are men of high sense of honor, and if they find a fellow-officer gambling with either officers or soldiers, in a manner that would affect the discipline or good order of the Army, they would try him of that offense and convict him. Now, I hope that that being the case, as is admitted by men who know far more about these things than I do, the legislation will stand where it is unless whatever is proposed is very clearly defined.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to hear the amendment read.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose the honorable member from Connecticut suggests his amendment as a substitute for the other.

Mr. FERRY. Yes, sir. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to accept it as a substitute.

Mr. JOHNSON. That renders it, I think, less obnoxious than the original amendment proposed by the honorable member from Massachusetts. But it seems to me it would be a sufficient guard against the dangers which now exist to make the prohibition apply to officers of the Army who are intrusted with public funds. I think it would lead possibly to a great deal of bad feeling if the Army officers may be troubled to defend the crime by prosecutions for having violated the law if it stands even in the way suggested by the honorable member from Connecticut. I think we ought to prohibit any disbursing officer of the Army from gambling at all in any way. The temptation that gambling subjects him to very often leads him to hazard the public funds. Cases have arisen over and over again of loss to the United States consequent upon the gambling of disbursing officers; but in relation to the other officers of the Army they hazard their own money, be it more or be it less; and I do not know that they have been subjected to any injury more than that which attends every other person who plays from time to time for money, whether he be in the civil or military or naval service. I should prefer, therefore, that the prohibition should be limited to officers who are intrusted with public money.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that he limit the prohibition to officers who are charged with the custody and disbursement of public money.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that I offered to do that, but some Senator objected.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that would be a whole-some provision.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Kentucky both seem to me to overlook the real object of any such article. The real object is not the protection of property; it is the protection of the service from the deleterious consequences of gambling among its officers. That is the object of the article; it is the object of almost all these articles; and it is agreed by all the testimony that we have that this practice is deleterious to the service, and being so, it has been thought advisable to suggest a proposition whereby the practice among the officers of the Army of gambling for gain, which is intelligible to the common sense, as it seems to me, of every one, should be prevented.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator from Connecticut I think attributes the effect as the cause. I do not think that gaming is the cause, but it is the consequence of a general demoralizing influence in camp life. During the late war one of the most gallant soldiers and colonels in the Kentucky service informed me that he was called to witness the death of one of his most esteemed soldiers, and when he got to it he found the brother of that soldier engaged in a game of cards and not paying the least attention to his dying brother whose immortal soul was about to take its flight to another world. It is the camp that prepares the heart and the mind of men who live in it for such practices as gaming and a devotion to gaming to the extreme extent to which that unfortunate soldier had it. There is nothing but idleness and vacuity in the camp in peace times; at least there is a great amount of it.

Men want to fill up their vacant hours, their idle time; and they do this by a resort to cards, and you cannot devise any legislation that will stop it. It is like drinking, but not so bad. I do not rate this vice as my honorable friend from California does. I have known many gamblers to reform wholly; I have never known but one or two drunkards in my lifetime that did reform. The amount of evil in the world that results from drinking, to my mind, is, without calculation, greater than that which results from gaming, though they are both great vices, and productive, in a greater or less extent, of unmitigated evil. But the idea of having a provision of this kind in the articles of war that cannot be executed, that no man in the Army will have the disposition to execute, is to my mind very idle. I believe that a disbursing officer ought not to be allowed to game, and there ought to be rigorous provisions in the articles of war to prevent officers of that class from gaming.

Bank officers, merchants' clerks, who have access to money, paymasters, quartermasters and other disbursers of the public money ought not to be allowed to game if it is possible to stop it; and I admit the reasonableness of legislation or of an effort to legislate so as to stop it entirely; but when you lay down a general rule that an officer who is charged with gaming, or with gaming with a view to gain, because, as the honorable Senator from Nevada says, all gaming results from avarice and from a desire to win, to gain, there is no other gaming; but when you endeavor to suppress that in the Army by such a provision as is now under consideration, you attempt that which is utterly impossible, and that brings the rules and regulations of the Army rather into contempt than to effect. I do not game. I deem the evil and deleterious influence of both the vices to which I have referred. I would be very glad if they both could be eradicated, not only from the Army but from the world.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think there is and ought to be a prohibition against gambling in the Army, and I think it should be one against common gambling, and not punish by so severe an infiction as dismissal from the service for a single offense, which may have been committed thoughtlessly. That seems to me entirely too severe. I am quite willing to vote for a provision which shall strike at those who are addicted to the habit, and who are likely to demoralize others and spread a bad influence in the Army. As the provision now stands, however, a single deviation from high propriety might entail upon an officer the disgrace and injury of a peremptory dismissal from service.

It is idle to say that a court-martial will not convict a man unless the case is very gross. They are to try the officer upon specific charges setting forth specific facts.

If they find them they are bound to return the charges and specifications "found" and report that the officer is guilty. They have no discretion but a peremptory dismissal from the service. I think a law of that kind will not be enforced in many cases, and when it is enforced it will produce, perhaps, inconvenience and hardship in practical cases. I should therefore desire to vote for the provision changed so as to read that the offense shall constitute common gambling. There are blacklegs in the Army, as they are called; there are men who follow the practice of fleecing green people, whose delight it is to seduce the young and the foolish into this habit. I would strike with a severe hand at all these people and even at an officer of merit in other respects who sank down into a common habit of gambling; for the good of the public service I should permit him to be dismissed; but as now proposed this provision seems to be unreasonable and improper.

Mr. FERRY. I think in the suggestion which is made as to the penalty proposed by the substitute, the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania deserves consideration; that possibly the limitation of the penalty to the single punishment of dismissal from the service is improper; and I would therefore modify the proposition by striking out the last words "be dismissed from the service," and substituting in lieu thereof "shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial shall impose, not exceeding dismissal from the service."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill on page 39, article one hundred and four, line seven, by striking out the word "specific." The proviso to that article reads:

Provided, That no regulations or orders shall be made in conflict with the Rules or Articles of War, or with any specific act of Congress.

I think it is proper to say "any act of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I have one other amendment to propose. It is to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That section thirty-seven of the act entitled "An act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," approved July 23, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

I will simply say that in the act reorganizing the Army after the war, it was provided that the Secretary of War should prepare rules and regulations for the government of the Army and militia called into the service. These rules have been made. I believe there are over two hundred of them in number. They have not been reported to Congress; and these Articles of War provide that the Secretary of War or the President shall have the power to issue these rules and regulations. The object is to repeal that act requiring these rules and regulations to be submitted to Congress and enacted. It may be desirable to change them, and to change them often, according to the condition and circumstances of the country, and therefore it is proposed to repeal this law, so that these regulations may be issued by the War Department and modified according to their wishes, not inconsistent with the laws of Congress or with these Articles of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I doubt the propriety of that. The thirty-seventh section, which the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to repeal, provides:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared, and to report to Congress, at its next session, a code of regulations for the government of the Army and of the militia in actual service, which shall embrace all necessary orders and forms of a general character for the performance of all duties incumbent on officers and men in the military service, including rules for the government of courts-martial. The existing regulations to remain in force until Congress shall have acted on said report."

Now, if you repeal that section and leave it to customary law, as it was before that act was passed, it reposes in the President of the United States the supreme control of the whole regulations of the Army, aside from these that are called the Articles of War. I am free to say that in the existing condition of things, I am entirely opposed to turning over to the President of the United States the law for the regulation of the Army.

Mr. WILSON. I have simply to say that all the regulations for the government of the Army have always been issued in that way, and this provision was put in the law of 1866 by the persistency of one gentleman. It was a great mistake at the time; and I venture to say that if the regulations are reported here we shall never enact them. It may, perhaps, just at this time be proper to retain that section of the law. I do not wish to press the amendment if Senators are opposed to it. But I will say that the Secretary of War is very desirous to issue the rules and regulations that have been prepared with a great deal of care and labor. I have no idea that if they are sent here we shall ever legislate on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. Congress alone has the power to prescribe rules and regulations for the Army—a power which I do not think they can delegate to the Secretary of War or to the President. The rules which have been framed by the officers of the Army may be very objectionable in every way; and I more than doubt whether it is in our power, without a clear abandonment of the constitutional provision, to let the Army be governed by rules and regulations which have never received the supervision of Congress. If the Army has been governed in the past by rules and regulations prescribed by Congress, and will be governed for the future by the Articles of War which we are now about to establish, I do not see any necessity for prescribing other rules, at any rate for the few months that are to intervene between the termination of this session and the commencement of the next. I submit to my friend from Massachusetts that perhaps we have no authority to devolve upon the Secretary of War or the President of the United States the power to prescribe rules and regulations.

Mr. WILSON. Congress gave this power to the President and Secretary of War more than twenty years ago. Congress had legislated on the subject, but on the recommendation of General Scott Congress gave the power to the Secretary of War to issue his orders and modify and change them according to circumstances, and from that time up to the passage of the act in 1866, a period of twenty years, through the Mexican war and through the last war, rules and regulations by the authority of Congress were issued by the War Department and modified and changed according to the needs of the country. However, as I am anxious to get this bill through, I will withdraw the amendment to gratify my friend from Vermont, who, I know, will be exceedingly pleased to have it withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn.

Mr. THAYER. On page 29, article eighty-three, I move to strike out all of the article after the word "rank," at the end of the third line, and to insert the words "according to the dates of their commissions." The words to be stricken out are:

Next after officers of the like grade in said regular forces, notwithstanding the commissions of such volunteer or militia officers may be older than the commissions of the officers of the regular forces: Provided, That this distinction shall not exist when said volunteer or militia officers shall have been in the service of the United States an equal length of time with the said regular officers.

So that the article will read:

ART. 33. Volunteer or militia officers in the military service of the United States shall, when employed in conjunction with the regular forces of the United States, take rank according to the dates of their commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. FERRY. The eleventh, fifteenth, sixteenth, and thirty-second articles prescribe to a certain extent punishments to be inflicted by the different classes of courts-martial and by the commanding officers of detachments when necessary. I judge by the tenor of the articles that it is intended that no other punishments than those named in the articles shall be inflicted; yet as the articles stand the same liberty of corporal punishment will continue as existed during the late war. I propose to amend these articles, of which an illustration will be the amendment to article fifteen, which provides:

No garrison, regimental, battalion, or detachment court-martial shall have power to try capital cases; nor shall any such court include as a part of its sentence upon any soldier a fine exceeding two months' pay, nor imprisonment, nor put to hard labor any soldier for a longer period than two months.

To that I propose to add:

Nor shall any corporal punishment be imposed by such sentence other than imprisonment or hard labor, or both.

I propose also an amendment in similar language to the eleventh, sixteenth, and thirty-second articles, the principle of all being the same. The object which I have is this: flogging in the Army was abolished years ago; but during the recent war other corporal punishments, in my judgment infinitely worse than flogging, were inflicted upon the soldiers, both by order of detachment commanders and by these inferior courts-martial, and, as I think, invariably almost with an evil effect, such as tying up to the wheels of gun-carriages, hanging up by the thumbs, inclosing in barrels like a pillory, and the like. Those things, in my judgment, should be stopped. I have therefore prepared amendments to each of these articles to accomplish that result; so that, under the Articles of War as now to be adopted, the punishments to be inflicted will be only in capital cases death; in other cases fine or imprisonment or hard labor, or a combination of some of the latter three, which is accomplished by adding to each of these articles the words which I have suggested. The first in order would be the eleventh article to add:

But except in capital cases no corporal punishment shall be imposed by sentence of a general court-martial other than imprisonment, or hard labor, or both.

Punishments not corporal, such as dismissal from service, cashiering, and fine, of course are not affected by the amendment. I move that amendment to the eleventh article, to be added at the end of the article.

MR. WILSON. I hope that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. FERRY. I now move to add at the end of the fifteenth article the following:

Nor shall any corporal punishment be imposed by such sentence other than imprisonment, or hard labor, or both.

MR. JOHNSON. That is the same thing.

MR. FERRY. Yes, sir; it is all the same applied to these different articles.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. FERRY. I now move to amend the sixteenth article by inserting after the word "month," in the fourteenth line, the words:

Nor shall any corporal punishment be imposed by such sentence other than imprisonment, or hard labor, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. FERRY. The next amendment is in the thirty-second article, to insert after the word "discipline," in the sixth line, the words.

Nor shall any corporal punishment be imposed by such sentence other than imprisonment, or hard labor, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. BUCKALEW. On page 39, article one hundred and four, I move to strike out what follows the word "Army," in the second line. I do not care about striking out the proviso, and I suppose it will be unnecessary.

The Chief Clerk read the clause proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And to amend the general regulations for the government of the Army, or make new regulations, as the circumstances of the service may require.

So that the article will read:

The President of the United States shall have power to prescribe the uniform of the Army: Provided, That no regulations or orders shall be made in conflict with the Rules and Articles of War, or with any specific act of Congress.

MR. BUCKALEW. This is the same question that was raised by the amendment that was moved by the Senator from Massachusetts and withdrawn. The power is given specifically to Congress in words which are familiar to all the members of the Senate. The power is:

"To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

Obviously, this is a power to be exercised by Congress itself, and not delegated to the Secretary of War, the President, or any other authority whatever. If they require any new rules let them suggest them to Congress, and of course if they are reasonable they can get them enacted in a constitutional law. I think this clause ought to be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. BUCKALEW. I have no amendment in regard to the one hundredth article, but I take it to be a very indefinite and objectionable one. It reads:

All crimes not capital, and all disorders and neglects which officers or soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, though not mentioned in these Rules and Articles of War, are to be taken cognizance of by a court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and are to be punished at the discretion of the court.

I think that is a very remarkable article. It has no reference to the usages of war. There is no reference to the military principles which prevail in the administration of justice in times of war or in military operations. Everything is left indefinite and at the discretion of any court that may be convened. It seems to me this article ought not to be incorporated in the general code, and left to the administration of anybody who happens to hold a commission under the United States, with authority to convene a military court. I move to strike out the article, unless some amendment of it can be suggested.

MR. FERRY. Why, Mr. President, I would inquire of the chairman of the committee if there is any article providing for the cognizance of courts-martial over offenses to the prejudice of good order and military discipline besides this?

MR. EDMUNDS. None at all.

MR. FERRY. It is absolutely necessary in time of war to have this discretion, however dangerous it might be in time of peace.

MR. BUCKALEW. This article also includes mere "neglects." It makes no reference to any military code or military usage. It leaves everything perfectly at the discretion of the tribunal in the case.

MR. FERRY. But there is a military usage as well known as the common law by which courts-martial are guided.

MR. BUCKALEW. But as this article is drawn it does not refer to it.

MR. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Pennsylvania will pardon me, I suggest to him that that very article in totidem verbis has been in force for a period of sixty-two years. It is in these very words in the old Articles of War of 1806, being the ninth article there. It has not done any hurt so far.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to strike out the one hundredth article.

The motion was not agreed to.

MR. DAVIS. I move to strike out the tenth article, which reads in these words:

No officer shall be tried but by a general court-martial, nor by officers of an inferior rank, if, in the judgment of the officer appointing the court, it can be avoided, without detriment to the public service.

Now, sir, I should like to know, under this provision, how the General of the Army or the Lieutenant General of the Army could be tried by court-martial? I suppose if those high officers committed offenses deserving of punishment that they are the most proper of all subjects to receive it, and I think the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs ought to devise some mode by which a tribunal that would be competent to try both of those officers should be formed.

MR. FERRY. The subject of this article, which has always been in the Articles of War, is to prevent a court being constituted of interested tryers, so that inferior officers shall not try their superior, and convict him, and rise and take his place. There is no difficulty whatever in trying the General of the Army, because in that case it would fall within the concluding clause of the article, whereby an officer may be tried by officers of an inferior rank if it cannot be avoided.

MR. DAVIS. Will the Senator read the provision to which he has just referred that provides for that?

MR. FERRY. The concluding clause of the tenth article provides that a superior officer may be tried by inferiors, where the placing of inferiors upon the court-martial cannot be avoided without detriment to the public service. It is in the article itself.

MR. DAVIS. I did not interpret it as my honorable friend does. It reads:

No officer shall be tried but by a general court-martial, nor by officers of an inferior rank, if, in the judgment of the officer appointing the court, it can be avoided without detriment to the public service.

What does that mean? The language is obscure, I think, in its reading and sense. Suppose, now, the General of the Army was to commit a military offense for which he ought to be subject to a court-martial, who would be the officer that would direct the convening of a court-martial to try him?

MR. FERRY. The President of the United States.

MR. DAVIS. I suppose the President of the United States could direct a court-martial in any case and in every case. I think so because he is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and he may do any and every act that a commander-in-chief of the British armies could do, according to my judgment of the Constitution. I do not think it is very well expressed; but if that be the meaning of article ten, that the President may order a court, be it so. I will withdraw that motion; and I ask the honorable Senator's attention to another objection which I take. Article twelve provides for military commissions, and it gives the military commissions more authority than it does the regular courts-martial. Article six provides for courts-martial as follows:

Any general officer commanding an army in the field, or other officer not below the grade of colonel commanding a geographical division, a department, or district, may appoint general courts-martial whenever necessary. But no sentence of any court-martial shall be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been laid before the officer ordering the same, or his successor in office.

Now, I ask the attention of the honorable Senator to this part of the article:

Neither shall any sentence of a general court-martial in time of peace, extending to the loss of life or the dismissal of an officer, or which shall, either in time of peace or war, respect a general officer, be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been transmitted to the Judge Advocate General, to be laid before the Secretary of War for the orders of the President of the United States in the case.

Article twelve provides for military commissions, as follows:

In time of war or public danger military commissions may be constituted, and shall have jurisdiction over all offenses and offenders against the common laws of war not cognizable by courts-martial. Such courts shall be appointed in the same manner and by the same authority; shall consist of the like number of officers with a judge advocate; shall be liable to the same restrictions and challenges, and shall possess the same powers and privileges for regulating their proceedings and compelling the attendance of parties and witnesses at courts-martial. And the sentences of such military commissions may be confirmed and executed by the officer ordering the court or his successor in office, or by a common superior, who shall have power also to pardon or to mitigate such sentences, as provided in the case of courts-martial.

Now, I suppose that a military commission would be authorized to dismiss a general from office by its sentence; a court-martial would not. If it were to deprive an officer of his rank, dismiss him from the service, or sentence him to death, before that sentence could be executed the whole proceeding would have to be sent to the Judge Advocate General, to be laid, through the Secretary of War, before the President for his approval. Such is not the requisition in reference to sentences of military commissions. If they dismiss an officer who is of the grade of general from the Army, the officer who ordered the convening of the military commission would have the power to confirm the sentence without any appeal to the President, or without giving him any opportunity of revising and reversing the sentence. It seems to me there is an incongruity between the two provisions, and that the regular courts-martial would have a better right to have their sentences absolute and unappealable than the military commissions. I think that ought to be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out this article.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS. There is one feature in these articles that I do not like. I have not had an opportunity of reading them carefully; and if I had that opportunity, whether I should object to them or not would be a matter of very little moment. But the first article, which regulates the oaths that are to be taken by Army officers, amounts to an absolute proscription of all men who were engaged in the rebel service. I do not think that is very wise justice, although it may be stern justice. I think that the subject of bringing men who were engaged in rebellion into the Army of the United States may be safely left to the appointing power, the President and the Senate; but this form of oath forever proscribes every man who was engaged in the rebel service. I think it is time for the obduracy and the extremity of that feeling to relax. I admit that there are not many of them that I at present would be willing to bring into the military service of the United States; but I know a few in whose fidelity to the Government, if they were brought in, I would trust as soon as I would that of most men. But it seems to me that it is time that a great conquering party were exercising clemency. We have all read of Caesar, one of the greatest men and one of the greatest military commanders that the world has ever produced. Of all his great and noble qualities his clemency was that which commended him most to the consideration and esteem of the Roman people. I think that it looks too proscriptive, too inexorable, too unrelenting to introduce these oaths into the Rules and Articles of War; and I think that everything that could be necessary in the exclusion of men who went into the rebel service might be fully accomplished by leaving the whole subject-matter to the appointing power of the Government. Gentlemen, no doubt, would differ with me. I merely express this sentiment with a view of announcing that which I feel, and for no other purpose.

Mr. BUCKALEW. By the eleventh article it is provided that—

General courts-martial shall have jurisdiction over all military offenses and offenders.

Then by the ninety-seventh article it is provided that—

All officers, soldiers, teamsters, or other persons whomsoever, receiving pay or hire in the service of the United States in connection with the Army, as also all sutlers, traders, Army contractors, and other followers of the Army, and all citizens voluntarily residing or entering on any of the military and Indian reservations with clearly-defined boundaries, shall be governed by these rules and articles, and shall be subject to be tried by courts-martial or military commissions in like manner with the officers and soldiers in the service of the United States."

There you have a complete claim of jurisdiction conferred in strong general terms. Now, what I desire to call particular attention to is the twelfth article, which reads as follows:

In time of war or public danger—which may not be a time of war—

military commissions may be constituted, and shall have jurisdiction over all offenses and offenders against the laws of war not recognizable by courts-martial.

That is a very extraordinary article. I venture to say that nothing like that will be found in the Rules and Articles of War heretofore adopted in this country. The article goes on to say:

Such courts shall be appointed in the same manner and by the same authority; shall consist of the like number of officers, with a judge advocate; shall be liable to the same restrictions and challenges; with further provisions for the enforcement of the sentences. Now, sir, we are familiar with the system which is provided for by the eleventh and ninth articles. All military offenses and military offenders may be taken possession of by courts-martial, and by the ninety-seventh article we extend that jurisdiction over teamsters and camp-followers, Army contractors, and persons who may be temporarily within military possessions or within camp limits. What, then, is the necessity for the twelfth article?

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator desires to strike out the words "public danger" I have no objection to that; but certainly within the limits of the Army in time of war it is necessary to have some such provision as that, and the Supreme Court have settled the question outside of the limits of the Army in the decision made in the Indiana case.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will move to strike out the words "public danger."

Mr. FERRY. And insert "insurrection" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes; so as to read "war or insurrection." Insurrection would be war, or might be war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that amendment in article twelve, line one, to strike out the words "public danger" and insert "insurrection;" so as to read: "In time of war or insurrection military commissions may be constituted," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That will remove one objection to the article. I suppose it is unnecessary for me to raise the question of these military commissions as distinct from courts-martial, and point out the absence of any necessity which can justify their institution. I have simply called attention to this article with a desire of expressing my view upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not know precisely how far the Senator having this bill in charge means to shut the door. But particularly as a question has been raised upon it, I think it is well to examine this article a little in one or two other respects which I have been thinking of. Now, although "insurrection" is substituted for "public danger"—

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator wants more time I will move an executive session, and let this bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish much time; and I will remind the Senator that this is the first time I have made a suggestion about this bill, and I intend to make it very brief.

Mr. POMEROY. I only made the suggestion with a view to having an executive session in case the Senator desired time.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to interfere with the bill at all; but I desire to make a single suggestion about this point, which, I think, it is well to think of now. Although "insurrection" has been substituted for the expression "public danger," it will be observed, first, that military commissions are not to be confined to the theater of war at all, and for this purpose I assume that the provision is that they shall exist only in time of war. That limits them in time; but speaking of space, they may range the realms. There is nothing confining their action to the theater of war, actual or constructive. That is one proposition.

There is another suggestion to which I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The provision is, that these tribunals shall have jurisdiction over all offenses and offenders against the laws of war not cognizable by courts-martial. It will be absurd that if only those instances of offense were contemplated covered by the eleventh article and the ninety-seventh article, this article would be entirely surplusage. If the Senator from Massachusetts will give me his attention at this moment I shall be obliged to him, because this is a matter which has been very much discussed, and which has led to great disturbance and ill-feeling in the portions of the country with which I am most familiar. I say that there is nothing confining the operation of this article to persons connected with the military service or in the military service. If it were so confined, it would be entirely surplusage, because article eleven and article ninety-seven bring within the jurisdiction of courts-martial every offense known to the Rules and Articles of War committed by a person subject to those articles, so that the Senator will see that it follows that this article is specially leveled at men who in no sense are subject to the Rules and Articles of War; so that standing as it does the section may, and I think should, be construed to mean that in time of war or insurrection a civilian, a private citizen, wholly disconnected with military operations or military obligations, and widely removed from the theater of war, may be tried for an offense committed against these articles, or denounced by the articles before a military commission. If that is the intention of the committee, the design is to take issue with a very powerful current of sentiment and of somewhat enlightened opinion in this country.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from New York whether the difficulty would not be met by adding after "courts-martial" the words, "committed within the theater of war?"

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir; I think that would be a very wholesome restriction, if the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has no objection to it.

Mr. WILSON. I am willing to accept that. That is what I suppose, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, would be the construction of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be so construed; but you had better put those words in.

Mr. CONKLING. I think it is very well to put them in; and if they may be put in by consent, I wish to make one other suggestion which will take but a moment. It will be observed, that even with that addition, improving the section very much, as I think it does, there is still room for this criticism: persons within the theater of war so disconnected with military operations that they do not fall within the range of the constitutional provision on that subject, nor within the range of these other articles, are still amenable to trial and punishment before a military commission. That may be right; but let us see what it means before we do it. Here was the case of Clement L. Vallandigham, which would fall, as I understand it, precisely within this article as it stands. Perhaps that case should fall within it; but by parity of reasoning the Senator will see that other cases of a much milder type than that would be, geographically and in point of jurisdiction, so placed that this section would operate upon them. Unless that be absolutely necessary, I think we had better keep off that ground.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator, I think, does not mean to say that we do not need such a provision as that. I think this country would have had a very hard struggle if we could not have organized military commissions to try offenses.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not mean to go into the discussion, and I do not mean to do it now; but in answer to the Senator I will make one remark. I never could understand the philosophy of many exhibitions that I saw during the war, with discerning men, intelligent men, and lawyers—exhibitions of extreme feeling, of deep disturbance which were made in reference to what were termed arbitrary arrests. I thought that many arrests were made which were denounced as arbitrary that should have been made, and, as the Senator says, we should have been in great difficulty without the power to make them and the exercise of that power; and yet I am free to say here that in time of war or insurrection, and constructively within the theater of war, in my belief the genius of our Government requires us to try offenders before civil tribunals wherever the civil tribunals are open and are free to act. This section impairs the integrity of that idea, because it does mean undoubtedly that albeit civil tribunals are open, a man who might there speedily and effectually be tried may, nevertheless, at the election of his prosecutors, be brought before a military commission and subjected to that species of trial. Now, my suggestion is that some qualifying words which shall reduce the operation of this article within those limits which can be advocated on the ground of necessity would be desirable, and not leave it unrestricted except as the honorable Senator from New Jersey has restricted it by his suggestion, which I think is a very good one as far as it goes, because it may still be said that the design is here to create a special tribunal unknown to the military law in its strict sense, and unknown to the genius of our Government, except so far as necessity in the first instance, and legislation following that, brought it into being.

I say in place of creating such a tribunal not only to try offenses upon which its operation may be necessary, but also to try offenses which are tryable in theory and in actual practice elsewhere, seems to me a mistake; and I will suggest myself, if it be agreeable to the Senator, some restrictive words, or I will leave it to him.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from New York if he desires to move an amendment?

Mr. CONKLING. I believe the amendment which is pending has not yet been voted upon.

Mr. WILSON. I certainly have no objection to restricting this article within the narrowest limits of necessity, but I think it would be very hard to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, to insert after "courts-martial," in line four of the twelfth article, the words "committed within the theater of war."

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to look at the text of the bill before adopting that phraseology. He will see that the phrase is "all offenses and offenders;" so that he can hardly say "committed within the theater of war," because that would apply to "offenders" as well as "offenses." I suggest to him to vary the phraseology.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. "Committed and being."

Mr. BUCKALEW. Allow me to suggest an amendment in the third line, after the word "offenders"—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment is pending.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am suggesting to the Senator from New Jersey to locate it in another place. I suggest to him to insert after the word "offenders," in the third line, "within the theater of military operations, and where the civil tribunals cannot act."

Mr. DAVIS. I, sir, am a worshiper of liberty according to the Constitution and the law. I have been protesting against the jurisdiction of military tribunals over citizens who are not attached to the Army or to the Navy, for more than five years, and I intend to keep up my protest as long as I have the privilege to make one. Now, the ninety-seventh article reads:

All officers, soldiers, teamsters, or other persons whomsoever receiving pay or hire in the service of the United States, in connection with the Army, as also all sutlers, traders, Army contractors, and other followers of the Army, and all citizens voluntarily residing or entering on any of the military and Indian reservations with clearly defined boundaries, shall be governed by these rules and articles.

That embraces many classes of men who by the express provisions of the Constitution are exempted from the jurisdiction of military tribunals. It covers all sutlers, all Army contractors. An Army contractor may be anywhere in the United States, but if he were within the lines of the Army he would not be subject to trial by a military court at all. That is one of the constitutional liberties of the people of the United States. That instrument provides—"That no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces," &c.

To give a military tribunal jurisdiction to try any man for any offense, he must be in the naval or military forces. That is the plain and literal meaning of the provision of the Constitution, and its reason is obvious. It was never intended by the framers of the Constitution that mere civilians who had no connection with the Army, no proper responsibility to it, should be deprived of the trial by jury after a presentment or indictment of a grand jury and brought before a military tribunal and tried by the arbitrary proceedings of a court-martial. I know that during the late war many contractors were arrested upon the ground that they had committed frauds upon the United States in their contracts for the Army. They no doubt were culpable and deserved punishment; but they did not merit punishment before military tribunals, because they were exempt from trial by military tribunals by the Constitution of the country. Sir, I never have voted, and I never will vote, for any bill or any provision in any bill that will subject a civilian to trial by a military court or a military tribunal of any kind. This ninety-seventh article does. The purpose or the effect of it is to sanction and confirm those irregular trials during the war. Sir, it is one of the rights of a citizen of the United States who is not in the land or the naval service of the Government, that if he is charged with any offense whatever, any violation of the law, he shall be brought before a civil court and tried by a jury of his peers according to the modes of proceedings under the common law; and because this article violates that article of the Constitution, I am opposed to it.

Mr. THAYER. It seems to me that this article is altogether too comprehensive in its terms, and embraces classes of persons which should not be included in it. For instance, it embraces all Indian reservations, and includes all persons who are on Indian reservations. The military have nothing to do with those reservations, and no control whatever over them. Why should it be made to reach them? I see no reason for the article itself. I certainly am opposed to taking persons who are not in the military service, but are simply connected with it, as civilians in the employment of the quartermasters or commissary departments, and subjecting them to the rules and Articles of War or trial by court-martial and military commission. I should prefer that the whole article should be stricken out unless it is necessary to retain a part of it.

Mr. WILSON. This article has nothing to do with such persons. This article applies to civilians in no way connected with the Army. I should like to know how in Heaven's name we could have maintained the lives, the rights, and the liberties of the people over vast sections of this country where they had no civil courts, or punished murderers or spies and men committing every degree and grade of crime, except by military commissions during the rebellion? This is what it means; and I am utterly amazed that anybody should suggest here to-night throwing away the power to do a thing of that kind.

Mr. THAYER. The argument of the Senator from Massachusetts applies to a state of war.

Mr. WILSON. This article only applies to a state of war. If the Senator will read the article he will find that it is confined to a time of war or insurrection.

Mr. THAYER. I am speaking of the ninety-seventh article.

Mr. WILSON. We are on the twelfth article.

Mr. THAYER. I was alluding to the ninety-seventh article.

Mr. WILSON. I misunderstood the Senator; I thought he was speaking of the twelfth article.

Mr. THAYER. Not at all; I made no reference to it. Article ninety-seven provides:

All officers, soldiers, teamsters, or other persons whomsoever receiving pay or hire in the service of the United States, in connection with the Army, as also all sutlers, traders, Army contractors, and other followers of the Army, and all citizens voluntarily residing or entering on any of the military and Indian reservations with clearly defined boundaries, shall be governed by these rules and articles, and shall be subject to be tried by courts-martial, or military commissions, in like manner with the officers and soldiers in the service of the United States.

That applies clearly to a state of peace, and embraces classes of persons who were not embraced by the old Articles of War prior to the late war, and whom it was never contemplated to make subject to trial by courts-martial and military commissions. For instance, as I remarked just now, the article includes persons on Indian reservations. The military have nothing to do with the Indians upon the reservations. What control have they over a citizen who goes upon a military reservation, for that is also included? If a citizen goes upon a military reservation and commits an offense is he to be caught up and tried by court-martial or military commission? That is not done even in regard to offenses committed by soldiers in our Army; they are brought in and tried by the United States district courts. I certainly am opposed to embracing that class of persons. I want these rules and articles to relate only to officers and soldiers; and I move to amend that article by striking out all except the following words—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. THAYER. Very well, then; I will move it again.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to strike out the twelfth article.

Mr. WILSON. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Now I move to add at the end of that amendment the words "and where the civil tribunals cannot act;" so as to make the article read:

In time of war or insurrection military commissions may be constituted, and shall have jurisdiction over all offenses and offenders against the laws of war not cognizable by courts-martial, committed and being within the theater of war and where the civil tribunals cannot act.

Mr. DRAKE. I feel a great deal of disinclination to enter into any discussion with regard to this bill; but I have seen too much of the condition of things in a time of insurrection to allow this amendment to be adopted without expressing my dissent to it. If this amendment is inserted, in my opinion the article amounts to nothing, and although we may be surrounded and confronted on every side by rebellion, as we were for four years, the military power is shorn of its strength as to everybody who is not in the Army or within the immediate lines of the Army. If the amendment is made, I take it that in the event of another rebellion it would constitute a license for rebels outside of the region of the rebellion to engage in every description of scheme for the purpose of furthering the rebellion and aiding it with no power in the military of the country to deal with them as rebels and traitors.

My doctrine is that when there is an insurrection in a country aid and comfort may be given to that insurrection from every part of the country, whether from the theater of war or not, and that every man who engages under such circumstances in giving aid and comfort to the rebellion, no matter whereabouts in the country he may be, should be subjected to the military power and brought within the range of its influence and effect; that if there is an insurrection in Virginia, and New York city is filled with traitors plotting and contriving to give aid and comfort to that insurrection, the military power of the Government should be able to put its hand upon them there; that if, what is much more likely to be the case, another rebellion should ever spring up in the Gulf States, and thousands and tens of thousands of men in Kentucky should band together for the purpose of giving aid and comfort to that rebellion, as they did during the late rebellion that we have passed through, the Government should be able to put its military hand upon them there.

Now, sir, for one, I do most earnestly protest against this emasculation of the Government of the United States in its military department by such a provision as this. In the event of another rebellion, what would be the value of the civil tribunals in the suppression of efforts of traitors away from the theater of war to give aid and comfort to that rebellion?

Mr. WILSON. About as much as they were in the late rebellion.

Mr. DRAKE. I was just going to ask how much they were worth during the rebellion through which we have passed? Sir, they were worth just about as much as the court of pie-poudre in England would be. Talk about going before justices of the peace and getting constables to serve their warrants, and going before criminal courts infected, perhaps, with the rebelism and treason that the man had been guilty of who was brought before them! Talk about going before grand juries made up of sympathizers with the rebellion, as they were found all through this country! Send there to punish a rebel! Sir, I protest against this whole thing; and if there is no other way of defeating this amendment at this time I will call for a division of the Senate upon it, if I can get it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it reported.

Mr. BUCKALEW. As the amendment seems to be resisted—I understood it was substantially acceded by the chairman of the Military Committee—

Mr. DRAKE. No; he objected to it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I was going to observe that if it is to be resisted I shall insist upon dividing the Senate. It is too important a principle.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert after the provision adopted on the motion of Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN the words "and where the civil tribunals cannot act."

Mr. CONKLING. I think the amendment is located in the wrong place; it ought to come in after the word "shall," in the second line; so that the clause will read:

Military commissions may be constituted, and shall, within the theater of war, &c.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think it would come in better there.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, I will make this as a suggestion or substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to come in the fourth line after the words "courts-martial:"

But such jurisdiction shall not within the United States attach to any person disconnected with the military service, unless the civil tribunals before which such person would usually be triable shall be interrupted or impeded by war or insurrection.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DRAKE. May I ask the honorable Senator from New York, with regard to that, if the operation and effect of it is to be this: that in the event of another southern rebellion, or a northern one either, away from the immediate theater of the war, those engaged in raising supplies to send to the rebels, in communicating privately information of the movements of the Government troops to them, or in any other form of treason to their country and Government, are to be turned over to the civil tribunals? Is that the effect of the honorable Senator's amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Treason must be tried by a jury.

Mr. DRAKE. To be tried by a jury of their own fellows in the crime, perhaps.

Mr. CONKLING. No, Mr. President; I do not think that is the effect of the amendment; certainly it is not the intention of the amendment. The design of the amendment is to provide that where there are courts which will act as in the Indiana case, open and ready to be appealed to, an appeal shall be taken to those courts in place of going before a military tribunal in the first instance. To meet the Senator's suggestion I will add to the amendment these further words, "or shall refuse to administer justice;" so that it will read:

Shall be interrupted or impeded by war or insurrection, or shall refuse to administer justice.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I wish to make a single suggestion. I am satisfied, from an examination of the first clause of article twelve, that an effort has been made here by the Military Committee to accomplish an impossibility, to wit, to define the jurisdiction of military commissions. Although military commissions have been known both in the mother country and in our own country, their jurisdiction has never been defined by statute. They grow out of the exigencies of war. Their jurisdiction is attempted to be defined by the law books written upon the laws of war, but it is necessarily undefined, because necessarily adapted to the circumstances and exigencies which arise during times of war or insurrection. The suggestion which I have to make is this: after these amendments have been voted upon, I propose to strike out all after the word "constituted" in the first clause, and insert "according to the laws and usages of war;" so that the first clause will read:

In time of war or insurrection military commissions may be constituted according to the laws and usages of war.

If you attempt to define it nearer than that you will fail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite obvious that we cannot get a vote to night. There is less than a quorum here, and there will undoubtedly be a division. This immediate point that is under discussion is one of great importance to have it adjusted with entire propriety to the satisfaction of everybody and of all political parties, so that there shall be no feeling about it. Therefore, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask the Senator to withdraw it. I want to have an executive session for ten minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are only twenty Senators here. That will not do.

Mr. WILSON. I wanted to know of Senators whether they objected to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be thought of a little. I am not sure that that will reach the object. There are only twenty Senators here and there will be a division. I make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator will withdraw that motion we can have an executive session and accomplish what we want in ten minutes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut is acceptable we can pass this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 11, noes 6; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 29, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider, commencing with the State of Maine. Under this call, memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented.

RAILROAD SUBSCRIPTION BY GEORGETOWN, D.C.

Mr. WELKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1328) to authorize the corporate authorities of Georgetown to subscribe the sum of $300,000 to build a branch railroad to connect said city with the Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire railroad, and to levy a tax therefor; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

W. R. SILVEY.

Mr. STOKES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1329) for the relief of the heirs of W. R. Silvey, late of company B, second Tennessee infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM E. BYRD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1330) for the relief of William E. Byrd, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

NANCY COOK.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1331) for the relief of Nancy Cook, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BARBARA STOUT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1332) for the relief of Barbara Stout, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

POST ROUTE IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1333) to establish a post route in Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

LIEUTENANT GEORGE A. MILLER.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1334) for the relief of Lieutenant George A. Miller, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

M'HENRY BRAY.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1335) for the relief of McHenry Bray, late first lieutenant company I, eighth Tennessee infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARKANSAS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. HINDS introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 315) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

STENOGRAPHER FOR UNITED STATES COURT.

Mr. PILE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1336) to provide for the employment of a stenographic reporter for the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MRS. FRANCES T. RICHARDSON.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1337) granting an increase of pension to Frances T. Richardson, widow of the late Major General Israel B. Richardson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1338) to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Rio Grande to the Pacific ocean; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

NEW LAND DISTRICT IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. TAFTE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1339) to establish a new land district in the State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MAJOR G. CHAPIN.

Mr. CLEVER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1340) for the relief of Major G. Chapin, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

KRYOLITE FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. BINGHAM introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 316) to admit kryolite into the United States free of duty; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order, during the remainder of the morning hour, is the call of the States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Iowa, where the call rested at the expiration of the morning hour on Monday last.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD

Mr. PRICE introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 317) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PRICE. I demand the previous question.

The joint resolution was read. It amends section eight of an act entitled "An act granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound on the Pacific coast," so as to read as follows:

That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific railroad upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from and after the 2d day of July, 1863, and shall complete not less than one hundred miles per year after the second year thereafter; and shall construct, equip, furnish and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1877.

Mr. PRICE. May I ask a parliamentary question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain a parliamentary question.

Mr. PRICE. It is in reference to the business on the Speaker's table. There is on the table a joint resolution which has passed the Senate exactly similar to this, except that this limits the time for the completion of the road to a shorter time by one year. I desire to know whether it is likely we can reach the business on the Speaker's table before the 2d day of July? Because unless the resolution is passed by that time the charter expires.

The SPEAKER. As there is a special order intervening by unanimous consent, and questions of privilege likely to come up, there is some doubt whether that business will be reached.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PRICE. I do not know that I can yield.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is made no debate can be allowed, or the resolution must go over.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will not allow a question, I hope the previous question will not be sustained.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the question can be entertained.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I understand this resolution gives this road two years longer time without doing any work whatever. It is now four years, and it has not struck a spade in the soil.

Mr. PRICE. This, in fact, limits the time in place of extending it, and—

Mr. ROBINSON. I object to debate.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to amend this bill by providing that the lands granted be sold to actual settlers only, in quantities not greater than one hundred and sixty acres, and for a price not exceeding $2 50 per acre.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 73, noes 26—and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PRICE. I demand the previous question on the passage.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 70, noes 28.

Mr. PIKE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 33, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Barnes, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boles, Bromwell, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick B. Butler, Calk, Churchill, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Elia, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Golladay, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Higby, Hinds, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kelsey, Kerr, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Miller, Moorhead, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Raum, Robinson, Roots, Sawyer, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stokes, Taffe, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Woodward—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Baker, Beatty, Boutwell, Cary, Cobb, Callom, Delano, Eggleston, Ferriss, Garfield, Getz, Haight, Harding, Holman, Jenckes, Julian, William Lawrence, Loughridge, McCarthy, Mercur, Niblack, Orth, Pike, Randall, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stewart, Van Auker, Van Wyck, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, and James F. Wilson—33.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnum, Beaman, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Covode, Dawes, Dodge, Driggs, Eliot, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Halsey, Hawkins, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel H. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Kelley, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Ladin, Lincoln, Logan, McCullough, Moore, Morrell, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Robertson, Ross, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Stone, Taber, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Trump, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, and Wood—65.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 251) for the relief of Captain Charles N. Goulding, late quartermaster of volunteers; when the Speaker signed the same.

APPOINTMENTS AND REMOVALS.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following preamble and resolutions, upon which I demand the previous question:

Whereas a statement, purporting to be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury from the official records of this Department, has been published in the National Intelligencer, and also sent to the public through the Associated Press, in which it is stated that in one hundred and nineteen collection districts removals were made during the year 1867 upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in which districts the average falling off of internal revenue, as compared with the year 1865, was $160,942 81 per district; and that in the same year, 1867, removals were made in twenty collection districts by the President, without the recommendation of said Commissioner, in which the falling off of revenue is only $46,470 37 per district; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House whether any such statement was prepared by him or by his direction from the official records of his Department, and whether it was published by his direction, and if so, that he be further directed to furnish this House with a copy of the statement so prepared, and of any report made by him to the President in relation to removals and appointments herein referred to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury inform this House in what collection districts removals and appointments of assessors and collectors were made, if any, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, during the fiscal year 1867, the names of such officers removed and appointed, with copies of all correspondence or recommendations of said Commissioner relating thereto.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division of the question, so as to have a separate vote on the preamble.

The question was taken on the resolutions, and they were agreed to.

The question was then taken on the preamble, and it was adopted.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAXATION OF INTEREST ON BONDS.

Mr. COBB. I offer the following resolution, upon which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, instructed to report without unnecessary delay a bill levying a tax of at least ten per cent. on the interest of the bonds of the United States, to be assessed and collected annually by the Secretary of the Treasury and such of his subordinates as may be charged with the duty of paying the interest on the bonded indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the resolution includes bonds held in foreign countries?

Mr. COBB. It is intended to include all bonds.

Mr. PRICE. It does not so specify.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that a resolution of instruction or of inquiry?

The SPEAKER. It is mandatory in its character.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and there were—ayes 85, noes 57.

Mr. COBB. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. COBB and PRUYN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 57.

So the House refused to second the call for the previous question.

Mr. MILLER. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. SHANKS and Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it in order to move to refer the resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it in order to move to amend the resolution so as to make it a resolution of inquiry into the expediency instead of one of instruction?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order either to move to refer or to move to amend the resolution pending the motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, but the Chair is answering parliamentary questions. If the motion to lay on the table shall be voted down, a motion to refer the resolution will be in order.

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I renew it.

Mr. SHANKS and Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 28, nays 107, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnell, Bailey, Banks, Boutwell, Cake, Churchill, Cornell, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Harding, Higby, Jenckes, Mallory, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, O'Neill, Perham, Plants, Pomeroy, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, William B. Washburn, and Woodbridge—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Baker, Barnes, Beatty, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boies, Boyer, Brownell, Buckland, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Garfield, Getz, Golladay, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Hinds, Holman, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburt, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Ketchum, Kitchen, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Morrill, Mullins, Munger, Newcomb, Niblack, Orth, Pike, Polley, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Roots, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodward—107.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barnum, Beaman, Blair, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Halsey, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Knott, Koontz, Ladin, Lincoln, Logan, Marshall, McCullough, Moore, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Poland, Price, Robertson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Taber, John Trimble, Twichell, Ward, Thomas Williams, Windom, and Wood—59.

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman accept a modification of the resolution, and instruct the committee to report forthwith?

Mr. COBB. To report at any time.

The SPEAKER. By the rules they have a right to report at any time for commitment.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered upon the motion to refer.

Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, called for the yeas and nays on the motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WOODWARD. Is it in order to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WOODWARD. This is a resolution of instructions.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WOODWARD. What will be the effect of referring such a resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. The effect will be to refer it without instructions. By a parity of reasoning, as the gentleman will see, when a bill is introduced appropriating $100,000 to a person, if it is agreed to by the House it becomes so far a law; but if it is merely referred to a committee it is referred without instructions. This resolution is not more mandatory than a bill would be.

Mr. ALLISON. In what condition will this resolution be if the motion to refer is not agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The House is now acting under the previous question. If the motion to refer is not agreed to the question will then be upon adopting or rejecting the resolution. The previous question does not exhaust itself upon the motion to refer, if that motion is not agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would inquire of the Chair if it is not evidently the object of gentlemen to kill this resolution by referring it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee can report at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Everybody knows they will not.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and upon that I call the yeas and nays. That will be a test question.

Mr. ALLISON. It is no test question at all. The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were thirteen in the affirmative.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were fourteen in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, the affirmative not being one fifth of the last vote.

The question was then taken upon reconsidering the vote by which the main question was ordered; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. GARFIELD, to refer the resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 80, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Bailey, Baldwin, Beatty, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Cake, Churchill, Cornell, Delano, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Ferriss, Garfield, Griswold, Halsey, Higby, Hooper, Hulburt, Jenckes, Ketchum, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barnes, Beck, Benton, Boies, Boyer, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Getz, Golladay, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Hinds, Holman, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Kitchen, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Loughridge, Marshall, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Munger, Newcomb, Niblack, Orth, Pike, Polley, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Roots, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodward—80.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnum, Beaman, Benjamin, Blair, Broomall, Burr, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Dawes, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Harding, Hill, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Knott, Koontz, Ladin, Lincoln, McCullough, Moore, Morrill, Morrissey, Mullins, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Pile, Robertson, Robinson, Schenck, Selye, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Taffe, John Trimble, Ward, and Wood—53.

So the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. PIKE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest that the tax on these bonds be made one hundred per cent. That will fill our Treasury still more rapidly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The tax which the resolution proposes is the same that the English Government imposes on its bonds.

Mr. BLAINE. Why not improve on the English example and make the tax fifty per cent., taking one half?

Mr. COBB. I object to debate.

The question was taken on agreeing to the resolution; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 54, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Baker, Barnes, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boies, Boyer, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Cornell, Covode, Cullom, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, Getz, Golladay, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Hawkins, Hinds, Holman, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Logan, Loughridge, Marshall, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Mercer, Mullins, Munger, Newcomb, Niblack, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Polley, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robinson, Roots, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodward—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Beatty, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Cake, Delano, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Griswold, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hooper, Hulburt, Jenckes, Kelsey, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, William B. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Beaman, Blair, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chanler, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Dawes, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Hill, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Kelley, Ketchum, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Ladin, Lincoln, McCarthy, McCullough, Moore, Morrill, Morrissey, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Pile, Robertson, Schenck, Selye, Thaddeus Stevens, John Trimble, Van Wyck, Ward, and Wood—48.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to have the resolution reconsidered, that it may be amended so as to provide that the tax on interest arising from the bonds may be in lieu of the income tax, and be the same as the tax on private securities.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the yeas and nays on laying on the table the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

RECONSTRUCTION EXPENSES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, asking a further appropriation of $5,000 for reconstruction purposes in the third military district, recommended by Major General Meade; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STOIX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to Indian affairs in the central superintendency, and the immediate necessity of an appropriation to carry out treaty stipulations with certain Sioux Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. McKEE was granted leave of absence for ten days after to-morrow.

Mr. VAN WYCK and Mr. PRUYN were granted leave of absence indefinitely.

Mr. ROBINSON was granted leave of absence on account of ill health.

EXPORTATION OF RUM.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to offer a joint resolution, to correct a mistake in a bill which passed the House and Senate the other day. The mistake was discovered by the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I ask leave to make an explanation. It is a joint resolution (H. R. No. 318) to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the word "and" where it occurs in said act after the word "export" and before the words "actually contracted for" be changed to "or;" so it will read, when corrected, "intended for export or actually contracted for."

Mr. HOLMAN. That seems to be clerical error.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me make a statement. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to state exactly what the matter is. There was a bill passed—

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my objection. I did not understand it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me make a statement, and then any one can object who wants to. The bill passed the House and Senate for the relief of merchants who had on hand or contracted for rum for exportation, but in the course of the passage of the bill the "or" got changed to "and." By the change of the word "or" to "and" it requires the rum shall not only have been distilled but contracted for exportation before the 11th of January. That renders the bill nugatory. It is not worth the parchment on which it is written. The mistake was discovered by the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, [Mr. HOLMAN,] but it was then too late to correct it, except in the way now proposed. It does not open the door to any fraud whatever, but only makes the bill what it was intended to be when it was passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It ought to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree to that reference.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that the mistake was not in the enrollment of the bill, but occurred before that time.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 1341) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1868, and for other purposes, and to move that the bill be made a special order for Thursday next.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If that bill contains any appropriation for extra compensation for clerks in the Departments I must object.

The SPEAKER. The rules in regard to the appropriation bills allow them to include contingencies for carrying on the various Departments of the Government.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Having said that, sir, let me inform the gentleman it does not include any such appropriation. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the House that the one hundred and twentieth rule, which authorizes contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government to be inserted in appropriation bills, has been decided, as will be found on page 14 of the Digest, not only permits amendments increasing salaries, but was framed for that purpose. That in the Digest is the historical comment on the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve any point of order that may properly be made in Committee of the Whole against any item in the bill.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made the special order for Thursday next after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ORTH. I call for the regular order.

The House accordingly resumed the regular order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes. The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. BAKER, to insert the following:

For improvement of harbor of Alton, Illinois, $68,000.

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. In behalf of the delegation from my State I propose to insert the following:

For improvement of the Tennessee river according to the report of the survey made in compliance with the provision of the act of March 2 1867, and the recommendation of the chief of engineers, $615,000.

I ask the attention of the House while I say a word on this amendment. It is offered by the united delegation from the State of Tennessee, the other portions of the country interested in this amendment not being at present represented. The Tennessee river is the sixth on the North American continent; the fourth within the limits of the United States; and, reckoned with its affluents and confluent, the third in extent of its navigation. It is obstructed at the Muscle shoals in northern Alabama. The portion of the river which lies above these shoals drains eastern Tennessee, a portion of eastern Kentucky, southwestern Virginia, western North Carolina, and the northern part of Georgia. The attention of Congress was early directed to this obstruction in the commerce of that vast and fertile region of country. More than forty years ago, under an act passed the 30th of April, 1824, a survey was made and a report was published by General Bernard, a copy of which I hold in my hand. The report concludes as follows:

"1. Were the Tennessee to be made navigable from Waterloo to Brown's ferry, steamboats throughout the year, or at least eight months out of twelve, would be able to navigate the river from its mouth to the Suck; that is to say, for a distance of more than four hundred miles. During the boating season and by means of improvements at some places, steamboats might ascend as far as Kingston, and even Knoxville, about eighteen miles above the Suck.

"2. Exclusively of the valleys of the Holston and French Broad, the extent of country watered by the Tennessee and tributaries may be reckoned at twenty-four thousand square miles, and its population (census of 1820) at two hundred and eighty thousand inhabitants. The fertility of the soil, which is generally a rich limestone clay, and the healthiness of the climate, insure, in time, to these districts a rapid increase of hardy population.

"3. Cotton, hemp, tobacco, and grain of every kind may be deemed the main articles of cultivation; wine and silk have a fair prospect of succeeding; iron, lead, coal, gypsum, and salt are the minerals found in the valley of the Tennessee and its upper branches, the Holston and French Broad. To this great and rich variety of products which, in the present state of navigation, cannot conveniently find a market, must be added valuable timber of various descriptions, which would become an article of extensive trade.

"4. The transportation of these valuable articles of trade is now made in unwieldy flat-boats, which can descend the stream but at the period of freshets. During the remainder of the year, and more especially for the districts above the Muscle shoals, the access to any market is entirely interdicted; and while the population cannot take advantage of the fluctuation of price in the market their products are exposed during transportation to all the extra expenses, losses, deteriorations, and delays inseparable from a tedious and difficult navigation. Consequently these products are virtually of much less value than they would be should the main obstructions of the river be removed.

"5. A convenient navigation by facilitating the exportation would not only cause an increase of products, but also afford to the inhabitants the means of procuring in exchange the articles raised or manufactured in other sections of country; and these articles, by becoming cheaper on account of a less expensive transportation, would fall to a price accessible to a greater number of consumers. At this time the imports into these districts are chiefly made by wagons coming from Nashville, and even when the Ohio is not navigable, from Baltimore and Philadelphia. Hence it is easy to anticipate how much of the expense of such transportation must add to the original cost of the articles; but in order to be more precise on this point, we beg leave to submit here the statement made in 1826, in the very able report of the commissioners appointed by the States of Tennessee and Alabama to examine the Muscle shoals.

"According to said report the transportation from Nashville to Knoxville amounts to fifty dollars per ton; the same weight might be transported from Florence to Knoxville (were the Muscle shoals improved) for fifteen dollars, to which adding five dollars for toll, would make the whole cost twenty dollars, and consequently produce an economy of thirty dollars per ton. Again, the average freight in steamboat from New Orleans to Florence is stated to be twenty-five dollars per ton, from which we infer that by adding to it the twenty dollars for transportation from Florence to Knoxville, forty-five dollars would be the cost of transportation of a ton from New Orleans to Knoxville; that is to say, five dollars less than the actual cost of transportation in wagon from Nashville to Knoxville. Therefore, were the Tennessee improved, the transportation from New Orleans to Knoxville would cost less than from Nashville to Knoxville.

"6. No section of country is better provided than this with numerous and copious never-failing streams, as also with abundance of fuel. None possesses more extensive means to associate agricultural with manufacturing industry; and by ceasing to remain landlocked these districts would acquire a cheap and commodious communication not only with the Gulf of Mexico, but also with the States bordering on the Mississippi and Ohio. They would therefore participate in the benefits derived from external and internal commerce, and contribute their share to the national advantages arising from these two great sources of wealth and revenue.

"7. The country between the Shenandoah and the Holston is favorable to the location either of an easy road or of a railroad. The distance from Port Republic, head of navigation on the former stream, to Knoxville, would be about three hundred and sixty miles. In this direction runs one of the routes examined for a national road from Washington to New Orleans. Should this route be adopted, and the Tennessee improved, the Chesapeake would become connected by water with the Gulf of Mexico, with the exception of the above land communication. Such a connection would be highly beneficial to those rich and fertile districts lying between the Shenandoah and the Holston.

"8. By improving the Tennessee, at the Muscle shoals, the northern parts of Alabama will be open to trade with the States situated on the Ohio and tributaries. The articles of such trade will then be brought into fair competition with those of the same kind raised in East Tennessee.

"9. While the improvement contemplated will cause an increase of exports and imports, encourage the production and afford cheapness to the consumer, this section of country will become provided with many articles of necessity and extensive use, whose expense of freight amounts now nearly to prohibition. Among these is salt, which is sold at the price of $1 36 the bushel; this price would fall one third were it possible to import this article from New Orleans.

"10. Should a safe and commodious navigation be obtained at the Muscle and Colbert's shoals, the value of public and landed properties of North Alabama and East Tennessee would necessarily be raised on account both of increase of trade and facility of exportation.

"11. Finally, the great military advantage which has been pointed out by the board in their reports on a national road from Washington city to New Orleans, in relation to a route through Tennessee, can be with equal force applied to a commodious navigation from Knoxville to the Mississippi. Indeed, through this water communication the States on the Gulf of Mexico might, in case of foreign aggression or internal disturbances, receive a prompt and powerful relief from the hardy and dense population of Tennessee. This consideration will acquire a great weight on reflecting that the black population of those States is daily increasing; and that having on the Gulf no harbor for men-of-war of the first rate, our Navy will be unable to afford to this section of our maritime frontier the same high degree of protection which she can lend to our coast on the Atlantic."

The then President of the United States, Mr. Adams, in his third annual message to Congress, made the following recommendation on that subject:

"All the officers of both corps of engineers, with several other persons duly qualified, have been constantly employed upon these services from the passage of the act of the 30th April, 1824, to this time. Were no other advantage to accrue to the country from their labors than the fund of the topographical knowledge which they have collected and communicated, that alone would have been a profit to the Union more than adequate to all the expenditures which have been devoted to the object; but the appropriations for the repair and continuation of the Cumberland road, for the construction of various other roads, for the removal of obstructions from the rivers and harbors, for the erection of light-houses, beacons, piers, and buoys, and for the completion of canals undertaken by individual associations, but needing the assistance of means and resources more comprehensive than individual enterprise can command, may be considered rather as treasures laid up from the contributions of the present age for the benefit of posterity than as unrequited applications of the accruing revenues of the nation. To such objects of permanent improvement to the condition of the country, of real addition to the wealth as well as to the comfort of the people, by whose authority and resources they have been effected, from three to four million of the annual income of the nation have, by laws enacted at the three first sessions of Congress, been applied without intrenching upon the necessities of the Treasury, without adding a dollar to the taxes or debts of the community; without suspending even the steady and regular discharge of the debts contracted in former days, which, within the same three years, have been diminished by the amount of nearly sixteen million dollars.

Four hundred thousand acres of land were appropriated for this work. It was undertaken and prosecuted with success until a general change took place in the policy of the Government on the subject of internal improvements. Subsequently, during the administration of Mr. Fillmore, $50,000 were appropriated, to be expended between Knoxville and Chattanooga under the direction of the War Department, and the immediate supervision of a board of commissioners, of whom Governor Brownlow was one. Under this appropriation much valuable assistance was afforded to the navigation of that portion of the river; and the works then erected remain to this day in attestation of the wise economy which devoted this sum to their prosecution. The last Congress made an appropriation to have this portion of the river resurveyed. That work was done, and a report was submitted to the House in the latter part of March, and was printed on the 30th April, too late to have it considered by the Committee on Commerce so as to be reported in this bill. I ask the attention of the House to a portion of that report, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The total amount which I recommend to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, for the improvement of the Tennessee river, is therefore $605,000, and for the survey above mentioned, $10,000.

In addition to the many good reasons given in the appended report for making the improvement at this time, and to those which have been given by the many able men who have reported on this subject during the last forty years, there occurs to me that not only would a work be done which should have been done years ago, but which would have repaid the Government a large interest, but that it would be the means of giving a poverty-stricken community an opportunity to recover from the disastrous effects of a war, and give employment to a large class of deserving people who are said to be out of employment.

I am perfectly confident that if the distinguished soldiers who commanded our armies operating along the line of this river, during the late war, would be called upon to testify in this matter, that it would be found that enough money would have been saved to the quartermaster's department by an improved river, in one campaign, to have trebled paid the expense of doing the work."

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, when it was known that this examination had been made the people in that part of the country revived their former interest in the work. They assembled in conventions and prepared numerous signed petitions to Congress; they have sent delegations here, and are more deeply interested in this improvement than in any other industrial question that has engaged their attention for years. I ask the attention of the House to an extract from one of these petitions:

"Recently a survey and estimate of the cost of removing obstructions and completing the unfinished canal at the Muscle shoals has been made in compliance with an act of Congress, by which it was ascertained that the work on the canal at the Muscle shoals, performed thirty-four years ago, is now in a state of almost perfect preservation, and by reference to the report it may be seen that certain obstructions may be removed, and that said canal may be carried on to completion, and thereby establish for eight months in the year a navigation from the mouth of the river to Knoxville for less than $800,000, and that the river can be rendered permanently navigable for the entire year has been fully demonstrated by the survey.

"The Tennessee river is among the forty-six principal navigable streams of North America, the sixth in importance. It is, with its tributaries, more than three thousand miles in length, of which eight hundred miles are navigable, and with the improvements we ask for thirteen hundred miles in addition can be rendered navigable. It drains one hundred counties (situated in the eight States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, and Kentucky) with an area of fifty-five thousand nine hundred and sixty square miles, which now supports a population of one million seven thousand two hundred and ninety-six, as by census of 1860. It traverses a section unsurpassed in the fertility of its soil, salubrity of its climate, and variety of its agricultural and mineral productions, by those of any other part of the United States. It presents to you in addition to these other reasons why it appeals to you for assistance. It is surrounded in a great measure by a cordon of mountain ranges, the wealth and resources of which are but partially developed. These mountain ranges contain coal fields and beds of iron ore more extensive and as valuable as those of Pennsylvania. The beds of iron ore lie contiguous to the coal, affording ready facilities for producing yearly as much iron as that now produced in the whole United States. Mines of copper upon its tributaries rank third in the production of the United States. Limestone, sandstone, grit stone, and marble exist in quantities and qualities exceeded by no other section. Zinc, lead, salt, and petroleum are found. This river drains a section, almost every acre of which is capable of the highest state of cultivation. Three fourths of the surface is in a state of nature, and covered with large-sized trees of those kinds most used for manufacturing purposes. Its water-powers are not equaled by those of any other portion of the United States, combining advantages for manufacturing equal to any other section of the United States. Its central position; its temperate climate the proximity of the cotton States; the proximity of markets; the superabundance of material; the number, excellence, and magnitude of its water-powers; the fertility of its soil, render it capable of being made the central manufacturing district of the United States. It has advantages for the manufacture of iron not enjoyed by any other portion of the United States. Lying contiguous to many thousand square miles of coal fields, inexhaustible beds of iron ore are found. This coal is remarkably free from sulphur, and every other material entering into the manufacture of iron is abundant, all situated in a region of unbroken forests. While nature has been so lavish in its gifts, it has not granted the boon of cheap water transportation. The Tennessee river, this natural highway to market, is closed by natural obstructions at Muscle shoals. It is impossible to develop the natural resources of this section except by the aid of water transportation. Its wealth lies now almost entirely undeveloped. The Government of the United States is alone authorized to open this river, and the interests of the commerce of the whole country demand your speedy assistance."

The following letter has been addressed to me by the Governor of Alabama:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
STATE OF ALABAMA,
MONTGOMERY, June 5, 1868.

SIR: I take the liberty of addressing you upon the subject of removing obstructions from the Tennessee river so as to render that stream navigable from its mouth to Knoxville, Tennessee. This is a question of much importance to extensive sections of country, and is of material interest to your immediate constituents. It is taken for granted, of course, that you fully appreciate the importance of this enterprise. But inasmuch as the interest involved is widespread—not being limited, by any means, to the length of the river itself—I hope to be excused for soliciting your active co-operation in its behalf.

The Muscle shoals between Decatur and Florence, Alabama, form the greatest obstacle to the navigation of this stream. Around these shoals a canal was constructed some twenty-five or thirty years ago. But it was never operated practically, except to a limited extent, for the reason, mainly, that the locks of the canal were of such contracted dimensions that only very small boats could pass through them. The canal, however, is in a well preserved condition, and with a proper enlargement of the locks it might easily be made available for navigable purposes.

I presume that formal petitions have been presented to Congress praying an appropriation for the purpose of opening the river to navigation. This could be done with an amount of money which, to the General Government, would be inconsiderable. To that Government alone can we look for the opening of the river. The success of this enterprise would develop, incalculably, the commercial, mineral, agricultural, and other resources of the regions washed by the river, and greatly contribute to the general prosperity of the country. It is therefore earnestly hoped that the necessary appropriation for the purpose will be made by Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. M. PATTON,
Governor of Alabama.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD, Washington, D. C.

I add a passage from a letter addressed to me by some gentlemen of intelligence living at Kingston, near the confluence of the Tennessee river and the Clinch, one of its largest tributaries:

"This subject is one of the greatest importance to the whole of East Tennessee, and the people are looking anxiously for you to use your utmost endeavors to have the river opened from Knoxville to the Ohio. On this depend the wealth and future prosperity of the entire section, for, as you well know, it will be the only really available means of transportation for the vast amount of coal and iron with which East Tennessee abounds, and if we can succeed in getting the proper appropriations we can then offer such inducements to capitalists and laborers to immigrate that the now nearly uninhabited mountains and valleys of East Tennessee will be filled with thriving manufacturing towns and villages."

I am kindly permitted to use a letter addressed to my excellent friend from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING:]

CLEVELAND, June 23, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Thinking that possibly, amid the many matters requiring your attention on your return to Washington, you might forget to examine the matter which formed the subject of a conversation I had with you at Newark, I have concluded to call your attention to the same by letter. I observe in this morning's paper that the citizens of St. Louis and Cincinnati, through their respective Boards of Trade, have instructed their Representatives to use their influence in obtaining an appropriation to improve the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. I infer from this moment that Congress is about to consider the matter of making internal improvements. Although personally interested in the improvement of the Tennessee river, I would not urge an appropriation for that purpose did I not entertain the opinion, founded on information obtained from my own observations, made during frequent visits to that section since the war, that whatever expense may be necessary to make that river navigable from its mouth to the fork of the Clinch would very soon be returned to the Government.

You will, I think, find on examining the surveys and estimates of those who have made them through the appropriations made last year, that the expense of making the kind of improvements required will be small considering the extent of country and the number of people to be benefited by it. Because of Muscle shoals and a few other obstructions above, from twelve to fourteen hundred miles of the river, although navigable at almost all seasons of the year, prove of little benefit to the country. The finest iron ore mines and coal fields in the country skirting the shores of this river and its tributaries demand no higher price than the land will bring for agricultural purposes. And although the valley of the Tennessee is as remarkable for agricultural purposes as for its mineral wealth, notwithstanding, for the want of cheap transportation of its product to market, its value and selling price are wonderfully low.

I know of no internal improvement so much needed, nor one that would make as satisfactory returns.

The people to be especially benefited are the loyal East Tennesseans and the northern Alabamians. The people of no other portion of the country suffered as much on account of their loyalty to the Government as these, and there seems to be no better way of recognizing that loyalty or a more substantial way of rewarding them, than by making this improvement.

But I will not occupy your time with a more extended statement. From other sources at your command you will be able to obtain such information as you may desire to enable you to form an opinion.

I remain, truly, yours,
WILLIAM J. BOARDMAN.
Hon. R. P. SPALDING, Washington, D. C.

I hope this amendment will prevail.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise to oppose the amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] is correct in saying that in the act of March 2, 1867, there was an order for a survey of the Tennessee river, or else it was in a separate resolution, I am not quite sure which. That survey has been made, and I hold the report in my hand with a letter from the Secretary of War. The report did not come to the Committee on Commerce until after the bill had been prepared. But if it had, it would have been entirely impossible for an appropriation to have been recommended such as is now offered. From the mouth of the Tennessee river at Paducah to Florence, in Alabama, there is a distance of four hundred and thirty-six miles; from Decatur, in Alabama, to Chattanooga, the other bend of the river, is a distance of one hundred and eighty-six miles. That covers the whole length of the river, excepting ninety from Florence to Decatur.

Now, sir, of this appropriation of $600,000, as I understand it, about four hundred thousand dollars would be wanted on the ninety miles distance between Florence and Decatur for the purpose of constructing a canal, which very possibly it may be right to do one of these days, but which, it seems to the committee, it would not be right to recommend at this time. Now, I have no doubt, from the report which I have and after a conference with the engineers at the War Department, that there ought to be an appropriation made for the purpose of the Tennessee river, and I propose to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee by substituting for it the following:

To improve the Tennessee river from its mouth to Florence, Alabama, $15,000.
To improve the river from Chattanooga, Tennessee, to Decatur, Alabama, $90,000.

That will give to this river the benefit of all the improvement that is reasonably called for excepting that between Florence and Decatur, which I think ought to be the subject of further examination. I will say that upon conference with the Committee on Commerce my amendment meets with their approval, excepting that of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN:] and I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that it will be better for him to accept the amendment which I offer, and withdraw the larger one which he has offered.

Mr. STOKES. I wish to make an appeal to my colleague, [Mr. MAYNARD.] I ask him to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman who has charge of this bill in behalf of the Committee on Commerce. After having canvassed the whole matter I am satisfied that it is for the best interest of the country and for the people upon the line of the river, and I ask my colleague to accept the proposition.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is an old adage down in my country that my friend understands the meaning of, that "half a loaf is better than no bread." I yield to his appeal that I shall accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] and I hope in that shape it will be conceded to us.

Mr. MULLINS. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation $10,000, and I do it for the purpose of making a few remarks. The people most interested in the improvement of this river are those living above Chattanooga. To be sure it is a densely populated stream from there to its mouth, but that portion of the country that lies adjacent to my district is immediately interested in that obstruction which is known as the Muscle shoals. This river is one of those streams that gives water at all seasons of the year. There is, perhaps, but the fewest number of streams in any portion of the country south that give a greater volume of water than the Tennessee river gives. But until the obstruction known as the Muscle shoals is overcome navigation both above and below cannot be considered as anything like complete. The greatest detriment to the navigation of that stream from its lead to its mouth is known to be the Muscle shoals. That is a point in the stream where it breaks through the spurs of the Cumberland mountains, or an offshoot of the Cumberland mountains. The river is obstructed by many boulders lying there, incalculable in size, so as to make it almost unnavigable at some seasons of the year, while even at the highest tide it is very difficult for a steamboat to go up and down. The main point is a canal around the Muscle shoals. An appropriation was made for that purpose some time ago, and some work was done. But a spirit got into the party, and it became almost ignored by the General Government. However, before that species of political legislation got up, they went on to cut that canal, and they walled it up in part, and I am informed by the gentleman who superintended its survey that the stone work which was done there is as good a character of work as ever was done on the continent. Many of the trees which have grown up on the bank of that canal have lifted up the mason work; but it stands there now, the stones cemented fast together, although lifted up from the base, and a very small amount more will complete the work so that navigation will be open from the mouth of the river to its head. Its heads and its tributaries have already been indicated by my colleague [Mr. MAYNARD] who moved an amendment to this bill. There is no country and no people who have been more necessitated to have an appropriation made for relief, both above and below, than of this section. It lies immediately upon my southern border. I cannot for one moment's time hesitate to return thanks to the gentleman in charge of this bill for even this little amount. It is better than no appropriation at all, of course. At the same time it may go far to keep all hands employed for a time, and relieve them to some extent. But the great burden is the Muscle shoals. You only want to sink the canal a little deeper; it never was sunk deep enough; a little further depth will give ingress and egress.

Mr. MULLINS. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. MAYNARD, as modified, was then agreed to.

The Clerk then read as follows:

For improvement of the Upper Mississippi river and removing snags and dredging, $60,000.

For construction of dam and lock at Little Falls, Minnesota river, $30,000.

For improvement of the Des Moines rapids, $900,000.

For improvement of the Rock Island rapids, $200,000.

For improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi river, $100,000.

For improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas rivers, $135,000.

For improvement of the upper Missouri river, $60,000.

For improvement of the Illinois river, from its mouth toward La Salle, $100,000.

For improvement of the Ohio river, $250,000.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to add to the last clause read the following:

Of which a sum not exceeding $20,000 may be applied, under the discretion of the Secretary of War, in experimenting upon and testing the value of shifting sluices and other applicability to the said improvement.

This amendment is offered on account of the change in the character of navigation on the Ohio river. Formerly, during low water, by means of wing-dams, the water was thrown into a narrow channel, where a single steamboat could pass through. These wing-dams now prove to be obstructions to a large fleet of coal boats that are required by the manner in which business is now conducted. By the ingenuity of some of our engineers out there a plan has been devised by which these wing-dams can be shifted or sunk when occasion requires, so that boats can run over them. Colonel Roberts, civil engineer in charge of the improvements on the Ohio river, thinks the plan very important and of great value. I do not ask for any increase of the appropriation, but only that a certain portion of it, under the discretion of the Secretary of War, may be used in making these experiments. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] showed an amendment to me, stating that he proposed to offer it, and desiring that I would make no objection to it. It was altered at my instance so as to leave the expenditure of the money for the purpose of making these experiments discretionary with the Secretary of War. I cannot assent to the amendment, for the reason that I do not know enough about the character of the appropriation asked for to be able to say whether the Secretary of War ought to be directed in any way to appropriate a portion of this money in the manner proposed. The estimate from the Department for the improvement of the Ohio river was $500,000; and the engineers called for the expenditure of $500,000 during this coming fiscal year. The committee have cut down the expenditure asked for one half, recommending an appropriation of $250,000. Now, the object of this amendment is to apply a portion of that appropriation to the point named by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORHEAD.] It may be all right; I do not know that it is not; but I do not know that it is; and it seems to me that it would be incorporating into the bill a provision different from any now contained in it, if in the case of a general appropriation of this kind the Secretary of War should be directed to apply a specific part of the money to a designated point. But if the matter is left discretionary with him the objection may be obviated.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I modify my amendment so as to make the amount $18,000. I must say that after the conversation which I had with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] I am very much astonished at the remarks he has just made. If the House has listened to my remarks I think there can be no objection to the proposition that the engineer in charge of this improvement may, under the direction of the Secretary of War, if he deems it advisable, use this money, or any portion of it, in devising a system which we think will be worth millions in the improvement of our western rivers. I, in company with some other gentlemen, examined this matter in the office of Colonel Roberts, the engineer, who told me that he did not know that he could expend the money to make this experiment unless there should be a direction of this kind from the engineer department, or a provision inserted in this bill. I hope that the amendment, as I have modified it, will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HINDS. I ask unanimous consent to go back and move an amendment, inserting after line ninety-six the words "provided, that an equal amount be expended in improving each of said rivers;" so that the clause will read—

For improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas rivers, $135,000: Provided, That an equal amount be expended in improving each of said rivers.

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot consent to go back to allow that amendment to be offered. The matter is now properly left discretionary with the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Line ninety-six having been passed, an amendment to that part of the bill is not in order without unanimous consent; and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] objects.

Mr. HINDS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Globe a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Arkansas on this subject.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the constitutional convention of the State of Arkansas, respectfully represent that the Arkansas river, during the season of low water, is so obstructed by snags and sand-bars as to render the navigation difficult and hazardous; but that by the appropriation and proper outlay of a small sum of money the said river, between the points designated, could be rendered navigable during the entire season, and would open a thoroughfare of inland communication to a rich agricultural district, facilitate the transportation of the mails, and afford to the settlements embraced in the country tributary to the Arkansas the speedy development of the various resources of that section of the country, abounding in lumber, agricultural, and mineral wealth, besides affording facilities for reaching the trade and exchange of the Indian country west, and affording to the Government a more speedy access to that region.

Your memorialists, therefore, ask that an appropriation of $100,000 be made for the improvement of said river. And your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend by inserting after line one hundred and two the following:

For the improvement of the Wabash river and its navigable tributaries, $50,000.

Mr. Speaker, after the disposition already manifested by the House, I cannot entertain much hope that it will appropriate a very large amount of money for the improvement of internal rivers; but if any appropriation is to be made for any river I submit that the Wabash is as much entitled to an appropriation as any other river that has been named in the bill. It furnishes the means of transportation for portions of two States, the States of Indiana and Illinois. White river is an important tributary to it, and is also navigable for boats of all classes during a portion of the year. There are some slight obstructions in the Wabash river and its tributaries, which the amount of money I have indicated would partially remove. This is to open up these rivers for the purposes of commerce; and if we are to extend our commerce by opening up our rivers to the ordinary class of vessels, at least, I do submit the Wabash river is as much entitled to the consideration of Congress as any other stream mentioned in this bill, aside from the Ohio and Mississippi. I offer the amendment in good faith, and if we vote for any this one should be adopted.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise to oppose the amendment. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, we could not pass a bill of this description acceptable to a majority of the House unless on some principle. Now, there has been no examination made, there has been no survey, there have been no estimates, and we should move in the dark as to the character and mode of this proposed improvement; and, sir, there is no mortal man on this floor who has the authority to say how much is wanted and how it could be best carried on. I hope the gentleman from Indiana, who, by the way, has not been friendly to this bill, if he desires there should be a recommendation in favor of it, will have it included in the fourth section of the bill, and have it examined. It would be utterly impossible to adopt the amendment offered by him without destroying the character of the bill. I say without hesitation, if improvements of this description, without recommendation from the War Department, should be put upon the bill by those who are unfriendly to it, I should feel myself constrained to ask the House to postpone it to a future time.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move to strike out "Wabash" and insert "Embarras."

Mr. GARFIELD. That will embarrass the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROMWELL. It is the bill itself which will embarrass the country. [Renewed laughter.] If the public Treasury is now to be poured out upon the little streams in all the byways and places of the country, then the Embarras river should not be neglected. It connects two districts. It flows out of my district into that of my colleague's, [Mr. MARSHALL,] both Radical districts; mine radically Republican and his radically Democratic, and it will make a bond of union between them. [Laughter.] If rivers hardly navigable require improvement how much more the Embarras, which never has been navigable and never will be unless something is done for it. [Renewed laughter.] As it is now a steamboat could barely turn round in the Embarras river, and all the more necessity for improving it. Why not just as well spend our time in digging new rivers as in patching up old bars and making new harbors where there is just barely a pretense of commercial advantage? [Laughter.]

I know it is said that these appropriations are for the benefit of works already begun. The idea of continuing works already begun which are of no public value upon the ground that it is to save money is as bad as a man taking the medicine he has left over after recovering in order not to lose it. [Renewed laughter.] We are spending millions of dollars every year to very little purpose; and now when the country is embarrassed, when we feel the pressure in the West as we have not felt it since 1837, I do think we ought to confine our appropriations to works of the greatest public utility.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is the Embarras river a good place for harbors?

Mr. BROMWELL. It is one hundred miles long, and in every crook of it you can dig out a good harbor.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Are you for the Wabash river improvement?

Mr. BROMWELL. I am for the Wabash, but I do not want the Embarras neglected and overlooked. The amendment is offered upon the principle which moves gentlemen here. It is the best river I have in my district, and I must speak for some. [Laughter.] If the House does not adopt my amendment I hope it will at least strike out all of the others, or at least provide for the improvement of the Embarras river at some future time. It was once declared navigable by the Illinois Legislature, [laughter,] and in order to make that good I feel bound, as a Representative from that State, to call upon the United States to dig it out and put it in a condition for boating. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELIOT. I rise to oppose the amendment, and ask for a vote.

The amendment of Mr. BROMWELL to the amendment of Mr. NIBLACK was disagreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

For the improvement of the navigation of Salt river, that the dreary passage up the rapid and turbulent waters of this great national highway may be rendered less grievous to the motley crowd of involuntary exiles, who, about November next, will be seeking "some sequestered spot" where a "white man's Government" may be maintained in its purity, and for whose benefit in carrying out so laudable an enterprise a four years' leave of absence has been unconditionally granted, $10,000.

Mr. ELIOT. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains it. The amendment is not germane.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. NIBLACK; and it was disagreed to—ayes twenty-eight, noes not counted.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise to close debate on the pending section. It seems to me the House has signified its disposition in reference to these appropriations.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion at this point.

Mr. ELIOT. It will not cut off amendments; only debate.

Mr. PHELPS. That is the very thing I object to.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that debate on the pending section be closed.

Mr. PHELPS. Will that prevent me from making an explanation of an amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the motion is agreed to it will.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which debate was closed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to move an amendment after the one hundredth line.

The SPEAKER. That has been passed; the House is now considering the one hundred and second line.

Mr. ROSS. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment which I think will be satisfactory to the House.

Mr. ORTH. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

For improvement of the Patapsco river, below Fort McHenry, $30,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to increase the amount to $75,000. I ask leave to make an explanation.

Mr. SPALDING. I object, unless it shall be open to debate to the whole House.

The amendment of Mr. PHELPS was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement of the Susquehanna river, $10,000.
For improvement of the Hudson river, New York, $100,000.

For removing obstructions in East river, including Hell Gate, $300,000.

For improvement of Westport harbor, Connecticut, $10,000.

For improvement of Connecticut river, Connecticut, $20,000.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to increase the last appropriation to $40,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For removal of Middle Rock, New Haven, Connecticut, $15,000.

For improvement of Pawtucket harbor, $8,000.

For improvement of Plymouth harbor, Massachusetts, $15,000.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to insert "For improvement of harbors at Cuttyhunk and Tarpaulin Cove, in Massachusetts, $100,000." There will be no objection to that I presume.

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly there is objection. They are in my district.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction and preservation of sea-walls at Great Browster Island, $10,000.

For building walls and improvements at Deer and Lovell's Islands, in Boston harbor, $10,000.

For preservation and improvement of Boston harbor, $109,000.

For improvement of Taunton river, Massachusetts, $13,000.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I offer the following amendment, and I will state that it has been agreed upon by the Committee on Commerce:

At the end of line one hundred and twenty-eight insert the following:

For completion of the breakwater connecting Richmond Island and Cape Elizabeth, Maine, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement of Saco river, Maine, $20,000.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk then read as follows:

For improvement of Kennebec river, Maine, $3,000.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the only modest appropriation in the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. If the gentleman is not satisfied, we will strike it out if he wishes it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that motion?

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement of Penobscot river, Maine, $30,000.

Mr. ROOTS. I offer the following amendment, to come in after that clause:

For improvement of White river, in Arkansas, $78,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Would it be in order to go back to the preceding paragraph and move to strike out "$3,000" and insert "twelve and a half cents?"

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to go back.

Mr. PAINE. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman to go back for that purpose.

Mr. ELIOT. I object to going back.

Mr. BLAINE. It is very magnanimous on the part of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] who has got millions in this bill for his State.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman misunderstands me.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

Mr. McKEE. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the paragraph last read:

For the improvement of the navigation of the Big Sandy river between Kentucky and West Virginia, $20,000; and for said river above Louisa, $15,000 additional.

I wish to say that this river runs between two States.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk then read as follows:

For improvement of navigation at the "Gut," opposite Bath, Maine, $16,500.

For improvement of Union river, Maine, $2,000.

For construction of breakwater at Block island, Rhode Island, $74,000.

For improvement of Willamette river, Oregon, $25,000.

For removal of Blossom Rock, in the harbor of San Francisco, $60,000.

For survey of northwestern lakes, $75,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to strike out that last paragraph, $75,000 for survey of northwestern lakes. It is in another bill, the deficiency bill.

Mr. ELIOT. In answer to that I will say that this sum is needed as well as that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Seventy-five thousand dollars is enough.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken on Mr. WASHBURN'S motion, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For examination and surveys on western and northwestern rivers, $125,000.

For examination and surveys on the Atlantic coast, $30,000.

For examination and surveys on the Pacific coast, $25,000.

For purchase and repair of instruments, $5,000.

No further amendments were offered to the first section; and the second section was read, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall apply the sums herein appropriated for other purposes than for examination and survey, by contract, in all cases when, in his judgment, the same can be judiciously and economically so applied: Provided, That on the recommendation of the general commanding the corps of engineers, such sums may be otherwise applied so as best to subserve the interests of the Government, having regard to the most economical use of the moneys appropriated, in all cases where the sums required for any specific work shall not exceed $15,000. And the Secretary of War shall prescribe suitable rules for the issuing of proposals for materials or labor, having regard to the most effective use of moneys appropriated: Provided, That separate proposals and contracts shall be required in all cases when the same can be, in the judgment of the Secretary, judiciously and properly made.

No amendment was offered; and the Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $450,000 is hereby appropriated toward completing the Louisville and Portland canal, in accordance with the plans and estimates made in the report of General Godfrey Weitzel, and that the Government of the United States do hereby assume the payment of the bonds issued for the completion of the said canal and branch, amounting to the sum of $1,567,000: Provided, That all title to and right in said canal and its appurtenances be ceded to and vested in the United States, and that the State of Kentucky shall relinquish all claim to the government of the same; said canal on and after its completion to be and remain free from all tolls and tribute except so much as shall be necessary to operate the same and keep it in repair, and that all moneys in the hands of the treasurer of the canal company, when transferred, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to strike out that section. It ought to be stricken out.

Mr. GROVER. Mr. Speaker, the section of the bill under consideration appropriates $450,000 toward the completion of the Louisville and Portland canal; and provides for the assumption of the payment by the Government of the bonds issued for the completion of said canal, amounting to the sum of $1,567,000, and a cession on the part of the corporation and the State of Kentucky of said canal and its appurtenances to the United States.

The question is, Should Congress make the appropriation on the terms proposed? Should Congress make the appropriation and a further appropriation hereafter of $450,000, the estimated cost of completing the enlargement of the canal, the Government will become the owner in its own right of the entire work.

The Louisville and Portland canal was completed in December, 1830, by a company chartered by the State of Kentucky. The Government was a stockholder to the amount of two thousand three hundred and thirty-five shares, costing $233,500.

In 1831 the Government received five hundred and sixty-seven shares more in lieu of dividends. Between 1831 and 1842 it received $257,778 in cash from the dividends declared by the company; so that at the end of twelve years the Government received $24,278 in cash, and five hundred and sixty-seven shares in stock more than it invested in the canal, and was still owner of two thousand nine hundred and two shares in the canal, valued at $290,200; thus receiving $547,978 for its original investment in the canal.

From 1842 up to date no dividends have been declared, the net income of the canal up to 1859 being devoted to the purchase of stock owned by private individuals, (said stock being held in trust by the board of directors;) and since 1859 to the enlargement and extension of the canal and to create a sinking fund for paying the bonds which were issued by the company to defray the expenses of said work.

In 1860 this enlargement and extension were begun on plans submitted by Mr. T. R. Scowden, a civil engineer of experience and reputation, and stopped in 1866 for want of funds, after $1,825,403 23 had been expended for lands and work on the improvement, thus making the cost of the canal, as it stands, $2,825,403 23.

But in case the Government assumes the payment of the bonded indebtedness of the company it will be upon the following assumptions of payment. The bonded indebtedness of the company is as follows:

370 bonds due in 1871.....	$370,000
399 bonds due in 1876.....	399,000
398 bonds due in 1881.....	398,000
400 bonds due in 1886.....	400,000

The five shares of stock are $100 dollars each. There is on hand, to the credit of the sinking fund, a balance of $217,453 70; so that no part of the debt of the company so assumed will fall due before 1871, at which time the bonds, amounting to the sum of $370,000, fall due; $399,000 fall due in 1876; $398,000 in 1881; and $400,000 in 1886. But, by the terms of the third section of the bill under consideration, when the proposed transfer shall be made all moneys in the hands of the treasurer of the canal company shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, which amount on the 16th December, 1867, equaled the sum of $217,453 70; and there is no reason to believe that amount has been diminished, or will be, but rather increased during the current years. Accurate tests for a period of more than twenty years establish the fact that navigation over the falls of the Ohio is interrupted by that natural obstruction nine months and nine days in the year, leaving but two months and twenty-one days during the entire year when the falls of the Ohio can be passed by unobstructed navigation.

Let it be remembered that the Ohio river and its tributaries drain the whole of parts of ten States of the Union, the great granary of the country, the Egypt of the nation, and is one of the most important in a system, giving eighteen thousand miles of navigable water.

The tabular statement annexed, derived from sources believed to be entirely authentic, and mainly from the census of 1860, presents in a condensed form the extent of navigable waters, number of population, and amount of transportation of the fourteen States lying on the banks of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers:

"The States lying on the banks of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, fourteen in number, had, by the census of 1860, a population of 16,909,494, or more than half the whole population of the United States; and these two rivers have a coast line of 36,098 miles, while the coast of the Atlantic is 2,163 miles, and the Gulf of Mexico 1,764 miles, and of the Pacific 1,343 miles, on a line of 21,354 miles, including bays and indentations.

"These rivers drain an area of 1,785,267 square miles, more than half of the whole 3,601,002 square miles in the United States; and these fourteen States, in 1860, contained 94,402,869 of the 163,110,720 improved acres, and 126,703,393 of the 244,101,818 unimproved acres of the whole United States; and the valuation of property in these fourteen States shows $3,467,511,274 of the whole valuation of the United States—$10,077,358,715; showing very conclusively that these fourteen States pay more than half the taxes, work more than half of the improved land, have the majority of the population, and also the majority of the land to develop, of the whole United States.

"By the census of 1860, the whole product of the United States was valued at $1,900,000,000, while the foreign exports of the domestic produce were only $373,189,274, or less than one fifth of the whole product, leaving four fifths for exchange in domestic commerce between the States.

"The proportion of the whole product afforded by these fourteen States we speak for may be judged by the returns of their produce, gathered from the census of 1860, and compared with the whole United States, as follows:

	The fourteen States.	The whole United States.
Corn, bushels.....	634,454,375	838,792,740
Wheat, bushels.....	125,930,730	173,104,924

It will be perceived that the foregoing statement does not include the salt, the iron and other ores, the timber and lumber which annually float upon the bosoms of these mighty rivers, and the tonnage of which is, perhaps, greater than that of all other articles of transportation combined.

The total tonnage owned in the United States is returned in the census of 1860 at 5,353,868 tons, and the portion belonging to the fourteen States at 996,266 tons; but it is estimated by competent parties that the transportation on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers for the year 1866 equaled 7,905,216 tons, evincing the activity in domestic commerce of these river States, which commerce is yet in its infancy, as daily developments do most certainly show, and demonstrating that from these States has and must come the most of the food supply of the whole nation, and for export including the supply of the gold and silver States now so largely and rapidly developing upon the tributaries of these waters.

By reference to the report on the Louisville and Portland canal, Fortieth Congress, second session, the following summary appears:

"It [the Louisville and Portland canal] is a work designed to obviate the principal obstruction in the navigation of the Ohio river, upon the construction and management of which has been expended, in the various forms of outlay, an aggregate of $6,500,000, two thirds of which sum have been derived from a tax on the commerce of the West, collected in the form of tolls; and yet for the completion of which Congress is now called upon for $1,000,000; a work that has been before one or both branches of the national Legislature, in some form or other, nearly every session for more than forty years, and yet with reference to which so little appears to be known to-day by intelligent members that legislation, without the special communication of information, would move almost wholly in the dark."

The same report shows that the present rate of hauling freight from the Portland wharf to the Louisville wharf, and vice versa, is one dollar per ton. Present rate of passing freight by the Louisville and Portland canal fifty cents per ton; and the supposed rate of passing freight by the canal after its completion and free use except as to the collection of tolls enough to operate it and keep it in good repair, ten cents per ton.

It is the matured judgment of those who are believed to know that the amount of freight transported on the Ohio river in the year 1867, including rafts of timber and lumber, equaled 3,733,420 tons; that the average distance to which said freight was carried was five hundred and sixty-seven miles; to transport which would require thirty-five railroads three hundred miles long, running four heavily-laden trains each day.

It is suggested that the enlargement of the canal upon the basis proposed would reduce the price of freight at least ten cents per hundred pounds upon the Ohio and her tributaries, thereby saving to the people of the United States in one year from freights alone a sum much greater than the cost of completing the entire work of the enlargement of the canal and liquidating the existing debt. Louisville, that great commercial center which I have the honor to represent upon this floor, located, as it is, at the head of this great natural barrier to the navigation of the Ohio, will gain nothing of advantage, but perhaps be loser financially by the proposed enlargement of the canal and transfer of its franchises to the Government of the United States. But, rising above selfish considerations, Louisville does not object; while the great State whose commercial center she is, the whole of the great West and Northwest, as well as the best interests of the entire Union, imperatively demand the adoption of the third section of the bill now before the House for consideration.

During his remarks Mr. GROVER moved pro forma to increase the appropriation $50,000, for the purpose of concluding his speech.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 522) to authorize the Commissioner of the Revenue to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 316) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) directing the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever any State shall have been or may be in default for the payment of interest or principal on investments in its stocks or bonds held by the United States in trust, to retain moneys due to such State from the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence, after Wednesday next, was granted to Mr. HOTCHKISS.

Leave of absence for ten days, after Wednesday next, was granted to Mr. MURGEN.

Leave of absence for ten days, after to-day, was granted to Mr. BROOKS.

WAR DEBT OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs House bill No. 649, to provide for the settlement of the war debt of New Mexico, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GARFIELD also moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of a memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, asking indemnity for property destroyed by Indians, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ELLA M. GUY.

Mr. GARFIELD also moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Ella M. Guy, praying relief for supplies furnished the United States Army, under the command of Lieutenant General Grant, in 1862, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the river and harbor bill, the third section being under consideration.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. GROVER.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I am sorry there has been made a motion to strike out this section in relation to the Louisville and Portland canal. I am also sorry that the motion was made by my colleague, [Mr. SPALDING,] who enjoys one of the finest harbors on the lakes, and made so by Government appropriations. It is now in perfect order. He is from the northern part of the State, while this section relates to an improvement a little further south, and below the boundaries of the State of Ohio. I hope my colleague, after hearing the debate on the subject, will withdraw his motion.

Mr. SPALDING. Does not this section contemplate purchasing a work from a private company?

Mr. EGGLESTON. No, sir; and that shows how much the gentleman knows about the matter.

Mr. SPALDING. Is not this canal the property of a private company?

Mr. EGGLESTON. It is not; and I am glad the gentleman has asked the question. If the gentleman will call for Miscellaneous Document No. 88—my five minutes' time will not allow it to be read—he will find that the Louisville and Portland canal to-day belongs to the United States, except $500 owned by five individuals, who have that much stock in order to enable them to become directors of the company. In the year 1855 the accounts between the United States and this canal were balanced. By examining the document I have referred to it will be found that the United States have received $24,278 more than it ever invested there. Then they owned the canal, and it is free and clear, except enough belonging to these five individuals to enable them to manage its affairs. From 1855 down to 1860 these directors managed the canal economically and accumulated some three or four hundred thousand dollars. How was that obtained? By putting a toll upon the commerce of the great Ohio valley fifty cents per ton upon the tonnage that passed through the canal. In 1860 the company had accumulated in the neighborhood of three hundred thousand dollars. Between 1860 and 1860 they frequently came to Congress and asked Congress to do something with the work. Nothing could be done up to 1860. On the 24th of May, 1860, the Congress of the United States passed a resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the president and directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company be, and they are hereby, authorized, with the revenues and credits of the company, to enlarge the said canal, and to construct a branch canal from a suitable point on the south side of the present canal to a point on the Ohio river, opposite Sand Island, sufficient to pass the largest class of steam vessels navigating the Ohio river: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize said president or directors, directly or indirectly, to use or pledge the faith or credit of the United States for the said enlargement or construction, it being hereby expressly declared that the Government of the United States shall not be in any manner liable for said enlargement or construction: Provided further, That when said canal is enlarged, and its branch canal is constructed, and its cost of said improvement paid for, no more tolls shall be collected than an amount sufficient to keep the canal in repair, and pay, for all necessary superintendence and management."

Mr. EGGLESTON. In accordance with that resolution the directors of that canal company borrowed $1,567,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROVER. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, obtained the floor.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me, that I may conclude my remarks. He can obtain the floor afterward.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I renew the amendment to the amendment. Mr. Speaker, according to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GROVER] these bonds will come due in equal amounts in 1871, 1876, 1881, and 1886. By this section of the bill the Government assumes the payment of the bonds. General Weitzel was ordered by the Secretary of War, under a resolution of Congress, to make a survey and ascertain the cost of the enlargement of the canal. General Weitzel reports that it will cost $900,000 to make the enlargement. The company will be compelled to go on and do this work, if we do not make this appropriation. Now, Mr. Speaker, the five gentlemen who have charge of the canal—

Mr. SPALDING. Do they not own the work?

Mr. EGGLESTON. They do not own the work. The Government owns it.

Mr. SPALDING. They have the control of it.

Mr. EGGLESTON. No, they have not the control of it. The Government can take it out of their hands whenever it may please. With the same propriety the gentleman might say that the Secretary of War owns this Government because he has charge of the War Department.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be diverted from my argument. These five individuals have no personal interest in this work. The Government of the United States owns the canal. We propose in this bill that the Government shall take charge of the canal, pay off the indebtedness, and finish the enlargement, so that the largest boats may go through.

Now, sir, I desire for a few minutes the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I ask that gentleman why he should oppose the improvement of the canal around the falls at Louisville, when Congress has granted an appropriation to improve the rapids at Des Moines? If, when we made the appropriation for the Des Moines rapids, the appropriation for the Louisville canal had been proposed, I know the gentleman would not have undertaken to oppose the latter appropriation. But when I brought the subject up before the Committee on Commerce it was said, "There has been no survey." So I had to content myself with going before the Department and asking a survey, which, under a resolution of Congress, has now been made. We now come and ask this Congress to do for the Louisville canal just what it did for the canal around the Des Moines rapids. When the canal around the Des Moines rapids is completed the navigation is to be free. Yet, when boats traversing the Ohio river pass through the Louisville canal they must pay a toll of fifty cents per ton. And the chairman of the Committee on Commerce proposes that this state of things shall continue. I know he would not have made such a proposition in the Thirty-Ninth Congress when the appropriation for the Des Moines rapids was asked.

Without going into the figures I undertake to say that three steamboats pass through the canal or over the falls at Louisville for every one that passes around the falls or over the rapids at Des Moines. Yet the gentleman from Illinois would have us strike out this provision for the Louisville canal. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be done. I trust we shall not continue to tax the commerce of fifteen States to sustain this work which should be made free by the action of the General Government. I trust we shall not inflict the injustice proposed upon the commerce of the Ohio river.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. I am opposed to this section, not because of the "economical streak" which the gentleman says has come over me particularly at this time, but for various other reasons. In the first place, this is a section which has no business in this bill. It has no proper place in a river and harbor bill. It is a matter belonging expressly to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and to that committee the subject should have been referred for examination and for full and elaborate report. If the matter had been referred to that committee it could not have been "log-rolled" with the river and harbor bill which we have now before us.

Now, sir, I am opposed to it, not only because it is not right in this place, but I am opposed to it because it takes from the Treasury $450,000 and assumes an indebtedness of $1,567,000, demanding of us here, who represent the people, under a five-minutes debate to add over two million dollars to the burdens of the already oppressed people of this country. Yes, sir, in a five-minutes debate, without any report from the Committee on Commerce, going over this whole subject, we propose to buy this canal from the State of Kentucky and tax our constituents for that purpose in a section of seventeen lines. Why, sir, if this should pass at all it is a subject which should have been most thoroughly considered, most thoroughly and elaborately provided for in a bill by itself, and previously a commission should have been appointed to examine into the whole subject and report to Congress. But, sir, that was not considered necessary. It was supposed if they got it into a bill with seventy-five or eighty other items, in which every section was interested, it would go through, as I presume it will go through this House.

Mr. MUNGEN rose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I cannot yield now.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to my friends on this side of the House—I know my friends on the other side may go for these appropriations—that we are piling up wrath against the day of wrath at the hands of the people. We are responsible for it, and no man on this side of the House who votes for these extravagant appropriations can go home without being called upon to defend himself from votes of this character.

What, sir, is proposed here? Look at the bill before the House. It is to carry on works already begun—at least it is so advocated. What is this here? For a breakwater at Block Island, Rhode Island, $74,000, a new work entirely, and yet in this haste we of the West are called upon now to initiate these new works in the East. I am willing to go as far as any man in this direction. I am in favor of protecting our commerce and clearing out the rivers where these are national works; but, sir, I am opposed to taking money out of my constituents' pockets for the purpose of building a harbor for lumbermen in the district of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] I am opposed to such appropriations. We have some meritorious works provided for in this bill, and therefore I have voted against laying the bill upon the table, hoping that we may so adjust it as to secure all our votes in its favor.

Mr. GROVER. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CARY. I renew it.

Mr. Chairman, whatever may be thought of other appropriations in this bill, there can be no improvement more national in its character or more far-reaching in its results than this.

Not those only who live on the borders of the Ohio, which is navigable for over one thousand miles, but those on the upper and lower Mississippi and its tributaries, who require the manufactures of Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and the countless cities and villages on either side of the Ohio—those who use lumber, coal, iron, and salt—those who consume the grains and fruits and vegetables so abundantly produced along this great highway of commerce, require that this obstruction should be removed. The commerce of the Ohio the past year, two thirds of which must pass the falls at Louisville, amounted to $898,000,000. There are upon this river (without including some large boats which never get above the falls) three hundred and sixty-six steamboats and ninety-one model barges, with a capacity of 183,372 tons. They make an average of eighteen trips per annum, transporting 3,300,696 tons of merchandise. By reason of the limited length of the present locks boats of only eight hundred tons capacity can pass through—by the enlargement of the canal to correspond with the new locks now completed and ready for use boats of a capacity of thirty-two hundred tons will be accommodated. These eight hundred ton boats are now necessarily constructed solely with reference to capacity, and all advantages of models, so as to secure speed, are sacrificed. By the enlargement of the canal the tonnage capacity of the boats may be quadrupled, but with better model their speed, will be greatly increased. Now, from ten to fourteen days are required to make the trip from New Orleans to Cincinnati, when with improved model, which is now sacrificed to pass this obstruction, the trip could be made in eight or nine days.

Again, the expense of running a boat of eight hundred tons capacity is nearly as great as the running of one of thirty-two hundred tons. The officers are the same. The larger boat requires more fuel, an increase in the number of the crew, and a larger supply of stores. The principal difference is in the expense of loading and unloading cargo. All these disadvantages are more than overcome by the increase of speed, and consequent saving of time; so that the freights could be reduced three fourths without diminishing the profits of the steamboat owners. The large boat would have the same margin of profit with freights at twelve and a half cents per hundred pounds as the small boats now have with freights at fifty cents per hundred. When the Ohio river is high, so that large boats can pass the falls without using the canal, the price of carrying cargo from Cincinnati to New Orleans, a distance of fifteen hundred and ninety miles, is only twenty-five cents per hundred pounds, and corresponding rates are charged between other cities using this river as a highway. Let this improvement be completed, and the average freights through the year would be greatly reduced and the commerce greatly enlarged. The East, as well as the West and South, are deeply interested in this enlargement. The price charged for carrying cotton from Memphis to Cincinnati is $1 50 per bale; complete this work and it could be transported at forty cents. With this reduction in expense immense amounts of this staple would find its way through this channel to its eastern or European market, avoiding the perils of a voyage by sea. Sugar, molasses, and other productions would also be distributed to the points of trade at less expense.

The entire expense of this enlargement, including what has been expended and the appropriation contemplated, will be $2,017,000.

The section provides that hereafter there shall be no tolls charged except a pittance to operate the locks and keep them in repair; but the value and importance of the enlargement may be seen from a comparison of the tolls if present rates were imposed.

As two thirds of the merchandise transported on this river passes this point, or two million tons per annum, or one million custom-house measure at the present rate of tolls, (fifty cents per ton,) we would realize $500,000, or twenty-five per cent. per annum, on the entire cost of the work. It is reasonable to suppose that the commerce would be increased one half, which would, at the same rate, yield $750,000 per annum, paying the entire cost of the work in three years. With or without tolls this impediment in this great national highway should be at once removed.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in taking the floor at this time is not so much to oppose the amendment as to call attention to the latter part of this section where it is proposed to retain the present tax on the commerce of the country of the upper Ohio and its tributaries. I think it is a great wrong done to the people of that vast region watered by the Ohio river. I think it is unjust that while the Government is spending money in all parts of the country, opening rivers, clearing harbors, and making other public improvements with money taken from the public Treasury of the people, that there should still be a tax imposed upon the commerce of the Ohio river. I hope the provision will be stricken out, and that the commerce of that river shall be unrestrained. Strike out all after the word "tribute" in the fourteenth line of third section of the printed bill.

Mr. ELIOT moved that all further debate on the pending section be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARY withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 44, nays 78, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beatty, Benton, Boutwell, Brownell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Covode, Culiom, Delano, Eln, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Getz, Haight, Halsey, Hinds, Hulburd, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Marvin, Miller, Morrell, Pomeroy, Randall, Ross, Scofield, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Wyck, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Stephen F. Wilson—44.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Barnes, Beak, Boles, Buckland, Koderick R. Butler, Cary, Churchill, Coburn, Dixon, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Golladay, Grover, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Loan, Mallory, Marshall, Maynard, McClure, McCormick, McKee, Moorhead, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Polesley, Price, Raum Robinson, Sawyer, Shanks, Shellabarger, Stewart, Stokes, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Unson, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, John T. Wilson, and Woodward—78.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Cake, Chanier, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Dawes, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Asabel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Judd, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, Lynch, McCarthy, McCullough, Mercer, Moore, Morrissey, Mullins, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Pruyn, Robertson, Root, Schenck, Selye, Sitgreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taber, John Trimble, Ward, William D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, Wood, and Woodward—72.

So the motion to strike out the third section was disagreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the joint resolution (H. R. No. 316) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad; when the Speaker signed the same.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL—AGAIN.

The Clerk then read the fourth and last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause examinations or surveys, or both, to be made at the following points, namely: at the harbor of Black Rock, Connecticut; at the entrance of Cuttyhunk harbor, Vineyard sound, in view of the erection of breakwater; at Passaic river, and at Absecon inlet, in New Jersey; at Christiana river, Delaware; at the harbor of Chester, Pennsylvania; at Waukegan, Illinois; at the Illinois river, from its mouth toward the western terminus of the Illinois and Michigan canal; at the mouth of Menomonee river, dividing the States of Wisconsin and Michigan; at the harbor of Port Washington, in Wisconsin; at the Osage river, Missouri; at Reedy Island and Liston's Tree, in Delaware river and bay; at and above the mouth of Schuylkill river, in view of the removal of bars. And the Secretary of War shall make full report thereof to Congress, with plans and estimates of cost, and with such recommendations in regard thereto as the interests of navigation shall require.

Mr. HINDS. I move to amend by inserting after the word "breakwater," in line six, the words "at Ouachita river, Arkansas."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to insert at the end of line fourteen the words "and at and above the mouth of the Wabash river as far as Lafayette, Indiana."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORNELL. I move to insert after the word "Jersey," in line seven, the words "at the entrance of Rondout harbor, on the Hudson river, New York."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AXTELL. I move to insert after the word "bars," in line fifteen, the following:

At the mouth of Eel river; and at the port of San Pedro or Wilmington, on the coast of California, with reference to the improvement of said harbors; and at the point near the mouth of the Sacramento river known as the "Hog's back" with reference to removing said bar.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope that amendment will not prevail. I think we have now about as many points in the section as the money appropriated will cover.

Mr. AXTELL. As a member of the Committee on Commerce I hope the gentleman who has charge of this bill will not object to my amendment. I desire to say to him that the Senate has passed a joint resolution, which has been referred to our committee, including these points, together with some others on the coast of California. They are points of very considerable importance, and particularly Wilmington or San Pedro. I regret that my absence in California prevented my meeting with the committee at the time when these points were being considered. At San Pedro the Government ships all its goods to Arizona, and some improvements there would save to the United States a great deal of money now expended on landing goods. The point on Eel river has been recommended by our Legislature as well as San Pedro. My friend from the second district [Mr. HIGBY] presented the resolutions of the State Legislature in relation to both these points. The point on the Sacramento river where it enters into the bay of San Francisco relates to the whole commerce of that great stream, and is constantly needing and receiving from private companies some assistance. We bring down from the mountains such vast amounts of earth by means of our mining that a bar is being formed there that certainly ought to be removed and looked after by the General Government for fear we should lose the navigation of that great river. My amendment asks simply for a survey, and I think it ought not to be objected to. I hope the House will pass favorably upon it.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask a vote on the amendment; and I move that all debate upon this section be closed.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. AXTELL's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move to insert after the word "river," in line thirteen, the words "and at Big Black river."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to amend this section by adding to the first sentence, after the words "removal of bars," the words "at the harbor of Cape Porpoise, Maine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move to amend this section by inserting at the proper place the following:

And also from the mouth of the Susquehanna river at the Chesapeake bay, to Lake Ontario, in the State of New York, to ascertain the probabilities of a slack-water navigation between said points for steam-boats, &c.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MILLER; and, upon a division, there were—ayes twelve, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to amend this section by striking out the words "Menomonee river, dividing the States of Wisconsin and Michigan," and inserting the words "Ocontee river, Wisconsin." The clause in this section, as it now stands, was inserted by mistake. My amendment is merely for the purpose of correcting that mistake.

The amendment of Mr. SAWYER was agreed to.

Mr. ROOTS. I move to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

At the White river in Arkansas, from its mouth to Batesville, and the Black river from its mouth to Pocahontas, in the same State.

This is for a river eight hundred miles long, and the natural channel of commerce—

Mr. SPALDING. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The amendment of Mr. ROOTS was agreed to.

Mr. ARNELL. I move to amend this section by adding to the first sentence the words "to survey the Harpeth shoals, on the Cumberland river, with a view to the improvement of said river."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes thirty.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. ARNELL called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and, upon a division, there were five in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment of Mr. ARNELL was not agreed to.

Mr. McKEE. I move to amend this section by adding to the first sentence the words "at Big Sandy river, from its mouth to Piketon."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move to amend this section by adding to the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROOTS] the words "and to Poplar Bluff, on Black river."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move to amend the bill by adding what I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made from the mouth of the Susquehanna river at the Chesapeake bay to Lake Ontario, in the State of New York, in order to ascertain the practicability of a slack-water navigation for steamboats, &c.

Mr. MILLER. Is this amendment debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not. After the previous question has been ordered on the last section of a bill, all additional sections are regarded as amendments to that section.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to have a memorial read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. MILLER. My amendment does not call for any appropriation.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

The amendment of Mr. MILLER was not agreed to.

No further amendment was offered to the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. I call the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon the engrossment of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has reserved the right to demand, under the rule, a separate vote on each item of appropriation contained in the first and third sections of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] what amount of money is appropriated by this bill as it now stands?

Mr. ELIOT. As originally reported by the Committee on Commerce, about four million one hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. How much has been added by the House?

Mr. ELIOT. I have not the aggregate of the figures; I should say from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. How does the gentleman make out only $4,000,000?

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman include in his statement the Louisville canal bonds?

Mr. ELIOT. They are not included.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That makes the amount over six million dollars.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. POLSLEY.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. RANDALL for one week after Thursday next.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. BINGHAM.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. HAIGHT for ten days after to-morrow.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. ELDRIDGE after Wednesday next.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. WOODWARD after Tuesday next.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. HUMPHREY after Wednesday next.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. KERN after Thursday next.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask leave of absence after Tuesday next.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] inform us how long he expects to be absent?

Mr. NIBLACK. That depends very much on circumstances.

Leave was granted.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence after to-day.

Mr. BARNES and Mr. GROVER asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence after Wednesday next.

Mr. BECK asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence after to-morrow.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire how far the members now in attendance exceed a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Considerably more than a quorum are in attendance.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If gentleman on the other side think they cannot get along without us, they had better adjourn over. We want to attend the Democratic convention.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 522) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the river and harbor bill. In accordance with Rule 121, relating specially to bills making appropriations for internal improvements, a separate vote may be demanded on the engrossment of any item. The portions of the bill on which a separate vote is not demanded will be regarded as ordered to be engrossed. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for a separate vote on the engrossment of the following clause:

For improvement of the Wisconsin river, $40,000.

On a division, there were—ayes 48, noes 42.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 60, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Roderick R. Butler, Churchill, Cobb, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Hotchkiss, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Loan, Loughridge, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Miller, Moorhead, Mullins, Newcomb, Niblack, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Sawyer, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Lawrence S. Trimble, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, and Windom—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Archer, Bailey, Baker, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Boutwell, Brownell, Buckland, Cary, Coburn, Cullom, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jones, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, Mercer, Morrill, Myers, Orth, Randall, Raum, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—60.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beck, Blaine, Blair, Boies, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Covode, Dawes, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glessbrenner, Gravely, Griswold, Grover, Halsey, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Johnson, Judd, Kelley, Kerr, Knott, Koontz, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, Lynch, McCarthy, McCormick, McCullough, Moore, Morrissey, Munger, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Polsley, Robertson, Robinson, Roots, Schenck, Selye, Sitgreaves, Smith, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taber, John Trimble, Trowbridge, Ward, John T. Wilson, and Wood—71.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that we have wasted money enough to-day. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the motion will not be agreed to. We want to pass this bill to-day and get it out of the way.

On the motion there were—ayes 53, noes 54.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. ELIOT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 62.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For improvement of Marquette harbor, Lake Superior, $20,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for a separate vote on the engrossment of that clause. It will take $385,000 to finish that work.

Mr. ELIOT. The work is now under way, and this appropriation is needed.

On a division there were—ayes 54, noes 46.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 58, noes 65.

The question recurred on ordering the engrossment of the clause for the improvement of Marquette harbor, Lake Superior.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 75, nays 49, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Beck, Boies, Buckland, Roderick R. Butler, Churchill, Cobb, Coburn, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Grover, Harding, Higby, Hinds, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kerr, Loan, Lynch, Maynard, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Raum, Robinson, Roots, Sawyer, Scofield, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windom—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Beatty, Benton, Brownell, Benjamin F. Butler, Cake, Cary, Cullom, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Ferriss, Getz, Golladay, Haight, Holman, Hulburd, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Kitchen, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Marvin, Mercer, Miller, Niblack, Orth, Phelps, Randall, Rens, Shanks, Shellabarger, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodward—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barnum, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boutwell, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Covode, Dawes, Dodge, Eldridge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Halsey, Hill, Hooper, Hopkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Kelley, Knott, Koonz, Lafin, Lincoln, Logan, Mallory, Marshall, McCarthy, McCullough, Moore, Morrissey, Mungen, Nicholson, Nunn, Pike, Pile, Plants, Polsley, Robertson, Schenck, Selye, Sitgreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taber, John Trimble, Van Wyck, Ward, William B. Washburn, John T. Wilson, Wood, and Woodbridge—70.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 56.

Mr. JULIAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JULIAN and Mr. HAIGHT were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 57.

Mr. PRICE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill will be resumed immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and thirty-eight minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. PRUYN: The petition of John Ahern, of Albany, asking indemnity for the loss sustained by him in furnishing certain supplies to the Army in the year 1863.

By Mr. ROBINSON: The petition of John T. Hildreth, of Brooklyn, asking an appropriation to erect a monument in Fort Green, Brooklyn, to the memory of the victims of the Jersey prison ship.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 48 citizens of Columbia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that the productive interests of the country are suffering and its industry paralyzed for want of efficient protection against the cheaper labor and capital of foreign countries, and praying that Congress will resume its consideration of the tariff bill, which passed the Senate and failed in the House March, 1867, and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

Also, the petition of 47 iron-workers in St. Charles furnace, Columbia, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed, and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petitions of 148 iron-workers at Marietta, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 28 workers in Lancaster cotton mills, Pennsylvania, setting forth that, owing to foreign competition, their industry is greatly depressed and many of the trade are out of employment, and praying for additional protective duties.

Also, the petition of 100 nickel miners in Gap mines, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, praying for such increase of protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

Also, the petition of W. H. Eagle and 42 others, citizens of Marietta, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, praying for additional protective duties.

By Mr. VAN AERNAM: The petition of Emily B. Bidwell, widow of Brigadier General Daniel B. Bidwell, for increase of pension.

By Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania: The petitions of Howard Iron Company and Valentine & Co., iron manufacturers in Centre county, Pennsylvania, employing, when in full operation, 260 workmen, 100 of whom are now idle, setting forth that the industry of the country is paralyzed for want of efficient protection against the cheaper capital and labor of foreign countries; that much of the distress now prevalent and daily increasing, would be relieved by the passage of the tariff bill, which failed in the House, March, 1867, and praying Congress to resume consideration of that measure and enact it into a law at the earliest practicable moment.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 30, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

MILITIA FORCE IN TEXAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the constitutional convention of Texas, asking Congress to authorize that convention to organize a militia force in that State to act in conjunction with and under the military commander therein for the protection of the lives and property of the citizens; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

SENATOR FROM FLORIDA.

Mr. HOWE. I desire to submit to the Senate a certified copy of an ordinance of the Legislature of Florida ratifying the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments of the Constitution of the United States, and to submit with that the credentials of Hon. T. W. Osborn, a Senator-elect from that State. I ask that the credentials be read, and that the oath of office be administered to the Senator-elect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE OF FLORIDA.
TALLAHASSEE, June 18, 1868.

This is to certify that in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, the Senate and Assembly of the State of Florida, chosen under and by virtue of the constitution framed in accordance with the reconstruction acts of Congress, did this day convene in joint Assembly and proceeded to elect a Senator in the Congress of the United States to fill the term expiring on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1873.

And I do further certify that Thomas Ward Osborn received a majority of the votes of the said joint Assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting.

And I do further certify that the said Thomas Ward Osborn has been nine years a citizen of the United States and two years a citizen of the State of Florida, and is a registered voter.

Therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me, and in pursuance of the requirements of the constitution of the State, I do hereby accredit the said Thomas Ward Osborn, as Senator in the Congress of the United States, to fill the said term expiring on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1873.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Florida.

HARRISON REED, Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator-elect from Florida will advance to the desk and take the oath.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am not aware of all the facts with reference to the State of Florida, whether it is in a condition to have a Senator admitted. I will inquire if that matter has been examined into by any committee? There are certain conditions to be complied with. I wish to be informed about it.

Mr. HOWE. I have just laid on the table the evidence that the State had complied with the conditions. The act specified that they should be admitted when they had ratified the fourteenth article. The ordinance of the State ratifying the thirteenth and fourteenth articles I have just laid upon the table.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator has examined the subject, and is satisfied that everything is right about it, I shall not object.

Mr. HOWE. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. DRAKE. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin says that the ordinance of the State is there ratifying the constitutional amendment. I suggest that we know nothing of the ordinance of a State passed by a State Legislature. I wish to have the ratification of the constitutional amendment, if it exists at all, read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper; but before concluding,

Mr. DRAKE. I do not care to have the whole of that document read through. The point upon which I wished information was that which was involved in the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the ordinance of that State was here. I presume that that is a ratification of the constitutional amendment; but I would rather that the document should be referred to a committee to ascertain and report upon that fact before these Senators are admitted. It may be that the constitutional amendments are there set out correctly; it may be that they are not; but this is too grave a matter to be left to any doubt or uncertainty; and as that investigation could be made in the course of an hour or two, or less perhaps, I move that the credentials of the Senator or Senators elect from Florida, together with the document now purporting to be a ratification of the constitutional amendment, and produced before us, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, merely for the purpose of examining whether all the facts exist which entitle these gentlemen to be sworn in. The committee can better examine it than we can in open session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is another question whether the ratification has been, according to law, communicated to the Department of State. I believe the Secretary of State is by law required to announce when a sufficient number of States have ratified a constitutional amendment to make it a part of the constitution.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think that ancient statute applies to the seceding States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is a general statute, and must apply to all the States.

Mr. HOWARD. I think the papers had better be referred to the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And I wish the committee to inquire into that fact also.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg also to call the attention of the committee especially to the language in which this ratification is couched. The Constitution requires the Legislatures of the several States to "ratify" an amendment of the Constitution of the United States. I observe that in the present instance the Legislature of Florida have used the word "adopted."

"Resolved by the people of the State of Florida in Senate and Assembly represented, That the following proposed amendments to the Constitution, known as articles thirteen and fourteen, be, and the same are hereby, adopted."

I should rather think upon first blush that would be a sufficient ratification, but still I desire to call the attention of the Judiciary Committee particularly to that language, in order that we may be informed whether that word is a perfect compliance with the constitutional requirement.

Mr. FERRY. The motion now is that the credentials of the Senators-elect, and the ratification of the constitutional amendments, be both referred to the Judiciary Committee. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the credentials lie upon the table, and the ordinance of ratification alone be referred to the Judiciary Committee, as we refused the other day to refer the credentials of the Senators from Arkansas. I move that amendment.

Mr. DRAKE. There is a reason for referring the credentials along with the supposed resolution of ratification. An act of Congress requires that in the election of Senators the two houses of the Legislature of any State shall first vote separately for Senators. That applies to this State as well as every other. Now, the question is presented here whether the Senate will recognize credentials of Senators which do not show that fact. These credentials, if I heard them read correctly, indicate that the Legislature of Florida, in the first instance, met in joint session for the election of a Senator. I wish that matter to be investigated by the Committee on the Judiciary. I wish it distinctly understood, though, Mr. President, that I do not make this motion for the purpose of interposing any difficulty in way of the admission of Senators from Florida; all that I want is that we should see and know what we are about; that we should know that they are entitled to admission, and as soon as we know that fact admit them. I think it is better that both the credentials and the supposed resolution of ratification go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I dare say the Senator from Florida, now on the floor and awaiting admission, has no particular objection to having his credentials and this act referred to any committee of the Senate, if the Senate sees fit to do so. I believe that step was not taken in the case of the representatives who appeared here the other day from the State of Arkansas. It is not ordinarily done with credentials which are brought here by the representatives of States. It should not be done except upon some grave doubt as to the propriety of the individuals taking their seats. The Senate will remember that I have not been one of those who have hungered and thirsted for representatives from these southern States. The two Houses have declared solemnly, however, that when they did ratify, not as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] seemed to suppose when the fourteenth article became a part of the Constitution of the United States, but when these several States by their Legislatures should ratify the fourteenth article, they should be admitted and have the same right to representation that New York or any other State had. I have submitted what I supposed was evidence that the Legislature of Florida had ratified the fourteenth article; I have submitted what I supposed were the credentials of that State attesting the election of the gentleman whose name is borne on the face of the paper. If Senators who have insisted on having this State admitted at once still say they doubt the right of this man to represent the State, or doubt the right of the State to have a representative, I shall give way to that doubt, and in order to solve it shall consent to let these credentials and this act go to a committee; but until a Senator he does doubt the propriety either of one or the other. I think you ought to treat it as a State, and this gentleman as the representative of that State.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the credentials do not show that the Legislature of the State went into joint convention on the first balloting. They show that they went into a joint convention according to the act of Congress, and therefore it could not have been at first. The language of the credential is that under the act of Congress they proceeded in joint convention to elect Senators; and if they proceeded under the act of Congress of course they voted the first day in separate houses. I have no objection to the matter being referred to a committee if we can have an immediate report. I do not want any unfriendliness manifested when any State comes now to be represented under our system and form. I hope this will not be regarded as an unfriendly act; and if it is simply to see that everything is correct I have no objection to its being referred, but I want an early report.

Mr. DRAKE. I expressly stated that it was not unfriendly on my part.

Mr. MORTON. These credentials evidently refer to the joint convention provided by the act of Congress to take place on the second day. Perhaps it was not thought necessary to set forth that they had met in separate houses on the first day and proceeded to vote, but it refers only to the joint convention which declares the election.

Mr. WILSON. They did vote the first day in separate houses, and made no choice.

Mr. MORTON. The credentials make this statement:

"In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress,' approved July 25, 1866, the Senate and Assembly of the State of Florida, chosen under and by virtue of the constitution framed in accordance with the reconstruction acts of Congress, did this day convene in joint Assembly and proceeded to elect a Senator in the Congress of the United States."

Mr. DRAKE. "Proceeded to elect!"

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir. I suppose they regarded the declaration or election made in the joint convention of the Legislature as the thing to be referred to. It says the election was held in accordance with the act of Congress. It may have been that there was no election the first day; the two houses may not have agreed.

Mr. WILSON. That was the case. They voted separately on the first day, and there was no choice; and they then went into convention the next day.

Mr. MORTON. So that that makes the language perfectly exact and legal in accordance with the act of Congress. If the two houses fail on the first day, then they come together in joint convention, and if a majority of both houses are present they then proceed to elect according to the old manner of holding the election. The language is perfectly correct.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not understand that the act of 1866, relating to the election of Senators to Congress, is applicable to the reconstructed States. All these proceedings which have resulted in elections, so far as there have been elections in the recently rebel States, have been taken under the reconstruction laws, all of which were passed subsequently to the general act of 1866, and it is impossible to give that act a strict application to the state of things existing in those States. These elections are had under the reconstruction acts, and not under the act of 1866, so that I entertain myself no doubt at all as to the right of one of these rebel States to elect their Senators according to their own ideas without any strict reference to the act of 1866. Then the question comes up before the Senate regularly as to the fairness and propriety of the election. We are not bound, and I do not think those States are bound, by the statute of 1866, in reference to the election of Senators. But still I care but very little about the form of the credentials. What concerns me most at the present time is the peculiar form of the ratification which comes before us. The Legislature of Florida do not say that they "ratify" these amendments to the Constitution, but that they "adopt" them. That is not strictly constitutional language, and I wish to have a reference of the papers to the Committee on the Judiciary for the very purpose of calling their attention to the peculiar phraseology of this ratification. If it is all right I shall be quite content to admit the Senators. That is a point of great importance to me.

Mr. SUMNER. I will remind my friend, the Senator from Michigan, that though the Constitution uses the term "ratify," yet common usage does use the term "adopt." We familiarly speak of the "adoption" of the constitutional amendment; and I think we may reasonably conclude that the Legislature of Florida in using the common language meant the constitutional idea. Indeed, I cannot doubt that they have used language which is operative for the purpose; and yet, as a learned Senator has suggested a doubt on the subject, I think it is well worthy of inquiry. I agree with him, therefore, in thinking it better that this document should be referred to the Judiciary Committee for a report. It is the first of a series, and we cannot be too careful in seeing that it is right.

Mr. HOWARD. The language of the Constitution is, that an amendment "when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof," shall become a part of the Constitution. I am not sure by any means but that the word "adopted" covers the whole ground; but still it is not the constitutional phrase, and I wish the Committee on the Judiciary to look into that particularly. While I am up I will say further that I have observed in the proceedings of some of the other reconstructed States propositions containing similar language; "adopting" the amendment instead of "ratifying" it. Perhaps it is tantamount to "ratify," possibly it is not.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that is the popular term now.

Mr. HOWARD. It is not the constitutional term.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish merely to make a suggestion as to the economy of time. Several Senators prefer a reference of these credentials. The Judiciary Committee meets in the morning to-morrow, and can make a report to-morrow, so that no delay will ensue. I suggest that as half the morning hour has gone already on this subject, it might be agreeable to everybody, as the committee is to meet so soon, to allow the credentials to be referred and reported back, as they will be, promptly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have looked at these papers, and I see no earthly object in referring them. We may as well act upon them now as to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. We shall save time at least by referring them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that we shall. I do not know that the Judiciary Committee can satisfy the Senator from Michigan whether the "adoption" of the constitutional amendment by a Legislature means its "ratification" or not. The credentials are here in due form. I do not see myself why the act of Congress relative to senatorial elections cannot apply to States lately in rebellion as well as to any others. It provides for the election of Senators, and this paper recites that in pursuance of that act of Congress these persons have been elected. We have presented here in an authentic form the evidence of the ratification of the constitutional amendment. Now, what is the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into? Has anybody suggested anything? The Senator from Michigan has suggested that the "adoption" by the Legislature of Florida of the constitutional amendment may not be a "ratification" of it. If that is the opinion of the Senate, I do not think it can be changed by a report. It seems to me we may as well dispose of this subject now as to refer it. I see nothing in the world to be made by referring these papers. The only object of referring the papers is to inquire into something. There are no facts here to be inquired into which are not perfectly open to the whole country. Everybody knows the condition of Florida and the terms of the act we have recently passed. I think we had better dispose of the question now.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, this is one of those questions in regard to which time is a matter of no consequence. The question is, whether a State has complied with the terms of the act upon which it was to be admitted into the Union again. I am satisfied in my own mind, and should so vote now if called upon, that the resolution which has been presented here, as adopted by the Legislature of Florida, is not a ratification of the constitutional amendment.

Now, sir, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this fact: the law, as it stands now, requires those resolutions or acts of ratification to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State; and most strangely and unaccountably he is the individual who is to promulgate the final adoption of the constitutional amendment. The Congress of the United States, according to the law as it stands, has nothing to do with declaring the amendment adopted or ratified by the requisite number of States. He is the individual who is to declare the thing and to authorize its publication as a part of the fundamental law of the land, as any gentleman will find who will consult the statutes on that subject. Now, sir, suppose that these reconstructed States, instead of using the word "ratify" in their acts or joint resolutions in relation to the constitutional amendment, choose to use the word "adopt," and get their Senators and Representatives in here, and then turn round and say, "We never ratified this thing; we only expressed our adoption of it;" and suppose that the Secretary of State should take sides with them and declare that the constitutional amendment was not ratified by three fourths of the States, what would be the result? We should have their Senators and Representatives in here and the constitutional amendment not ratified.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suggest to my friend from Missouri that, in that event, all Congress would have to do would be to pass a law declaring that its declaration that the constitutional amendment was ratified was sufficient, without the Secretary of State doing it.

Mr. DRAKE. That may do very well after the thing is developed; but I am talking about the state of things that exists now; and I say again that, in my opinion, that joint resolution of the two houses of the Legislature of Florida is not a ratification of the constitutional amendment. When the Constitution uses the word "ratify" it uses it in its clear, distinct sense. An "adoption" is not a "ratification" in any definition of the word that we know of in the English language. "To adopt" is "to take or receive as one's own; to select and take, as, to adopt the opinions of another, to adopt a particular mode of husbandry." "To ratify" is "to approve and sanction; to make valid; to confirm; to establish; to settle."

When the Constitution uses the word "ratify," why should we permit this State to use the word "adopt," and to leave the question open afterward whether there is a ratification? Sir, we are bound to see that this constitutional amendment is ratified beyond all question, and we are bound not to admit any Senator into this Chamber from any of these reconstructed States until that State has "ratified" the constitutional amendment, not "adopted" it. It has no business to "adopt" it; all it has to do is to "ratify" what Congress has done, to approve it.

Mr. YATES. I do not think that there is a man in the United States who looks at this thing in the right way, no lexicographer or professor or man of common school education any where, who will not say that an "adoption" of the amendment is a "ratification" of it. I hope the Senate will not pause upon any such question; I will not call it a quibble, for I have too great respect for the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I confess that I am somewhat surprised at this objection. Is the word "ratify" a technical word? Are there not other words in the English language which signify the same thing? Are we after the substance, or are we after a mere technicality? When it is required that these States shall "ratify" an amendment, what does it mean except that they shall agree to it, signify their acquiescence that it shall become a part of the Constitution? Is anything else required? Is anything else meant? Why, sir, if they had said, "we hereby accept this as a part of the Constitution," would not that be equivalent to the word "ratify"?

Mr. DRAKE. That would not be equivalent to "adopt."

Mr. MORTON. If they had said "We will agree to this," would not that be equivalent to the word "ratify"? Would it not convey the same meaning? If they had said, as they do say, "We hereby adopt this," how can they adopt it without agreeing to it? How can they agree to it without ratifying it? They cannot. If they agree to accept it as a part of the Constitution, that is all that is required. Is not that the meaning clearly conveyed by the use of the word "adopt"? As the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that is the popular word. It is used every day in this Senate when we come to speak on that subject. The question has been made in the Senate within a few weeks past whether the thirteenth article had been "adopted." That is the very word used, and it always conveys the same idea here and elsewhere as if we had said, "Has it been ratified?" Sir, the word "ratify" is not technical. Any language that conveys the idea that the Legislature accepts and agrees to this amendment as a part of the Constitution is sufficient. It would be ridiculous, in my opinion, to send this back to the Legislature of Florida, and say "You have not expressed an acceptance of this article, but you must use the word 'ratify.'"

Mr. HOWE. I said when I was up just now, that since we had agreed to take representatives from the State of Florida, and since we had ascertained that that State has chosen representatives, I thought we ought to receive them unless some Senator should say that he had great doubts as to the propriety of our receiving them at this time. When I made that remark I had heard no such doubt expressed. The Senator from Michigan has since raised a question which he wishes to have examined by the Judiciary Committee. That question is, whether, when the Legislature of Florida say they "adopt" a particular amendment as a part of the Constitution, they do thereby "ratify" that amendment? There seems to me to be so little doubt on that point that I am inclined not to assent to the reference to the Judiciary Committee, but to take the vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. MORTON, (presenting a dictionary.) Here is a definition of the word.

Mr. DRAKE. I have read the definition from the book.

Mr. MORTON. Very well; I was not aware of it.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator has read the definition of "adopt."

Mr. DRAKE. And "ratify," also.

Mr. HOWE. Well, I do not propose to overrule either of these dictionaries; but I had one suggestion to make, and that is that the Constitution simply requires the Legislature to ratify, and does not require them to say that they ratify. In other words, the Constitution requires that the Legislature shall do something that is a ratification, and does not require them to use that word; and I think the Senator from Indiana was entirely right when he said that if they did anything or said anything which signified their acceptance of a particular proposition as an amendment of the Constitution of the United States that was sufficient; and I am so clear on this point that I think I shall take the vote of the Senate on the question whether they will refer these credentials or whether they will admit the Senators now without saying another word.

Mr. TIPTON. I only desire to say that in "adopting" amendments they adopt them as amendments of the Constitution, and receive them as such.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope this matter will go to the committee, simply because there seems to be doubt suggested in the minds of gentlemen. In such a case it is better that the papers should go to the committee. I confess I am somewhat anxious to know whether the ratification has been communicated to the Secretary of State in form. I desire to have the evidence in the proper place.

Mr. HOWE. Does the Senator think that it is necessary that it should be communicated to the Secretary of State?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think so, under the existing law.

Mr. HOWE. The existing law is that when the Legislature ratifies we shall receive their Senators.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am speaking of the law which requires the ratification to be communicated to the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOWE. That may, perhaps, be necessary in order to make the amendment a part of the Constitution, but it is not necessary to entitle the gentlemen elected to their seats.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I apprehend that it is a material point to be looked after by us that this article of amendment shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States. It was considered so material when we passed the law that it was made a specific provision that they were not to be admitted until enough States had ratified it to make it a part of the Constitution.

Mr. HOWE. No; the Senator is mistaken. Mr. FESSENDEN. It was originally so.

Mr. HOWE. Originally so; but it is not so in the law now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I say that being regarded of so much importance it was originally so provided. We have since waived that just so far as to say that we will admit a State before that article becomes a part of the Constitution; but still I cling to that as a very important idea, and I wish to secure that particular thing. I have fears that unless this ratification is communicated in proper form, and communicated by the proper authority, it will not be noticed; and I am unwilling that anything should be let slip in relation to that matter. But, sir, the Senate will do as it pleases. For myself, when there are doubts raised about such a matter, and this is the first case that presents itself, I think it is safer to have the report of a committee. They can look at it calmly, and with sufficient time to examine it carefully, which cannot be done in the Senate by a discussion here on the spur of the moment; and as a day is of no sort of consequence, as it can be a matter of no great importance to these gentlemen whether they are sworn in to-day or to-morrow, I think we had better refer these papers.

I have great respect for the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and when he gets up here and says there is no doubt about a thing, I am willing to take that as his opinion; but it is barely possible that in committee, with other lights about him, some further effulgence might be shed upon it, and he might be led to doubt, or at any rate to make a more specific examination. When we make a motion to refer a question to the Judiciary Committee we do not mean to refer it to the chairman alone, but to the committee to have a report; and although his opinion may now be clear, I think nothing can possibly be lost, and some additional feeling of security may be gained by the reference.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President—
Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the Senator from Michigan give way for a moment? I have received and been requested to present a paper, which I send to the desk, which purports to be a certificate of the Governor of Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials now sent to the desk by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOWE. By whom is that paper signed?
The CHIEF CLERK. "David S. Walker, Governor of Florida."

Mr. HOWE. I object to the reading of that paper.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I was about to say that it might turn out, as has been intimated here, that the point which I suggested respecting the phraseology of the resolution of the Legislature of Florida may be trivial and unfounded. I am not prepared to say that there is any strong ground for expressing a doubt as to the sufficiency of that form of ratification; but still I think the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, if he will examine the forms of ratification of the Constitution itself by the thirteen old States, and the forms of the ratification of all the subsequent amendments, will not find a single case in which the word "adopted" is the only word used in the resolution of ratification. It is not possible for me at this moment to say with certainty what the form in all those cases was; but I think he will find that in every case the word "ratify" was used by the Legislatures of the old States when they adopted the Constitution originally, and by the Legislatures of the several States in adopting the amendments which were made a year or two afterward. At all events, I think it worth while for that learned committee, that illustrious committee, and I will go further and say that burdened committee, to look into the precedents on this point. We certainly do not wish to commit any mistake or error. The great thing to be secured is this: that the State of Florida shall have ratified, whatever may be the sense of the word "ratify," these two amendments of the Constitution, so that, in respect to her, they shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States. I would not stand upon mere technicalities; I would not quibble about a mere word if it was quite obvious that the word used by the Legislature was tantamount to "ratified." It seems to me that under the circumstances, and in consideration of the question presented by the Senator from Maine, it is quite proper that these papers should be referred, and that we should have a report from that learned committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] presents a paper on this subject and asks that it be read. The reading is objected to, and the question is, Shall the paper be read?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I shall vote to refer the credentials before the body to the Judiciary Committee for the reasons which I gave the other day in favor of referring the Arkansas credentials, and not at all for the reasons that are assigned here this morning. I think Congress has no more power to say that before a State shall be represented in this body after her practical relations to the Union have been recognized she shall ratify or refuse to ratify a proposed amendment to the Constitution, than to say that she shall not be represented at all. If Congress can make this as a condition of representation in regard to a State the relations of which are now recognized by law, then Congress can go through her whole constitution and her code of laws and prescribe the whole system of government for that State. Therefore I shall vote for the reference for other reasons than those that have been suggested.

I do not know whether the word "approve" or "adopt" will supply the place of "ratify." That is a question that I suppose the Senate of the United States is not called upon judicially to decide at this time. Whether the State of Florida by the language used in her resolution has ratified the constitutional amendment is a question upon which I would not give an opinion at this time.

This particular person comes here certified with more particularity than is usual. It is not only certified that he is elected according to the act of Congress, but it is certified that he has been a resident of the State of Florida for two years. How the Governor had official information of the length of this person's residence in this State is not apparent to the Senate. I suppose it is not found upon the records of the Legislature, and perhaps not upon the records of the executive department of the State. There are some institutions of States that keep records of this sort; but perhaps the Governor could not certify in regard to that at all. Why is that? Why is there a certificate that he has been a resident of the State for two years? I suppose it is to exclude the conclusion that he is one of the adventurers that are going down there to govern that country. Is this credential satisfactory? The Constitution simply requires that the party shall be a resident of the State at the time he is elected. This person comes with more than ordinary claims, then, because the certificate is fuller than usual; and I suppose, if we regard the law passed the other day, he is entitled to his seat. The credential shows an election. The question was settled the other day that an election at a time when there was no legal State government as declared by Congress is a good election. Congress declared in the reconstruction acts that there was no valid government down there, that to have a valid government they must take certain steps, and those steps must be submitted to and approved by Congress, and when Congress approved, then they should have a valid State government. At the time this election took place Congress had not examined the constitution; it was not approved, as I understand. Therefore the question arises whether a State having no legal and valid government can elect Senators?

I believe they had a valid State government; a majority of this body does not hold that opinion; but I understand that in the case of Arkansas the other day this question was settled by the Senate, and that an election at a time when as Congress declared they had no valid State government was a good election, and that a ratification of a constitutional amendment by a Legislature not then recognized as valid and declared by Congress to be invalid was a good ratification of a constitutional amendment; so that these points seem to be settled by the action of the Senate the other day; and really what there is to submit to the Committee on the Judiciary I am not able to see.

These were supposed to be grave questions; but they have been settled by the decision of the Senate. That committee cannot reverse the decision of the Senate. That committee cannot now inquire whether this Senator was elected before the State was in a condition to elect; nor can the committee question that the Legislature at the time was competent to ratify the amendment. But suppose the word "adopt" is not sufficient, why not amend it? Why should Congress not amend it? We amend their constitutions. Why not amend this resolution of adoption and say that it means ratify, and put it through? What is the use of standing upon trifles? Perhaps the word "adopt" means "ratify." Perhaps technical words are not needed in a resolution of this sort. If so, and we want to have the exact word, why not just put it in? We have as much power to do that certainly, to control the action of the Legislature, as we have to modify the action of a constitutional convention that makes a constitution. I do not myself see anything much to refer; but to be consistent with myself on the vote of the other day I shall vote for the reference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, one would almost suppose that the distinguished Senator from Indiana was making a 4th of July oration. I do not mean the 4th of next July; I mean some other July. [Laughter.] All that I rose to say was that for one I do not wish to be put in the position that he has assigned to me as to the legal effect of the Senate's action touching the ratification by the State of Arkansas of the constitutional amendment. He has chosen to state in a very lawyer-like and adroit way a view of the case that pleases him, and has assigned us to that position. I do not wish to go over now, because it is not appropriate, the real and correct legal grounds upon which the ratification by Arkansas has now become as to her valid. They are firm enough, are easily enough understood. They have existed and been practiced upon in one form or another since the Union was formed, year after year. But, as I say, I do not wish to take time for that, but only to declare that I do not choose to occupy the position to which my distinguished friend has assigned me.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I suppose the only question practically before the Senate about which there can be any dispute is whether the two amendments to the constitution have been sufficiently ratified by the State of Florida; and that depends, as I suppose, upon the meaning of the word "adoption," as found in their resolution. I rise merely for the purpose of saying that it seems to me that that word is just as effectual as any other word that could have been used to obtain that end. Congress has a right to propose amendments to the Constitution, and the States have a right to reject or ratify them. When the State of Florida, in due form, tells us that her Legislature, by whom the act of adoption is to be made, has adopted them, it appears to me that so far as that State is concerned, and so far as the United States is concerned, that question is settled.

As to the other question, whatever differences of opinion existed and do now exist between the minority of the Senate and the majority, I suppose it is to be considered as settled that in all we are to do now, at this session at any rate, we are to take for granted that the question is settled that the States are not to be admitted to representation on this floor until they shall antecedently have adopted the constitutional amendment. I bow, as of course I am bound to bow, to the decision of the majority of the Senate on that question, however much I may think there is error in it.

That being the case, we have no right, unless we are to reject our former opinions on the question of power, to keep from the Senate the representatives chosen from this State, provided the State has complied with all the requisitions prescribed by Congress in the acts of reconstruction; and supposing that they have done that so far as the particular provision is concerned, as the constitutional amendments referred to have been ratified, I see no objection to swearing in the member who it has been certified to us has been properly elected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss this question of reference; but the paper which I sent to the Chair purports to be the credentials of Hon. William Marvin, a Senator-elect from the State of Florida, and as the other credentials were about to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, I simply desired to have these referred also at the same time. I ask that the paper which I sent to the Chair may be read, so as to be referred with the other papers to the Committee on the Judiciary. I did not rise to make any argument.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I am for treating this motion to refer just as I would any other. It was not from any haste on my part to have the Senators from Florida admitted that I suggested that there was no object in referring these papers to the committee. We have settled by an act which we passed a few days ago the condition of Florida. We have declared that that State, under a constitution which was submitted to us and examined, was entitled to representation in Congress when she ratified the constitutional amendment known as article fourteen. That act has passed both Houses of Congress and is the law of the land. Now, the State of Florida sends evidence here that she has ratified that constitutional amendment. Does anybody doubt it?

Mr. DRAKE. Yes, I do.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Missouri doubts it because the word "ratify" is not used. Now, let me read to him a sentence from the law. By a statute passed in 1818 it was declared—

"That whenever official notice shall have been received at the Department of State that any amendment which heretofore has been, or hereafter may be, proposed to the Constitution of the United States has been adopted according to the provisions of the Constitution, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State forthwith to cause the said amendment to be published in the said newspapers authorized to promulgate the laws, with his certificate specifying the States by which the same may have been adopted."

Congress, fifty years ago, used the word "adopted," in reference to constitutional amendments; and it was declared in a message from the President of the United States to both Houses of Congress, dated January 8, 1798, that the eleventh amendment which was proposed to the Constitution of the United States had been "adopted by the constitutional number of States;" so that this word "adopted" is no new word in our law; and the only suggestion that I have heard for referring these papers is to ascertain whether, when a Legislature adopts a constitutional amendment, it has ratified it. Even the Senator from Michigan says that he does not know that it is of sufficient importance to raise a doubt upon it.

Mr. DRAKE. I will state to the honorable Senator from Illinois that there is another ground. We do not know, and cannot know without an examination and comparison, that the constitutional amendments as set out in that joint resolution of the Legislature of Florida are set out in the words in which they were proposed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have said that I was for treating this paper like all others. If any member of the Senate will rise in his place and say that he believes this resolution does not recite the fourteenth article, or that what is here set forth differs from it, I am willing to have it referred for the purpose of comparison to satisfy the Senator from Missouri; but unless some Senator suggests something of that kind, and merely imagines that it is possible it is not properly copied, I see no necessity for a reference, even to satisfy my friend from Maine that the Secretary of State should promulgate it. The validity does not depend upon his promulgation; he is only required to give notice when he has received official information of the adoption of a constitutional amendment. But we have passed a law by which we have said to the State of Florida, "You have organized a State government which is entitled to representation in this Congress, and we will receive your representatives when you send them here, and ratify the constitutional amendment which we name the fourteenth article." They send us here the evidence of that fact, and send the members here, and now the Senator from Maine suggests that we shall wait until the Secretary of State proclaims something about it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; the Senator will please not misapprehend me. I think it is the duty of the State to communicate the fact to the Secretary of State, and that is the proper evidence that they have adopted or ratified the amendment, so that he may have the evidence before him in order to promulgate the adoption of the constitutional amendment by a sufficient number of States to make it a part of the Constitution. Suppose that hereafter, this not being now done, the State of Florida or any of these other States refuses to communicate the information to him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That would not alter its validity. It is only a means of preserving the evidence. Whenever the requisite number of States have ratified the constitutional amendment it becomes part of the Constitution; and whenever you can obtain the evidence of that fact in any court the court would recognize it. This is not the only means of establishing it; it is a convenient way of making it known by having it promulgated by the Secretary of State. But would it not be just as valid in any court in Christendom when the evidence was furnished from the action of the State itself that it had ratified the constitutional amendment? Really I see no object in referring these papers. It looks to me as if it were hunting after some objection when the Senator from Missouri suggests that possibly these are not proper copies.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, I do not think the honorable Senator from Illinois has any sort of justification whatever for charging me with hunting after objections to the admission of representatives. We declared by act of Congress that we would admit the Senators from these States when each of these States had ratified the constitutional amendment. The honorable Senator from Illinois said that in this case evidence of the fact was produced in regard to Florida. How does he know that that is evidence of the fact till he has examined it? How can we say that it is a ratification of the constitutional amendment when we have not examined the document to see whether the amendment is there in terms? I want the Committee on the Judiciary to examine this resolution of the two houses of the Florida Legislature, and inform us whether it is a ratification of the constitutional amendment, whether the constitutional amendment is set out there in terms, or whether it is something else that they have ratified.

I protest, Mr. President, against any charge against me of unfriendliness toward the admission of these States. All I want is that the fundamental condition upon which they were to be admitted, the ratification of that amendment, shall be made to appear to the Senate before they shall rush forward to admit these Senators. Now, sir, if the Senate choose to go it blind in this matter, very well; I have nothing further to say; I have done my duty in calling their attention to it.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope we shall have a vote and see whether the Senate will refer these credentials or not.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am somewhat amused at this sudden revival of a seeming attachment to the Constitution by the gentlemen over the way after they have so long forsaken it. It is, however, rather an encouraging and refreshing view of the subject; but I think the gentlemen might as well hold on to the even tenor of their way. Why should they care about the Constitution or elections or forms of return? They may dispense with the whole of them whenever it is their will, and I think they might as well do it now. Why trouble yourselves, gentlemen, about the Constitution and what it prescribes and its forms? Why do you look at the form of a return of a Senator from one of the States of the Union? Why do you ask an election, much less a return? Dispense with the commission and with the return, and, if necessary, dispense with the election, and if the gentlemen who present themselves do not suit you, just select and appoint others for yourselves. You can do all this, and I think it would comport more with what you have done heretofore; it would preserve the harmony of your system of operations and of your programme. I entreat that you shall make no departure whatever from it; do not say another word about the credentials or another word about the elections; but if the gentleman who presents himself suits you, just send him up to be sworn; and if he does not suit you, just drop him for another that suits you better and send him up to be sworn, and have it all your own way.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator serious?

Mr. DAVIS. It is serious for you; that is, it is acting out your appropriate part. I am just suggesting what uniformity in your course and policy would require you to do, gentlemen. You have given enough of amusement to the Senate and to the country this morning by talking about elections, and the forms of the Constitution, and the forms of return. I think that farce has been played about long enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the reading of the paper presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE.] He asks to have it read, and the reading being objected to it can only be ordered by a vote of the Senate. The question is, Shall the paper offered by the Senator from Wisconsin be read?

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA.
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To all to whom these presents may come, greeting:

Know ye, that at a joint meeting of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Florida in General Assembly convened, held at the capitol, in the city of Tallahassee, on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1866, William Marvin was duly elected a Senator in the Congress of the United States for the term of six years from the 4th day of March proximo, 1867. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my official signature and caused to be affixed the great seal of Florida.

Done at the capitol, in the city of Tallahassee, the 30th day of November, A. D. 1866.

[L. S.] DAVID S. WALKER,
Governor of Florida.

By the Governor:
Attest: BENJAMIN F. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the credentials first read, and the paper purporting to be evidence that the constitutional amendment has been ratified by the Legislature of Florida, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. To that motion the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] moves an amendment.

Mr. FERRY. I withdraw the amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the motion by including in it the credentials just read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Senators suggest that they prefer to take the question on each case separately, and that I can make the motion to refer these papers afterward, if the others are referred. To gratify Senators I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the credentials first offered to the Committee on the Judiciary, with the resolutions of ratification of the Legislature of Florida.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. STEWART called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the yeas and nays are to be taken, I wish in one word to give the reason for my vote. I have, as it now strikes me, no difficulty with the question of terminology—if my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] thinks that is a proper word to use—which has been raised here; but considering the condition that these States have been in, and the fact that there are several other cases more or less analogous to come to us, I think that it is wise, as a mere matter of precaution, although I myself see no objection to these papers, to send them to the committee. The committee meet to-morrow and can report to-morrow; and then everybody will be satisfied, and we shall have a precedent and method of doing business which will not leave us so liable as we are, in doing things in the haste of this method, to go astray. That is my reason for voting to refer, not that I see any difficulty in the case.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, and Vickers—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morton, Nye, Pomerooy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Conkling, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, and Sprague—10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] that the Senator-elect be permitted to take the oaths.

Mr. DRAKE. I ask for the reading of the supposed resolution of ratification by the Legislature of Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the people of the State of Florida in Senate and Assembly represented, That the following proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States, known as articles thirteenth and fourteenth, be, and the same are hereby, adopted:

XIII AMENDMENT.

SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. And Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

XIV AMENDMENT.

1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws.

2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President or Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such disability.

4. The validity of the public debt of the United States authorized by law, including debts incurred for the payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

5. Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Passed in the Senate June 9, A. D. 1868.

HORATIO JENKINS, Jr., President.
WILLIAM LEE APTHORP, Secretary.

Passed by the Assembly, June 9, A. D. 1868.

W. W. MOORE, Speaker.
WILLIAM FORSYTH BYNUM, Clerk.

Approved, June 11, A. D. 1868.

HARRISON REED, Governor.

STATE OF FLORIDA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE.

This is to certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution, as the same appears on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Florida, this 22d day of June, A. D. 1868.

HARRISON REED, Governor.

Mr. DRAKE. I trust now, sir, that the Senate will perceive the propriety of the investigation of this matter by the Judiciary Committee, which I desired should be made. There are no less than six variations between the fourteenth constitutional amendment as set out in that joint resolution and the one that was proposed. And now the question is whether we are to admit this State into the Union with a ratification of the constitutional amendment in any other shape than the exact form in which it was proposed.

In the first place, there are some of those variations that perhaps might not be regarded as material, there are others that are material. In the first section, where the amendment reads that certain persons "are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside," the word "of" is left out before the words "the State." In the last line of that first section, which reads in the original "nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws," the word "its" is substituted for the word "the" before "laws," which I take to be a very material variance not only in language, but in substance. And, sir, how do you know, how does anybody know to-day, that that was not an intentional variation put in there by the Legislature of Florida?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Read that sentence again?

Mr. DRAKE. Nor shall any State "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws;" and they have it in their resolution "protection of its laws." Is that the amendment that you proposed to that State to ratify? It is not the amendment; and now you are pressing or rushing into an admission of the Senators and Representatives from that State here when they have not ratified the amendment that you sent to them. "Its laws" may mean one thing, and "the laws," which mean all laws which bear upon that State, may be an entirely different thing.

Again, sir, the third section of the amendment reads in the original "no person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President." In this it reads "or Vice President." I do not attach great importance to that; but still it is a verbal difference; it is not the amendment that we proposed.

But here, sir, is another change which is material in my judgment. In that same third section the words in the original are, "shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or give aid or comfort to the enemies thereof." They have it there "aid and comfort," substituting the word "and," the copulative instead of the disjunctive "or." That I take to be substance.

Again, sir, the fifth variation is the insertion in the fourth section of the particle "the" before the word "payment." I do not attach any importance to that. Again, the substitution of the word "or" for "nor" in that same section where it reads in the original, "But neither the United States nor any State shall assume," &c. There they have substituted the word "or" for "nor." I do not attach great importance to that; but here, Mr. President, are no less than six variations between the amendment they set out in their joint resolution and that which we proposed to them, and two of those variations are matters of substance.

Now, sir, I have done my duty; I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the very evidence which they present here to show that they have ratified the constitutional amendment proves that they have not done it, and that they have ratified another thing. Now, if the Senate choose to admit their Senators, let them go ahead and do it as fast as they please; my duty is done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senator-elect from Florida be permitted to take the oaths with a view to be admitted to his seat.

Mr. DRAKE. I will make one inquiry before I take my seat. That, I presume, necessarily affirms on the part of those who vote to sustain that motion that that State has ratified the constitutional amendment. Is not that so, sir?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I suppose it is.

Mr. DRAKE. Very well, sir; I call for the yeas and nays upon the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. So far as these objections are concerned, these variations that have been pointed out by the Senator from Missouri, they are clearly not of substance in this connection. It was not necessary to set forth these amendments at all. They would have been sufficiently described by saying "the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments." That was all that was necessary, and these verbal differences amount to nothing, because the amendments are fully and completely identified. Although there may be these verbal differences, does anybody doubt but what they are the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments as proposed by Congress? All that is required is, that the amendments ratified shall be pointed out, shall be designated with reasonable certainty—

Mr. CONNESS. Identified.

Mr. MORTON. Identified, to use that word; and are they not identified? The variances themselves are immaterial. They would not be good on a special demurrer in any court. They do not go to the substance. It seems that the Clerk in copying them has used the word "or" where he should have said "nor," and he has put the word "its" where he should have said "the;" but the meaning of the amendments is not changed; and certainly there is no doubt as to what amendments are intended. They describe the amendments as the thirteenth and fourteenth proposed by Congress to be ratified or adopted by the several States. Upon that subject there is no doubt; and these verbal differences in this connection are utterly unimportant.

Mr. HOWARD. I had hoped, sir, that this matter would have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the purpose of removing any uncertainties which might exist in the papers, and I supported the motion to refer because it struck me that the form of ratification was, to say the least, unusual, the language not being that of the Constitution, and possibly not embracing what is intended by the Constitution. I raised this doubt for the purpose of eliciting some discussion on the subject. It seems, however, that the Senate, in voting by a very large majority not to refer the papers to the committee, are of opinion that that form of ratification is sufficient, and that the language used by the Legislature of Florida, "adopted," is the equivalent of the word "ratified" in the Constitution itself. So far I have effected one purpose, and that was to ascertain the sense of the Senate upon that point; and that being the sense of the Senate, as appears by a very large majority, I shall now vote to admit the Senator to his seat.

I do not think, however, that the copy of the fourteenth article of amendment, as set out in the paper furnished to the Senate, is the official, authentic copy. It was not necessary, as has been very properly remarked by the Senator from Indiana, that the Legislature of Florida should undertake to furnish a copy in totidem verbis of the article. The official and conclusive proof of what the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution is exists in the roll itself engrossed and filed away with the proper Department of the Government. That is the official evidence of what is meant by Congress and by the States ratifying it by "the fourteenth amendment." I therefore look upon these small discrepancies pointed out so ingeniously by the Senator from Missouri as being entirely immaterial, so far as the evidence of what the amendment actually is, is concerned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Legislature of Florida, according to this transcript which they send us, did not have the thirteenth and fourteenth articles before them to adopt, unless these articles which they set out are substantially the thirteenth and fourteenth articles.

Mr. HOWARD. Are they not bound to take notice of the fact that the public statutes exist?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not by any means, when as an independent State they are called upon to give the assent of their will to what then amounts to a compact between the Government of the United States and the State, and an irreversible contract. Suppose the Legislature of Florida had had an entirely and totally different paper, the reverse of this one that we have got before us, before them, and some person who presented it had made that Legislature believe that that was the article they were called upon to see and to know; because the ground upon which we go is that when Congress proposed this article to those States as States the State of Florida was not in condition to receive any such proposal. It had no Legislature; it had no organized government. We set up one three or four days ago, or a week ago, whatever the time was. That body of men having a right to pass as a matter of will and assent upon the question of whether they would agree to this proposal, (because you must remember that by the Constitution of the United States amendments of the Constitution are mere proposals to the States in their sovereign, independent, and political capacity,) they have a text presented to them which differs in a material particular—take that for granted for the moment—from the original proposition that Congress has adopted. They adopt that false and different proposition and send it to the Secretary of State. Will my friend from Michigan or my friend from Indiana maintain that the Secretary of State will be authorized upon such a certificate, under the law as it now stands, to promulgate that that article had been adopted, supposing Florida to be the key-stone, so to speak, the last one of the three fourths? I take it nobody will maintain that proposition; and that is exactly this proposition, provided there is a material and substantial difference between the two documents. I agree that the mistake in the use of the word "the," or the dropping of an article or anything of that kind would make no difference; every lawyer knows that; but if there is a difference in substance, then you cannot say that the assent of the Legislature of Florida, which she says was given to this, was given to a different thing that she did not have before her. That is the proposition.

The question, then, with me is whether this document that is presented is substantially the fourteenth article. There does not seem to be any special question on the thirteenth. The Legislature of Florida gives notice to the United States as follows by this resolve:

"Be it resolved by the people of the State of Florida in Senate and Assembly represented, That the following proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States, known, &c., be, and the same are hereby, adopted."

They give their assent to that which follows.

Mr. CONNESS. Known as what?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Known as the thirteenth and fourteenth articles; but they say that that which is known as the thirteenth and fourteenth articles, and that to which they agree, is here written; and they say it in good faith. That happened to be a misprint, I suppose, in the copy that they happened to have before them. Now, they assent to that. It turns out that the article Congress proposed is an entirely different thing. Are you to say that by a vote adopting this the Legislature has adopted the other and the different one? She says that that article which is known as article fourteen to which she agrees is here written in the following language. If that language is entirely and substantially different upon a material point, can you say that she has not agreed to this, for which she has voted, and has agreed to another and a different proposal, for which she has not voted? If you can, you must possess powers of legal logic—

Mr. CONKLING. What is the difference?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are coming to see what the difference is, if there be any. The only material difference—for I do not wish to occupy time about this—is that which is contained in the clause read by the Senator from Missouri last:

"Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws."

That is to say, the laws of that individual State. What kind of a constitutional amendment would that be if Congress should propose it in that form; if we had coolly said to the State of Mississippi, with her black code and her unequal suffrage code, "You shall not deprive any person in the State of Mississippi of the equal protection of your laws;" that is to say, "you shall enforce your laws, just as the laws themselves are required to be enforced, upon all your persons according to their respective conditions;" that is, "you shall put your laws in process of execution there fairly and fully." Then she would be bound by such a constitutional provision to exclude the black man from the suffrage, to exclude him from the witness stand, and to hang him upon the testimony of any one white man who might choose to complain; whereas the United States, in order to overcome that very inequality of State laws, differing one from another as to the equal rights of persons, declared in the fourteenth amendment that the States should not deprive any person within their jurisdiction "of the equal protection of the laws." What laws? The laws of the land which the Constitution of the United States declares to be the acts of Congress made pursuant of it. That is what Florida was not to deprive any person of within her jurisdiction—the civil rights bill, which was carried through this body by the honorable Senator from Illinois. [Mr. TRUMBULL.] Now, Florida agrees, not by any intention, I do not wish to be understood, but as it stands here written in what she brings forward, that she will not deprive anybody within her borders of the protection of her own laws, will give them a fair chance under just such laws as she chooses to enact; and we call that a substantial agreement to what we have proposed, which was that she should not deny to anybody the protection of the laws of the United States. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator from Vermont bases his whole argument on an assumption and a presumption, when the legal presumption is directly against him. His whole argument is based on the assumption that a true copy of the amendment proposed by Congress was not sent to Florida. The presumption of law is that a true copy was sent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where do you get that presumption?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The presumption of law is universal, and with which my friend is very familiar, that every officer discharges faithfully and correctly his duty unless the contrary is shown. Therefore, the presumption is, that a true and correct copy was sent, and not that an erroneous one was, and that they did have the true amendment before them, and that having it before them they send us their certificate that they have adopted the thirteenth and the fourteenth amendments; and that is enough.

But they go further than that. They recite enough of those two amendments to further identify them than by their numbers. Why, sir, not only every State but every citizen of the United States knows, and is to be presumed to know, as a matter of current history, what this fourteenth amendment is. It is in every newspaper; every person reads it; and when Florida sends us word that she has adopted the fourteenth amendment, and the thirteenth amendment that is enough. Can it be that the fundamental law of a nation rests upon these critical inaccuracies? If you go and look at the amendments which have been adopted—I have never examined them—I venture to say that you can prove that not a single amendment has been adopted correctly to the Constitution, if leaving out the word "the" or substituting "its" for "the" is enough to upset a law. This objection would hardly be sufficient on a special demurrer to an indictment for counterfeiting. There is a principle of law which certainly we can invoke when we are dealing with great national subjects; de minimis non curat lex; the law itself will not pay attention to these little insignificant things.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to say but a word. I shall vote against this motion, but for another reason than that which is satisfactory to the minds of other gentlemen; a reason which is satisfactory to my own.

On the 3d of March, 1845, the State of Florida was admitted into the Union as one of the States of this Union. It has never been out of the Union. An effort was made to take it out of the Union, commencing in 1860; but that effort was overcome, and the State of Florida remained in the Union, and has continued to remain in the Union ever since its first admission on the 3d of March, 1845. My opinion is—I will not argue it, but simply state it—that neither by secession nor rebellion was it possible for the State of Florida to be taken out of the Union, unless that rebellion were consummated as a success and a triumph of arms in the end against the Government. The rebels had no power to cut their way out of the Union by the sword, because we wrested the sword out of their hands and compelled the State to remain in the Union as one of the States of the Union. Further, I hold it to be equally clear that Congress has no power by legislation to put a State out of the Union. Neither secession nor the legislation of Congress can accomplish it. The one is as much against the Constitution as the other.

The Legislature of the State of Florida on the 28th of November, 1866, elected Hon. William Marvin as a Senator for the term commencing on the 4th of March, 1867, to end on the 4th of March, 1873; which is the precise term for which the person who is now proposed to be admitted was elected; and, if I am correct—and the paper which I have presented to the Senate, I think, proves the election of Mr. Marvin as a Senator occupying this very term—I object to another person being sworn in to take a seat in the Senate in his place. I desired that this question should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and passed upon; but the Senate have been unwilling to do that, and therefore I have simply raised the point, without arguing it.

I will conclude by saying that Judge Marvin, who has been elected as a Senator from Florida, is a gentleman of high intelligence and high qualifications for the position. He was before and during the whole rebellion a most devoted friend to the Constitution and the Union, giving no aid, countenance, or comfort in any manner whatever to the rebellion; was himself acting as the judge of the district court of the United States at Key West a portion of the time, and therefore there can be no objection on the score of his not being entirely qualified to take the office or to take the oath of office which is required by law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. He says that Florida has never been out of the Union. No one pretends that it ever has been out of the Union; but this is a question of representation. I should like to ask him if he holds that Florida, with a confederate State government, was entitled to representation in Congress?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. While Florida was under the control of the confederate arms it would be impossible for Florida to hold an election either for a member of the House or a member of the Senate; but in 1866, almost a year and a half after the war was over, after peace had been proclaimed, and Congress had by law recognized the fact that peace was proclaimed, the Legislature of Florida, the State then being in a peaceful condition, assembled and elected the person to whom I have referred and whose credentials I have presented to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand the Senator to have answered the question which I propounded. He says that it was impossible for Florida during the rebellion while it had a confederate State government to hold an election. It was not physically impossible. Florida could have elected Senators and Representatives under that confederate State government; and the question is, would those Senators and Representatives, if elected, have been entitled at that time to admission into Congress? I should like to have the Senator make, if he pleases, a categorical answer to that question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have given the Senator the answer to the question. It was in Florida precisely as it would be in Oregon if there was an insurrection there. If there was an insurrection raging in Florida you could not hold an election. If there was an insurrection raging in the State of Maine, or if part of the State of Maine was captured, as it once was by British forces, you could not hold an election there. But I do not wish to go into a dialogue or a long discussion.

Mr. HOWE. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection to a question.

Mr. HOWE. The question is, if in fact Florida did not have a Legislature which met annually during the years of the war, which met and passed laws.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Florida organized a war with the confederate States against the Government of the United States, but in 1866 the war was over. Senators do not come to the point I make at all. There was no war in 1866. Peace had been proclaimed, and Congress by law had recognized the fact that peace was proclaimed. There was no insurrection and no interruption of the law.

Mr. HOWE. I asked permission to put a question to my colleague, and he allowed me to do it. Now I wish he would answer it. The question is, Did not Florida have a Legislature which met annually to pass laws through every year of the war?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose those adhering to the confederacy elected a Legislature.

Mr. HOWE. And if that Legislature met to pass laws, could not that Legislature choose Senators in spite of the war? Will my colleague answer?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My colleague is putting a case which of course it is impossible to suppose could exist. The confederate assembly met, making war on the United States. Is it supposable that they could elect or would elect Senators in Congress?

Mr. CONNESS. If they did what?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. But if they did elect Senators in Congress that were against this Government, could not this Senate take care of itself and keep them out? I will ask my colleague if he says that Florida was ever a State out of the Union. I wish he would answer my question categorically. Was Florida ever a State out of this Union?

Mr. HOWE. No.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will ask him another question. If under the Constitution Florida was a State in this Union was she not entitled to two Senators in this body?

Mr. HOWE. While she was a State in the Union she was.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Very well.

Mr. HOWE. But to be a State in the Union, which entitles her to two Senators, it was necessary for her to have a government which could elect the Senators; and I have been trying to get my colleague to say whether during the war she had such a government or not. He says she could not elect because of the war; and the Senator from Oregon says that did not make it physically impossible, and my colleague repeated that it made it impossible. I asked him to confess whether Florida did or did not have a Legislature which met to enact laws? He says yes. I asked if when they met to enact laws they could not have gone through the form of choosing Senators. He seems to think that possibly they might; but he says if they did choose Senators the Senate could take care of itself and reject them. But what right has the Senate to reject them if the Legislature have a right to choose them and do choose them? Can the Senate reject representatives from States which have a right to elect and which do elect?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think the Senate has shown that it has the right and the power to keep men out of this body for treason, or to expel them for treason. The Senate certainly has exercised that power to expel or prevent men from coming into this body when they were elected from States that had never been in the rebellion; and it would be most extraordinary if the Senate could not expel or keep out persons from States that were in actual war against the Government of the United States. I admit that when the State was in actual war against the Government of the United States, and the Legislature was at war with us, and their troops were at war, if it were not physically impossible that they should enter into an election of Senators to this body, it would be, in my judgment, morally impossible that they should attempt to do it; and, in the second place, if they did attempt to do it, as a matter of course it would be morally impossible to suppose that the Senate would permit men in arms against the Government to come in here and take places in the Senate.

But, sir, the point I make is this: in 1866, almost two years after the war was closed, after the rebellion was suppressed and Congress by law had admitted the fact that the rebellion was suppressed, the Legislature of Florida peacefully assembled and elected the gentleman whose credentials I have sent to the Chair. They certainly had the right to do it.

Mr. NYE. I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] that he shorten this debate. His colleague's opinions will be found in the last veto message, and therefore it is not worth while to prolong this discussion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to ask, in no captious spirit, a question of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Doolittle.] I wish to know the theory upon which he proceeds. I do not know whether he was one of the Senators, almost the entire body, who voted at one time that Florida had not a right to be represented in the Electoral College?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. While the insurrection was going on. It was impossible for Florida to elect electors while a war was going on. So it would be in Rhode Island if there were a rebellion there.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not understand that Congress resolved that it was impossible for Florida to elect, but that Florida had no right to elect, whether possible or not. If Congress assumed at a certain time that Florida had no right to be represented in the Electoral College—which depends, I take it, upon the same principle as representation in the two Houses of Congress—is not the Congress the power to decide when that disability ceases?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Before this election in Florida took place Congress had by law recognized the proclamation of the President which proclaimed that the war had ceased and the rebellion was suppressed. Congress by law had recognized that fact before this election took place.

Mr. ANTHONY. But I understand that Congress resolved, and I think my friend from Wisconsin voted with the great body of the Senate—I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Davis] and two others were the only ones who voted in the negative—that Florida had no right under existing circumstances to representation in the Electoral College, and Congress has not yet voted that it has the right to be represented; and I take it that the representation in the Electoral College depends precisely upon the same principle that should govern representation in the two Houses of Congress. Therefore, it seems to me, if Congress has a right to affirm the disability, it depends upon Congress to say when the disability ceases.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I agree with the Senator that while the war was going on in 1864 Congress passed a joint resolution in which they declared that the electors chosen for President and Vice President in the States where the insurrection was going on should not be counted in the Electoral College. They said substantially that in those insurrectionary States; but it only applied to that single time, and since that time the proclamation of peace and the passage of a law by Congress recognizing the proclamation of peace occurred before this election of Mr. Marvin in Florida.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator will allow me to say that he does not meet my question. His argument is that the time had come when Congress ought to declare this disability had ceased; but Congress, I presume, is to judge of that time for itself; and although it may be true that Congress ought to have declared that Florida was entitled to representation before, yet inasmuch as Congress did not so declare, if the first affirmation of disability was valid is it not necessary that Congress should remove that disability before Florida is entitled to representation? I wish to know what is the theory of the Senator upon that point, and I do not ask in any captious spirit.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state to the Senator in a single word that my theory is precisely this: each House has a perfect right to judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members; the Senate for itself, the House of Representatives for itself. If a man applies to be admitted here as a Senator this House will judge, and has the right to judge, whether the State which purports to send him was in a condition to elect him or not. Precisely so in relation to a district represented in the House of Representatives. If, for instance, an insurrection is existing in a single congressional district of a State the election in that district may be void, because it is impossible to hold an election. Take the case of the State of my honorable friend from Maine. The British captured one congressional district in that State in 1812. They could not elect a member of Congress at that time who could be admitted to the House, for they were not in a condition to elect. Suppose they had captured two or three or four districts of the State of Maine, it could not prevent the other districts from electing a member of the House, and the House is to judge whether the election has taken place fairly or unfairly; whether the people have had a fair opportunity to elect and have elected. The House will judge for itself. The Senate will not judge for the House, nor the House for the Senate. That is precisely the true theory, in my judgment.

I did not intend to make a speech nor take up the time of the Senate; but gentlemen have put questions to me on this matter, and I have answered, endeavoring to be as brief as possible. I have no disposition to prolong the debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the Senator-elect from Florida now be permitted to take the oath with a view to admission to his seat in the Senate of the United States?

Mr. DRAKE. I wish to make another effort to send this supposed resolution of the Legislature of Florida ratifying the constitutional amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not exactly know whether a motion of that kind is in order at this moment or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly it is.

Mr. DRAKE. The Senator from Vermont says "certainly it is." All I want is that we shall delay action upon the credentials of the Senator from Florida until we have a report upon this supposed ratification. That is what I wish to get at; but I do not know exactly how to do it unless it be to make a double motion to lay the credentials of the Senator from Florida on the table and to refer the resolution of the Legislature of Florida to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A simple motion to refer would take them both there.

Mr. DRAKE. That motion has already been put and negatived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But after debate you can move to refer again at any time.

Mr. DRAKE. If it is in order, I make that motion, to lay the credentials of the Senator from Florida on the table, and to refer the resolution of the Legislature of Florida to the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those are two separate motions.

Mr. DRAKE. There are two separate papers, and we must deal with them, it seems, separately. They are both presented in support of the claim of the gentleman to be admitted as a Senator on the floor. Now, the question is whether I can make a motion that relates to both of the papers or a separate motion for each paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no doubt the Senator can move to lay either or both on the table.

Mr. DRAKE. Then, for the purpose of getting at an authoritative expression on the part of the Senate by its Judiciary Committee as to whether this constitutional amendment has been ratified, and with a view to send that resolution of the Legislature of Florida to that committee, I move, in the first instance, to lay the credentials of the Senator from Florida on the table.

Mr. CORBETT. I ask if it would not be in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the motion to refer the credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary was negatived?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course that would be in order if any Senator chooses to make the motion.

Mr. CORBETT. Then, if the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his motion, I will move to reconsider that vote.

Mr. DRAKE. I will withdraw it, of course. All I want is to get the matter before the committee.

Mr. CORBETT. I voted against the reference of this question to the Judiciary Committee, but I think the points made by the Senator from Missouri are well taken, and therefore shall now support his motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee.

My own impression is that perhaps the setting out of the adoption of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments sufficiently describes them; but certain important errors have crept into the copy of the fourteenth amendment in that resolution, and I desire the opinion of the Judiciary Committee, not only on this case, but for future cases that may arise. I think that errors may be found hereafter in the constitutional amendment as adopted by other States, and as a precedent I desire to have this referred to the Judiciary Committee. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to refer the credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONNESS. Upon that motion I make the question of order that the motion is not in order, because there is a pending motion that the Senator-elect be admitted to take the oath, which is a motion of superior privilege because first made. And upon that motion, also, I wish to say that it is competent for the Senate to settle this whole question. If there be a majority of the Senate in favor of his taking the oath there is a majority against a reference. I make the question of order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the motion to reconsider prevails, then the motion to allow the oath to be administered will go with the credentials to the committee.

Mr. CONNESS. It will not.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from California is unusually positive. If he decided that alone, it would be settled; but as I think it is competent for the Senate to send to a committee a motion as well as a paper, that motion can go with the paper, and ought to go there. I submit to Senators, although they may be convinced that there is nothing wrong in the credentials, nothing wrong in the ratification of the amendment, that they are all right, there is no delay by this motion. We have spent more time this morning about it than would have been spent in the whole business if it had been referred to the Judiciary Committee. The committee meets to-morrow in the regular course of its business, and I submit, to facilitate the business of the Senate, this motion had better prevail.

Mr. CONNESS. I propose that we proceed in order. I make the question of order and ask the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that. There is a motion pending, the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe,] to permit this gentleman to take the oaths, on which the yeas and nays have been called, and which must be disposed of before another independent motion can be put. One has no precedence over the other.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understood the Senator from Oregon to move to refer that motion to the Committee on the Judiciary. That certainly I presume to be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Oregon was to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to refer the credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move, if that motion is not pending, that this motion be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I prefer to have the motion of the Senator from Oregon to reconsider; I think that is the better way to take the sense of the Senate; but if we are put upon parliamentary tactics we will take advantage of them; that is all.

Mr. CONNESS. I make the question of order that when a motion is made which is a privileged question—that is, which has the privilege of being put—it cannot be disposed of by another motion to refer the preceding motion to a committee. If it can then we can do no business at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree to that fully.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Chair to decide.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not interrupt the Chair certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no privileged motion here. Neither of those motions has a privilege over the other.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are entirely independent motions, and the first made must be disposed of first. The question now is, Shall the Senator-elect from Florida be admitted to take the oaths and take his seat? The Senator from Rhode Island moves that that motion be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I can hardly think that that is in order, because you never could get a decision in that way. Motion after motion might be put, and the last one would have to go to a committee. I know of no case where motions of that kind have been referred, and I think I can see great difficulty in establishing such a rule.

Mr. DRAKE. I now renew my motion to lay the credentials of the Senator from Florida on the table.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator withdraw that for a moment? I certainly do not mean to differ from the Chair but with great respect; but I understand that every motion may be, on the demand of the Chair or of any Senator, reduced to writing. Suppose this motion, that the Senator be admitted to take the oath, be reduced to writing; then is it not in order to refer that to the Committee on the Judiciary? I do not desire to make that motion. I much prefer that the other motion made by the Senator from Oregon shall be put, which will fairly test the sense of the Senate. The Senate have decided not to refer this question to the Judiciary Committee. Since that decision there have been other and, it seems to me, pretty important reasons why it should be done brought before the Senate; and I think it would be fair if my friend from California would allow that question to be put. But if he will not allow that to be put, I respectfully submit to the Chair if I have not the right to demand that the motion that is made be reduced to writing, and when reduced to writing, if I have not a right to move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary? That is a course I do not wish to take, because I think the other course the most natural and more in accordance with the good-natured way in which we transact business here.

Mr. CONNESS. My position is this: reducing a motion to writing gives it no extra validity. A motion orally made is substantially the same as if it were reduced to writing, and there is no privilege, by being reduced to writing, existing on the part of the Senator to refer it. It is the privilege of the Senate when a motion is made to vote upon that motion; and the Senator must see that if a majority of this body are in favor of applying the oath, that decides the whole question. Why are not gentlemen content to take that decision and let us vote?

Mr. CORBETT. I am as anxious for the admission of Florida as any other Senator on the floor; and I have no doubt that if the Senator from California will withdraw his objection and allow us to test the question of reconsidering the vote on the motion to refer these papers to the Committee on the Judiciary we shall sooner dispose of the question. If he does not I shall be obliged to vote against the admission of the Senator from Florida until they are referred. It seems to me it is important as a precedent for the future that these papers should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as these errors clearly show that there may be errors hereafter committed in the ratification by other States, and they should be adjudged by the Judiciary Committee. I hope my friend from California will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONNESS. Why will not the Senator from Oregon permit the question to be taken? If a majority of the Senate refuse to have the oath administered, then his motion can be put. If a majority of the Senate are in favor of administering the oath, certainly they ought to be permitted to do so.

Mr. CORBETT. For the very reason that there are many Senators here who do not desire to vote against allowing the Senator from Florida to take the oath. I, for one, do not. But I desire to refer this matter to the Judiciary Committee. It can there be examined, and the Senator-elect can be admitted to-morrow. It is merely a form.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We have occupied so much time on this matter that I hope we shall conclude it now if it takes all day. As to referring it to the Judiciary Committee, there is no reason given for it. When I was up a few minutes ago, I said I had no doubt that if we examined the ratifications by other States there would be found the same inaccuracies. I have examined the ratification of four States, Pennsylvania, New York, Wisconsin, and Michigan, and there are inaccuracies in those four; and I presume if I went on and made the examination I should find like inaccuracies in each certificate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Material ones?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Some of them material. The reason that I object to this going to the Judiciary Committee is that I am opposed to the Congress of the United States making their fundamental law to rest upon the accuracy or inaccuracy in these minor particulars of the copy of a resolution. In the ratification of the State of Wisconsin, in one sentence, there are four or five errors.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Point out one or two of them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will read one sentence:

"But whenever the right to vote at any election for electors of President and Vice President."

I ask the Senator from Illinois to be good enough to read from the statutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The resolution, as it reads in the statutes, is:

"But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors."

The words "the choice of" are left out in the Wisconsin certificate. Then in the statutes it proceeds:

"For President and Vice President of the United States."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In this it reads "of President and Vice President." The words "of the United States" are left out.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And the word "for," before "President," in the resolution is "of," as it is copied there.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. "Or for United States Representatives in Congress."

Mr. TRUMBULL. Instead of "for United States Representatives in Congress," the act says "Representatives in Congress."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. "Executive or judicial officers."

Mr. TRUMBULL. "Executive and judicial officers of a State."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And so you might go through all of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All those mean precisely the same thing on the face of it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In the ratification of the State of Pennsylvania instead of its being "the laws" it is "the law;" and that of the State of New York has two or three inaccuracies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of order is made and it ought to be decided. The Chair has already stated that in his opinion a motion to refer another motion is not in order. It takes nothing with it in this case. There are many motions that may be made that can be referred because they take some substantial thing along with them to be deliberated upon and decided by the committee. But here is a motion to admit this Senator to take the oath. A motion to refer that motion to a committee takes nothing with it; there is nothing for the committee to consider; and therefore, and because of its inconvenience, the Chair believes it not to be in order; that it would establish a bad rule. If Senators think that is a wrong decision, and probably it may be, they will take an appeal and settle the question.

Mr. DRAKE. Is my motion to lay the matter on the table in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly it is.

Mr. DRAKE. I made that motion some time ago, and a debate for fifteen or twenty minutes has followed upon it. I insist upon my motion to lay the credentials on the table, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator moves that the credentials be laid on the table with a view to make another motion.

Mr. DRAKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to a question of order. I submit that if the credentials be laid on the table it does not interfere with administering the oath to the Senator-elect, and therefore, as it does not, the motion to administer the oath must take precedence of the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. DRAKE. I take it that is not a correct view of the order in the case.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest that the question now before the Senate is not upon the credentials at all. It is upon the question of admitting this gentleman to a seat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on swearing in the Senator.

Mr. DRAKE. I move to postpone that question until to-morrow, and I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion. I do this merely to get at the other question of referring the resolution of the Florida Legislature to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Chief Clerk called Mr. ANTHONY's name.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to say, as the yeas and nays are called, that I am as much in favor of admitting the Senators from Florida as any member of this body. I desire, however, that when they come in they shall come in correctly, and in such a way that neither we nor they will have any occasion to regret it. I think there is fair ground of presumption that there is some irregularity in the proceedings, although I am inclined to think it will be found, upon investigation, that they are sufficiently regular for them to be admitted as Senators, and if I were obliged to vote on the subject to-day I should vote to admit them; but I prefer that these papers should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and I should prefer that every State now coming in that has been separated from us should have the credentials of its Senators referred to the same committee. I vote yea.

Mr. POMEROY. I was going to say—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate must stop here. The call of the roll has commenced.

Mr. POMEROY. I think it hardly fair for the Senator from Rhode Island to make a speech and then respond to the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think my vote ought to count. I think, having spoken, my name should have been called again.

Mr. POMEROY. I was only going to say that I never knew before, where a motion was made to lay on the table and then a motion to postpone, that the motion to postpone took precedence of the motion to lay on the table.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Corbett, Davis, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Hendricks, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, and Vickers—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howard, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, and Van Winkle—12.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the Senator from Florida be permitted to take the oaths with a view to take his seat in the Senate of the United States? on which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire simply to say that considering the question as having been decided by the Senate, I shall now vote for the admission of the Senator from Florida.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 34, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Drake, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howard, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Johnson, McCreery, and Vickers—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, and Van Winkle—16.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator-elect from Florida will please come forward and receive the oaths.

Mr. OSBORN advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore, and the oaths prescribed by the Constitution and the act of July 2, 1862, having been administered to him he took his seat in the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. No. 529) to establish rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, is before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I take it it was not the purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts, when he moved for an evening session yesterday, to displace the appropriation bill. I trust, therefore, he will have no objection to allowing this bill to be laid aside.

Mr. WILSON. It was not my purpose to interfere with the appropriation bill, but I believe the debate is now over on this bill, and it will take no time. I think it can be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope both Senators will allow the ordinary morning business to be disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow my bill to come up first, and then I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to go through the morning business, it will be done.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the appropriation bill taken up first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now I have no objection to the ordinary morning business being disposed of.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 90) to authorize and require the administration of oaths in certain cases, and to punish perjury in connection therewith;

A bill (H. R. No. 293) to regulate and limit the admiralty jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. No. 568) explanatory of the act entitled "An act declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases."

The message also announced that the House had passed the following resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives adjourn their respective Houses without day on Wednesday, the 15th of July next, at noon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 522) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Core; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Margaretta S. Morse, administratrix of the estate of Isaac E. Morse, deceased, praying for compensation for services rendered by Isaac E. Morse as commissioner to New Granada; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition signed by merchants of Boston, in which they represent that it is now proposed under an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts to build a bridge called the Maverick bridge across the harbor of Boston. They set forth that this would curtail the area of the harbor—already small—for the anchorage of ships; cut off the United States navy-yard and all wharves above the contemplated bridge from open communication with the sea; and in other ways would seriously injure the harbor, and through that would injure the commerce of Boston. On that account they ask that Congress will not give its sanction to the erection of that bridge. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a remonstrance of citizens of Pennsylvania, protesting against any action of Congress which would tend toward the reduction of the present duty upon coal, as such action would be disastrous to a large number of citizens of the United States and would benefit none, besides which the United States Treasury would suffer a loss of revenue to the extent of any reduction that was made; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and to the widows of such as have died; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BUCKALEW, it was Ordered, That Chauncey Smith, guardian of the minor children of Presley N. Guthrie, have leave to withdraw his petition from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, it was Ordered, That Mrs. C. S. Wilson have leave to withdraw her petition from the files of the Senate, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. CORBETT, it was Ordered, That Henry Bailey have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 564) for the relief of Hulings Cowperthwaite and Enoch H. Vance, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1325) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, reported it without amendment.

SALE OF SURPLUS DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library to report a joint resolution (S. R. No. 153) authorizing the sale at public auction of certain surplus books and documents now in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior, and recommend its passage, and if there be no objection I ask for its consideration at this time.

The joint resolution was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not like to interpose. If it leads to no debate, I will not object; but if it does, I shall be compelled to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made, the joint resolution will be read through.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the joint Library Committee of Congress, to sell at public auction such books and documents now in the custody of his department and published by the order of Congress or of any officer or department of the Government as are not needed for distribution under existing laws or to supply deficiencies in the Library of Congress or in the Library of either House, and the net proceeds of such sale are to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to have some explanation of this resolution. These documents have been ordered by various resolutions to be distributed; but it has been found, I think, in some cases impracticable to carry the resolutions into effect. The intention of leaving these documents with the Secretary of the Interior was that there might be a fund for supplying new State libraries when new States are organized, and also for supplying other deficiencies; that there should be a supply there in case other depositories should be destroyed. I have not examined this matter.

Mr. MORGAN. The matter has been up once or twice, and was finally referred to a sub-committee of the joint Library Committee, and after a good deal of consideration they concluded to report in favor of this disposition of the books. The Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] was one member of the sub-committee and a member of the House another. It will be seen that by the language of the resolution they will be under the control of the joint Committee on the Library if the resolution passes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator state what books they are and how many there are?

Mr. MORGAN. It is impossible for me to tell what they are. I have not seen them.

Mr. ANTHONY. A great many of them, I believe, are the Annals of Congress, which would bring nothing at all at auction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senator from New York will allow this resolution to go over.

Mr. MORGAN. If it is objected to I must do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not object to it, but before it is passed I should like to understand what it is. A large portion of these documents I presume to be the Annals of Congress, very valuable documents, but which would not bring any more than their value as waste paper at public auction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another document which I think will be found among them, and that is the second series of the State Papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As this joint resolution is leading to debate, the regular order is called for, and the appropriation bill must be taken up.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to make two or three reports for the printing of documents such as the public convenience requires should be disposed of now, as the type is standing. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the Army Register, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I cannot agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made it cannot be considered.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no objection to the resolution. The type is standing and the public convenience and public economy will be promoted by disposing of it at once.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it takes no time I will not object.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Maine withdraws his objection. He always does; he is so good-natured.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the Army Register for 1863 be printed for the use of the Senate.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the Navy Register, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That one thousand copies of the Navy Register for 1863 be printed for the use of the Senate.

TRADE WITH BRITISH PROVINCES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the same committee to report back the following resolution without amendment, and recommend its passage:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of Executive Document No. 240 H. R., parts one and two, and No. 295 H. R., be printed for the use of the Senate.

I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MORTON. What are those documents?

Mr. RAMSEY. A report on the trade with the British provinces.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental report on trade with the British American provinces."

Mr. ANTHONY. It will only cost sixty-five dollars.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 583) in relation to the transportation of United States mails by railroad companies; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 90) to authorize and require the administration of oaths in certain cases, and to punish perjury in connection therewith;

A bill (H. R. No. 292) to regulate and limit the admiralty jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. No. 568) explanatory of the act entitled "An act declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases."

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the adjournment sine die of the two Houses on the 15th of July, was, on motion of Mr. SUMNER, ordered to lie on the table.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask leave to lay before the Senate certain papers relating to the Pacific railroad, containing a statement of the amount of bonds issued to the Union Pacific railroad and its branches, with the amount of interest paid upon those bonds to those companies, and interest repaid by the companies to the Government; and I ask that they may be printed for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the following clause from line four hundred and fifty-six to line four hundred and sixty:

For care, support, and medical treatment of sixty transient paupers, medical and surgical patients, in some proper medical institution in the city of Washington, under a contract to be formed with such institution, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment, and declared it to be agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I must ask for a division. Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senator will let it go. Provision will be made for it in the other bill, to which I alluded yesterday.

Mr. HARLAN. I shall not insist on the call, with the understanding that the committee will see that it comes in on some other bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly; there is not the slightest danger of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert at the end of the bill:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay for fitting necessary shelving, and for record books furnished or ordered for the office of register of deeds of the District of Columbia, during the period when Edward C. Eddie was such register, $550.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not know from where that amendment sprang, but under existing laws the register of deeds in the District of Columbia furnishes his own stationery. The law provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall provide him with a suitable room in which to keep the records, but from the foundation of the office up to this time the register has furnished his own books and stationery. I should like, therefore, to know what the reason is for giving this additional pay to the estate of the late incumbent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This amendment is proposed on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, who represents that this expenditure was made for the purposes indicated in this amendment. A part of the money proposed to be appropriated is to pay for "necessary shelving," which I suppose would be covered by the statement of the Senator that the Department furnish the room.

Mr. HARLAN. I think that part of the proposition is right.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It also includes another item, "and for record books." I presume the stationery would naturally enough be covered by the perquisites of the office, but probably an appropriation is needed for the permanent record books.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that last year we made, on his recommendation as Secretary of the Interior, an appropriation for this purpose to Mr. Hall, who was register. The money which this appropriation proposes to refund was paid by Mr. Eddie for record books, which remain in the office and are now used there. I trust no objection will be made to the appropriation; it is a very small sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following clause:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to complete the alphabetical list of private claims to the end of the second session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and to pay outstanding claims for services rendered in the preparation of said work under a resolution of the Senate of March 16, 1863, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations are now through with.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On the sixteenth page, in line three hundred and seventy-one, I move to strike out the word "eight" and insert "twelve," and again in the same line to strike out the word "seven" and insert "ten," and in line three hundred and seventy-two to change the aggregate appropriation from $25,000 to $40,000; so as to make the clause read:

For surveying the public lands of Colorado at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and twelve dollars for section lines, $40,000.

This will make the rates for surveying in that Territory precisely what they are in all the other Territories mentioned in the bill. This amendment it is understood is assented to by the House committee, and I do not know how the error occurred in the amount. I have here an official report from the land department on this subject, but I believe there is no objection to the amendment, and therefore I will not go into the details.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not understand exactly under what rule this amendment is moved.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I submitted it yesterday, and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POMEROY. It is not reported on recommendation of any committee.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I gave notice of it yesterday.

Mr. HARLAN. I inquire whether the surveyor general of Colorado has been unable to procure the work at the rates that now stand in the bill. As I understand, the Senator's motion is to increase the price for surveying the public lands in Colorado.

Mr. BUCKALEW. To make it the same as in the other Territories. The surveyor general, who was formerly a citizen of my State, was here and gave a statement and exhibit of the whole case. It is well understood by the House committee at present, but the explanation was not made in time.

Mr. POMEROY. I did not know that an individual Senator, giving notice of it yesterday, brings it within the rule. That was the point I made.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offered the amendment in writing, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POMEROY. I admit all that; but our former rule was that no amendment of this nature to a general appropriation bill could be moved excepting upon the recommendation of a committee or on an estimate of the head of a Department. Now the rule is amended that all such recommendations shall be referred one day in advance to the Committee on Appropriations; but if this amendment could not have been received under the rule formerly, it cannot now, under the rule as latterly modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the amendment is reported by a committee I suppose it is not in order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly the first part of the amendment fixing the rates does not come under that rule; it would only affect the latter branch increasing the amount of the appropriation. I supposed that the committee agreed to this amendment—

Mr. POMEROY. I do not insist on the point. If the Committee on Appropriations are for the amendment I will not object; I will waive the rule so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was looking to see on what principle this could be moved; I had not raised the point about the authority to move it. There is a long list of rates fixed for the several Territories. I see that in Nebraska, for the same service, the rates for standard lines are fixed at not exceeding ten dollars; Colorado, for the same service, is fixed at fifteen dollars in the bill. I do not know that the Senator observed that. He will see that Colorado stands five dollars for standard lines higher than Nebraska. I think it is the same as Idaho, the same as Nevada, the same as Arizona. On the township lines it is less.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator will observe that there is a difference between the States and Territories. The rates are less in the State of Nebraska and the State of Kansas than in the Territories.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I examined this question by myself this morning to see whether there had been any communication from the General Land Office making a complaint of the sum fixed by the committee of the House, for the committee of the Senate followed the committee of the House; and I had not observed before that that office made any complaint of the appropriation for the service as thus fixed. I ought, perhaps, in justice to the Senator from Pennsylvania and to the Senate, to read a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which he expresses his solicitude that the sums estimated for in the general estimates should be preserved, all of them. He says:

"This morning I received another bill, No. 818, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, now before the Committee of the Whole House, containing reduced appropriations on account of the surveying service, which, if not restored to the sums estimated by this office as the lowest possible consistent with the exigencies of the prosecution of the public surveys, there will result great impediments in the carrying out of public requirements under sundry laws both in the field and office work in the office of the surveyor general."

On that statement I should say that it will be necessary to raise this appropriation. It is necessary, in the estimation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that the sum appropriated for this service should be increased.

Mr. HARLAN. I beg to express the hope that the Commissioner's recommendation may be followed. Without intending to eulogize that officer, I know he has been very careful in the expenditure of the public money, and in making his estimates for expenses, and has always placed them at the lowest figure since the war began which he thought was compatible with the public interests. I think that his estimates ought to be followed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The surveyor general of this Territory informs us that he is utterly unable to get the work done for the rates proposed in the bill; and if it should not be amended, surveying such as is contemplated in this clause will have to stop until the action of Congress hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think under the circumstances I shall not raise the point of order on the Senator from Pennsylvania unless some other Senator deems it advisable. Here seems to be an express recommendation on the part of the Commissioner that this sum should be appropriated, and in quite emphatic language he says the service will suffer if it is not done. Under these circumstances, perhaps, the Senate would think I ought not to object.

Mr. POMEROY. The proposition is to increase the appropriation from $25,000 to $40,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is it, and that puts it on the same footing as Nevada and Arizona and Idaho. The Senate will judge for themselves whether they ought or ought not to be about the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. By direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I have some amendments to offer. I move first, after line three hundred and ten, on page fourteen, to insert

For heating the Rotunda, the old Hall of the House of Representatives, and the offices and stairways connecting therewith, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move this amendment, to come in after line three hundred and twelve, on the same page:

For painting the exterior of the eastern portion of the City Hall, in Washington, $1,400.

For resetting steps, ealiking cornice, &c., $750.

For repairing roof, $100.

For repairs to tin-roof and rain-spouts, $200.

For sundry brick and carpenters' work, $350.

For renovating and ventilating court-room, $400. Provided, The corporate authorities of the city of Washington appropriate and expend a like sum for painting and repairs of the western portion of said building.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to ask the Senator whether he understands that by law, or by usage, or both, the Government of the United States appropriate for the erection and for the repairs of this building. Is that our obligation?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that to be so. The United States paid for building one half, I believe, of the City Hall, and they were to have the occupation of it for their own purposes. They have been in the habit, also, since of paying for the repairs of that part which they occupy. The City Hall is now in very bad condition; it is made of very soft stone; it has not been painted; and it is disintegrating, and it is very much out of repair. So is the roof. I have a letter from the architect of the Capitol extension, who examined it thoroughly, and made the calculations of the amounts necessary, and he states, to use his own expression, that the building is almost in a tumble-down condition. It ought to be repaired. There is no doubt of the necessity, no doubt about the practice, and none of the obligation. I make it dependent, as the city is rather remiss on its appropriating like sums to repair its part. It wants thorough painting outside and renovating in several particulars. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I offer this amendment, to come in after line four hundred and seventy-six, on page 20:

For continuing the United States twenty-inch water main from its present terminus on north B street on the east side of Delaware avenue to the United States branch twelve-inch main on First street east, $10,000.

This is a much-needed improvement, as there are great complaints of the scarcity of water in all that portion of this city east of the Capitol during the day, owing to the large quantity used as a motive power at the shops of the navy-yard. By connecting the two mains specified this difficulty will be obviated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Was this matter considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir. It is absolutely necessary to make this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire now to offer an amendment that comes from the Committee on Commerce, to come in after line one hundred and seventy-five on page 8:

For a new light-house on Half-Way Rock, on the coast of Maine, $50,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is that recommended by the Light-House Board?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is recommended by the board and recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I offer an amendment to come in at the close of the bill which is recommended by the joint Committee on Ordinance, which was constituted by a vote of the two Houses. I gave notice of my amendment yesterday:

That the sum of $15,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to defray the expenses of the joint Committee on Ordinance; and that the same shall be drawn from the Treasury upon the order of the Secretary of the Senate as it shall be required; and any portion of the amount hereby appropriated that shall be allowed by the said joint committee to witnesses attending before it, or other persons employed in its service, for per diem travel or other necessary expenses, and paid by the Secretary of the Senate in pursuance of the order of said joint committee, shall be accordingly credited and allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the Senator make some explanation of that.

Mr. HOWARD. I will say, then, that this amendment is recommended by the joint Committee on Ordnance, which was constituted at the first session of the present Congress. The committee have performed a very great amount of labor, and had numerous meetings on the subject referred to them, and called before them a great number of witnesses, whose testimony they have taken, and the amount of documentary proofs which they will in the course of this session be able to submit to Congress is quite large. The expenses of the committee of course have been considerable; and Congress having made no appropriation at all to pay the expenses of the committee for short-hand reporters, and traveling expenses and attendance of witnesses, &c., they have been obliged, through the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, to obtain an advance from one of the banks of this city to the amount at present of between seven and eight thousand dollars, which is justly due to the bank. We suppose that $15,000 will something more than cover the whole expenses of the committee; but we thought it best to ask for that amount, in order to be sure that we get a sufficiently large appropriation. I think there can be no hesitation about the propriety of the appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Of course, Congress having authorized a committee, is bound to pay the expenses; and if the Senator will state precisely what that sum is, that should be the sum appropriated.

Mr. HOWARD. It is impossible at present to state the exact amount, because the committee are not yet discharged from their duties. They are still pursuing the inquiries which were referred to them. The amount of expenses which they have already incurred must be somewhere about nine thousand dollars; perhaps even ten thousand dollars; I cannot state with precision. The amount which they have borrowed from a bank in this city is $7,000, and I think a little upward. That has been paid out to witnesses, clerks, &c., for labor actually performed. I think $15,000 will fully cover the expenses, and perhaps leave a small balance that will not be drawn.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to offer the following amendment, to come in after line two hundred and forty-two; I report it from the Committee on Commerce:

For the construction of a building to be used as a custom-house and United States court-room and post office at Portland, Oregon, $50,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator be good enough to tell us whether that is recommended by the Treasury Department?

Mr. CORBETT. I have inquired at the Treasury about the construction of such a building. I have a communication from the United States district attorney and the grand juries of two sessions of the courts asking for an appropriation for the construction of a court-house in Oregon. They represent that the present room they occupy is totally unfit; that it makes persons sick who are compelled to be there; it has no windows, and is lighted by a skylight. It really is unfit to be occupied for the purpose for which it is used. The post office is a small wooden building with no security for the valuable letters that are constantly being sent from there, and is totally inadequate to the wants of the second commercial city on the Pacific coast. I have here a statement from Mr. Mullett that there is no public building of any kind in that city for custom-house uses. I have also an estimate from him that such a building as we desire will probably cost from eighty to ninety thousand dollars, but $50,000 will be adequate for the present year to put the building in process of construction and push it forward.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not see in the papers submitted by the honorable Senator any recommendation either from the Treasury or the Interior Department.

Mr. CORBETT. The proposed building is to be used for a custom-house, a post office, and a court-room, and I did not think it was necessary to go to all the various Departments having charge of those matters. I sent to the Interior Department the papers relative to the court-room, and received for answer that they could not make any other provision. Now, a small room is rented there, and they have no power to make better arrangements.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All I can say is that these papers did not authorize the Committee on Appropriations to move this amendment to the bill, and I think I may say to the Senator from Oregon that it is not usual to make appropriations of this kind upon such papers. These papers are simply letters from the district attorney in Oregon, and petitions from the grand jury, and they have been, it seems, in the Department of the Interior; but the misfortune is that the Secretary of the Interior does not send them back with a recommendation, and the Secretary of the Treasury gives us no information on the subject. It will be seen that this building is to combine a court-house and a custom-house. Such appropriations are usually backed by a recommendation from the Department, with plans from the architect showing what the character of the building is, what its probable cost is to be, and what the demand for it is. All these particulars in this case seem to fail.

Mr. CORBETT. I had this proposition referred three or four days ago to the Committee on Commerce, and I did not learn from them that it was necessary to procure such recommendations. If I had I could have done so, no doubt. This is the place where my colleague and myself reside, and he knows the importance of such a building, and how much the interests of the Government and the convenience of citizens suffer by the want of it. It is the largest commercial city on the Pacific coast north of San Francisco, and pretty much all the custom duties collected in the State of Oregon are collected there, and of all the taxes collected in the State not less than one half are collected in Portland.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Suppose the Senator allows this matter to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire a vote on this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will this bill be disposed of to-day?

Mr. SHERMAN. I apprehend not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There will probably be time for this to-morrow.

Mr. CORBETT. The amendment which the Senator from Ohio intends to offer will lead to a long discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will have a chance afterward, if that amendment is disposed of. I desire—

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment proposed by my colleague may be temporarily withdrawn for the purpose of ascertaining if the Department will recommend this appropriation, with the understanding that it is to be renewed before any final action is taken on the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. CORBETT. I withdraw my amendment under those circumstances.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish now to submit the amendment of which I gave notice yesterday. I am not anxious to press an immediate vote on it, because it is an important one and will excite discussion; but as I have to be absent from the Senate I desire to offer the amendment, and then if the Senate is willing to let other amendments be taken up I shall not object. But I desire to offer the amendment from the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was read. It was to add to the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form and of such denominations as he may prescribe, redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty, thirty, and forty years, respectively, and bearing the following rates of yearly interest, payable semi-annually in coin, that is to say: the issue of bonds falling due in twenty years shall bear interest at five per cent.; bonds falling due in thirty years shall bear interest at four and a half per cent.; and bonds falling due in forty years shall bear interest at four per cent.; which said bonds shall be exempt from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority, and the same and the interest thereon, and the income therefrom, shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties to the United States, other than such income tax as may be assessed upon other incomes; and the said bonds and the proceeds thereof shall be exclusively used for the redemption, payment, or purchase of, or exchange for, an equal amount of any of the present interest-bearing debt of the United States, other than the existing five per cent. bonds and the three per cent. certificates, and may be issued to an amount, in the aggregate, sufficient to cover the principal of all outstanding or existing obligations as limited herein, and no more, but not to exceed $700,000,000 shall be of the issue redeemable in twenty years.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there is hereby appropriated out of the duties derived from imported goods the sum of $135,000,000 annually, which sum during each fiscal year shall be applied to the payment of the interest and to the reduction of the principal of the public debt, in such a manner as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, or as Congress may hereafter direct; and such reduction shall be in lieu of the sinking fund contemplated by the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes, and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the holder of any lawful money of the United States to the amount of $1,000, or any multiple of $1,000, may convert the same into bonds for an equal amount, authorized by the first section of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and any holder of any of the bonds provided for in the first section of this act may present the same to the Treasurer of the United States and demand lawful money of the United States for the principal and accruing interest thereon, and the Treasurer shall redeem the same in lawful money of the United States, unless the amount of United States notes then outstanding shall be equal to $400,000,000; and such bond shall not be so redeemable after the United States have resumed the payment of coin for their notes.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That any contract hereafter made, specifically payable in coin, shall be legal and valid, and may be enforced according to its terms, anything in the several acts relating to United States notes to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator does not wish to make an argument on his amendment, I will ask that it be postponed that I may offer—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Ohio move this as an amendment to the appropriation bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; but I am willing the Senate shall do as it pleases in regard to having a vote at this time. I want to have it pending.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I propose to raise a question, if not a question of order under the rule to which we have had occasion to refer, under the general principles of legislation that this is not allowable, that it has no reference to the subject of this bill; it is not germane in any sense whatever; does not relate to it in general or particular. This is an appropriation bill strictly, and subjects to have relation to it must be of that character. They must either be matters of appropriation or they must have reference to the subject-matter of appropriation in some way; and a bill which is utterly foreign to such a subject I conceive is obnoxious to the general objection that it is not germane, which, according to all sound principles of legislation, I believe obtains everywhere. This is a matter of general legislation upon a subject entirely distinct from the one we are considering. It has no more relation to it, I conceive, than the bill of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts which was before the Senate last night, which was a bill making rules and regulations for the government of the Army of the United States; and if this bill prevails my honorable friend from Massachusetts may with equal propriety, I submit, propose that bill as a rider; and so you may go on to the end of the session; there is no conceivable measure either of a general or special character which may not properly go upon this bill.

Now, the question I submit, Mr. President, is to the judgment of the Senate, whether they are willing upon a general bill which involves simply a question of appropriation to consider a matter of general legislation, and so general as to embrace the great subject of the entire funding system of the Government of the United States. Certainly the Senate is not here to perform any such function as that. Certainly the moment it is moved the functions of the Committee on Appropriations are at an end. So far as we have any functions in regard to the recommendation of appropriations for the service of the Government of the United States we stop right here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) Does the Chair understand the Senator to be discussing a point of order?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; I suppose that is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unwilling to call the Senator to order; but at the same time such a point of order cannot be discussed unless by unanimous consent. Still if no Senator objects the Chair will not interpose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will state his point of order the Chair will decide it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I make the point of order that this is not admissible because it is not germane to the subject under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the thirtieth rule.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not claim that the thirtieth rule has any application. I rest my point on general principles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is no specific rule of the Senate against this amendment; but the amendment can hardly be said to be germane to the bill, and under common parliamentary law it is not to be considered by the Senate; but there is no special rule of the Senate on the subject. The Senate has never held hitherto that such amendments could not be considered on an appropriation bill. We put on the amendment in reference to banks, I remember, once. The Chair decides that such amendments are not in harmony with parliamentary law and a good system of legislation.

Mr. SUMNER. I would inquire if it has not been the habit of the Chair to submit to the Senate the question whether an amendment was in order or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I was going to do that. While that is the opinion of the Chair, he would not like to decide the question without referring it to the Senate; and if the Senator from Ohio has no objection, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate at this time whether the Senator has the right to move this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That point, then, I suppose becomes debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order referred to the Senate is debatable.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is admitted that the rules of the Senate do not exclude this amendment. Now, what is the parliamentary law of this Senate? Where is it to be found? Is it to be found in Jefferson's Manual? Is it to be found in the practice of the English Parliament, or in the practice of our House of Representatives? Not at all; it is to be found in the practice of the Senate, as continued from the foundation of the Government to this hour; and down to this hour no amendment to an appropriation bill was ever excluded that had any bearing whatever on the general safety. I can show my friend from Maine innumerable precedents for this. Generally I am opposed, on grounds of policy, to all amendments of a legislative character to appropriation bills. No one has objected to it more strongly than myself; and but for special reasons and strong grounds I would not encumber the appropriation bills with legislative amendments. But so far as the practice is concerned, from the foundation of the Government to this time, there is no doubt that such amendments are in order, and must be decided by the vote of the Senate.

For instance, I find that to the very last civil appropriation bill that was pending in the Senate last year several amendments were attached; one abolishing the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings; another regulating the Light-House Board; another fixing the salary of the general appraiser at New York; another for the pay of the clerk of pardons in the State Department; another authorizing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to select the newspapers for the publication of the laws; another notifying the heads of the executive Departments that they are to publish advertisements only in certain newspapers; another fixing the rate to be paid for publishing the laws; another authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell custom-houses at Alexandria, Norfolk, &c.; another authorizing certain officers to report upon public buildings in New Mexico; another fixing the pay of clerks in the arsenals, and so on.

I take this single instance to show how universal by the judgment of the Senate is the practice of putting legislative amendments of various kinds on appropriation bills. There are times when it becomes absolutely necessary for the Senate to maintain its right to amend the appropriation bills of the House of Representatives by legislative amendments. It ought never to be done unless there is good reason for it; and when we come to debate the question of the necessity of putting on this appropriation bill these provisions relating to the public debt I shall be prepared to discuss that question. So far as the point of order is concerned there is no doubt according to the practice of the Senate. From the foundation of the Government to this time the Senate has always maintained its right to put amendments of a legislative character on appropriation bills; and it is a right which ought never to be surrendered; but it ought to be exercised with care, with caution, and only upon sufficient reason.

So far as the point of order is concerned there can be no doubt what is the parliamentary law of the Senate on such questions. It is not necessary for me to discuss what may be the parliamentary law of the House of Commons. Each legislative House has its own mode of conducting its business. The House of Representatives, by a rule, exclude amendments of a legislative character from the appropriation bills; that is their law. This would not be in order in the House of Representatives, because their rule expressly forbids it; but in the Senate it has never been so, and I trust the Senate will never change its rule merely to avoid a vote upon one amendment. This amendment is in order in accordance with the regular practice of the Senate. As a matter of course it ought not to be put on this bill unless a majority of the Senate are clearly of opinion not only that it is right in itself, but that it is right as an amendment to and as a part of this bill.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator state the reasons that induced the Committee on Finance to report it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not feel at liberty to do that on the question of order. The rule confines me to the discussion of the question of order, and I do not wish to go beyond that at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question submitted to the Senate is whether the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is in order and should be received.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have confined the debate solely to that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understood the Chair to say that under the rules of the Senate, the amendment was in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said that under the rules it was not out of order, technically speaking.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understood the Chair to express the opinion that an amendment of this sort was not consistent with prudent legislation and that, therefore, the Chair would submit to the Senate whether the Senate, in the exercise of its judgment and discretion, would entertain this as an amendment to this bill. I suggest to the Chair, therefore, that that is the question which ought to be submitted to the Senate, and not the arbitrary question whether the amendment is in order or not in order. I suppose, according to the usage of the Senate, it is a proper question for the Senate to decide whether, in the exercise of its discretion and judgment, it will entertain a proposition not germane to this bill, and that is the question I ask the Chair to submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question presented to the Senate is purely a question of order. No other question can be submitted.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the question is whether it is in order, or whether the Senate will hold it to be in order, to take up the financial affairs of the country generally, and put a bill into which provision for them is to be incorporated as a rider upon an appropriation bill. That is a question of order, and I submit with great respect to the Senator from Ohio that that question is not with him for the reasons which he has given to the Senate.

First of all I remark that those instances to which the Senator refers are just as applicable to the House of Representatives as they are here. He will find that over and over again such provisions as he has cited have been put in the House of Representatives upon appropriation bills. Why? First, because they were not objected to; the question of order was not raised; and that was because they were single sections, mere items, propositions which did not belong appropriately upon any separate bill, unless a joint resolution was to be passed for the single purpose of directing the sale of a particular piece of property, which has been the exception when bills were under consideration embracing general subjects. The same thing will be found in the British Parliament. Looking at Cushing, or looking at May, it will be found that appropriation bills continually pass which contain provisions such as the Senator has referred to.

Let me remind him that there is no rule of the House of Representatives against this. The rule of the House to which he refers is that a provision shall not be put into an appropriation bill changing existing laws, and that an appropriation shall not be made for which there is no existing law. That is not the point made here, and I submit to the Senator it has nothing to do with the point made here. The question here is whether the amendment is not wholly foreign, entirely destitute of the elements which make it germane to this bill. Now, I should like to see any rule of the House of Representatives on that subject. I never heard one read there, and never knew one to be enforced. The parliamentary law is enforced there, which requires that subjects moved as amendments shall be cognate and germane to the thing in hand, or else they are out of order. The Senator says we have a right to put upon appropriation bills fresh matter, and that right ought not to be surrendered. Certainly not, and nobody draws that right in question here.

I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator familiar with the usage of this body, for the instance in which the Senate has held, the point of order being raised, that any other bill, however remote the subject might be, could be incorporated into an appropriation bill. If there has been such a precedent as that, that precedent is influential in this case. It would be a very extraordinary precedent. There are persons within and without this Chamber waiting with great patience for the consideration of bills which ought to be considered. I have a bill in mind now relating to patents, the want of consideration of which imposes great hardship upon a number of persons. I feel very much interested in it myself; and if this is the order of business in the Senate, I wish to give notice, and to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations so as to be within the other rule, that on to-morrow I will propose that bill extending a patent as an amendment to this appropriation bill; and surely there is no bill pending in the Senate which would not be in order for the same reason.

Now, Mr. President, one word upon the matter of discretion, which, as the Senator from Indiana truly says, is one of the elements of this question. Suppose it were in order, in some sense, to consider a subject not germane to the appropriation bill, ought we to take up a subject great and complex, in itself perhaps the most important subject of legislation, and mingle that with an appropriation bill, and undertake to have it go through as a sort of codicil or addendum to this bill? It seems to me that that line of proceeding would be unworthy of the subject and unworthy of the Senate.

The bill which is proposed as an amendment of course will lead to discussion and investigation and to consideration just as much aloof from the present subject as can possibly be. What is the motive for attaching it to this bill? What do we all know is the motive? If possible to obtain its successful passage through the two Houses as a rider to this bill which must necessarily be passed, when, if it stood alone, it would not be adopted. Is there any motive for it? Certainly there can be none; and therefore I submit that the matter of discretion, assuming that it was strictly in order, is against the motion; but I insist, and shall so vote, that it is entirely out of order, either here or in the House of Representatives, until precedents can be shown establishing that this body has adopted the usage, when the objection was made and the point of order was insisted upon, of taking up subjects distinct by themselves and utterly independent of all matters contained in an appropriation bill, and legislating upon them by way of rider to it.

As I said before, the instances referred to by the Senator of directing the sale of a hospital here, of doing something else there, have occurred in both Houses, occurred by consent, and occurred, perhaps, where objection has been made, though I do not remember it, for the reason that they were within the general scope of the bill. But this proposition is to go beyond all possible intendments of the present bill as to the subjects to which it relates, and take up a matter independent and complex in itself, and ingraft upon this bill, tack upon it, in the language of Colonel Benton, an entirely different subject. I submit that such a practice ought not to prevail, and I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. President, the appropriation bill being under consideration, the Senator from Ohio moves to amend it by inserting the provisions of the funding bill, and the question whether he is at liberty to do so is before the Senate for decision. I desire now simply to state the question, for I think if it is fairly stated to the Senate it need not be argued. Upon an appropriation bill it is proposed to ingraft legislation entirely foreign to it. Although there is no technical rule of the Senate against it, because the Senate always has the largest liberty and can always exercise the largest discretion, it is a vicious system of legislation and ought not to be indulged in. I should regard it as a most unfortunate precedent for the Senate to set. It never yet has set a precedent of this character, at least not of this magnitude. It frequently on appropriation bills directs how certain sums shall be expended, but a system of funding never was introduced on an appropriation bill, and it is in no way germane to it. It is bad legislation to admit it, and it ought not to be admitted.

Mr. SHERMAN. The statutes are full of precedents on this question, and to those who have been in the Senate for any length of time it is not necessary for me to produce them. I have before me a law passed in 1863, the civil appropriation bill, containing twenty-five different sections, among which is a law regulating the habeas corpus, another reorganizing the Signal corps of the Army, and so on. These provisions were in a mere civil bill providing for miscellaneous expenditures. So far as precedents are concerned, there is no doubt that this amendment is in order. If I felt at liberty to show the importance of acting upon the funding bill, I think I could convince every Senator, or nearly every Senator, that we ought to act upon it at this session.

Mr. POMEROY. I admit the importance of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I say that my desire is, and I intend to present squarely to the Senate the proposition whether or not they will adjourn this session of Congress without making some provision for the reduction of the burden of the public debt. I do not want to do it on the point of order, because, as a matter of course, unless the Senate are satisfied not only first of the correctness of this proposition, but second, that it ought to be put for reasons that shall be given on an appropriation bill, they will vote against it. If they have doubts about either the merits of the proposition or the propriety of putting it on an appropriation bill, they will vote against it on the final vote; but on the question whether it is in order according to the practice of the Senate, I cannot think that any person who has been here any considerable length of time can doubt for a moment.

The rule in the House of Representatives referred to by the Senator from New York does exclude it there; because no amendment can be put upon an appropriation bill in the House which changes the existing law. Even where new items of appropriation are proposed they cannot be put on an appropriation bill there, because they are in the nature of new legislation. Almost every legislative act changes an existing law, and the House rule forbids that being done on the appropriation bills; but in the Senate we have never practiced upon that. On the contrary, we seek the appropriation bills sometimes, not only to carry convenient amendments, but to assert great principles; and I might go to many instances in the history of this Government where the Senate have attached important legislative provisions to appropriation bills, and have presented them in that way forcibly to the country. I say that if there ever was a case for it this is the one.

The singular spectacle is presented in this country of the United States paying six per cent. interest in gold on over due bonds which we have a right to redeem, while at the same time our notes held by each of us, and which we compel the people of the United States to take, are below the par of anything else issued by the United States, and cannot buy any bond or security issued by the United States, and are now worth in gold but sixty to seventy cents on the dollar. While that condition of affairs stands we are justified in proposing to remedy it, and I think we ought to avail ourselves of every medium to present that question to the House of Representatives, and I am satisfied that this proposition will receive the sanction of the House of Representatives if it is passed here. That is my opinion, but I may be mistaken. As a matter of course, I would not force this proposition on the House of Representatives. If it receives a majority of the votes of the Senate and a majority of the votes of the House of Representatives it becomes the law of the land on this appropriation bill as well as anywhere else. If it should not receive a majority of the House of Representatives, as a matter of course the Senate would not insist on the amendment; but that we ought to present this question and do something to carry out this view I have no doubt.

I feel cramped in attempting to debate a question of this kind on a point of order, and I will not do it. I think the Senate ought to assert its right, its power, its rule, its custom, its law to put on an appropriation bill any amendment of a legislative character. When that right is asserted I am then willing to show that this amendment comes within any rule the Senate may choose to prescribe; that it is in the highest degree important, necessary, vital, and defensible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suppose this is altogether a question of order, and the objection made to the amendment, it appears to me, must fall to the ground unless reference can be made to some rule by which it is excluded. It may be inexpedient to offer such an amendment; but will the Senate decide that a proposed amendment is not in order because in their judgment it is inexpedient to attach it to the pending bill or to adopt it? Suppose the Senate should decide now that this amendment is not in order, what sort of a precedent would that constitute? Is it to be assumed now, for the first time in the history of the legislation of the Senate, that any amendment which does not relate to the matter of appropriation shall not be incorporated into a bill of this description?

I submit that the Senate is not willing at this time to debar itself from that privilege, for it does become absolutely necessary at times to put upon a miscellaneous appropriation bill some provision of law which does not relate to appropriations, and the Senate must be afraid of itself, must be afraid of its own judgment, if it establishes a rule which invariably debars it of the privilege of putting on any such amendment.

I hope that this great question, and it is one of immense magnitude to this country, as it seems to me, will not be decided upon a mere point of order. I do not see how it can be affirmed that this amendment is not in order. If it cannot be so affirmed, then it strikes me to be very unwise for the Senate, without considering the merits of the proposition, or the necessity for it, to refuse to consider it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Oregon will allow me to make a suggestion. He treats this as if the question were whether this subject, which he styles a great one, shall be considered in connection with this bill or not at all. Will the Senator explain to me why it is, if we are allowed to finish this bill without it, the subject to which he refers cannot then be taken up separately just as well as to be appended to this bill? What is the point about that? I ask for information. I do not understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have reasons for insisting upon adding this amendment to the bill which I suppose it is not proper for me to state to the Senate, as they relate to matters in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not think that because Senators vote that this amendment is not in order they are therefore opposed to the funding bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It amounts to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that there is no other prospect of passing any funding bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know about that. I will not vote to put that measure on the appropriation bill, although I will vote for it on its merits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will simply say in reference to that remark that it seems to me a Senator who, with a reasonable conviction on his mind that such a bill as this, which is of this vast importance, ought to pass, votes that it shall not be passed upon a mere matter of form, is sacrificing the interests of the country to a mere matter of form in the Senate; and it seems to me that is not wise or judicious legislation.

Mr. POMEROY. It is no more germane to this bill than a bill for a railroad in Oregon would be or a bill to extend a patent, as the Senator from New York said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be true; but it does not follow that every proposition which is not germane to the bill is not in order. Although I am not familiar with the practice of the Senate, I undertake to say that no precedent for excluding this amendment can be found in the history of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that during the Mexican war a loan bill was attached to an appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe this is the first time I have ever undertaken to discuss a question of order in the Senate; but the importance of this legislation impels me to insist that upon this mere matter of form the proposition shall not be rejected. I know it is not strictly germane to the subject-matter of the bill; but is that a conclusive objection?

Suppose there had been some omission in the legislation of Congress during the present session, that in the enactment of some law Congress had failed to incorporate into that law the necessary means for its execution, and the miscellaneous appropriation bill was the last bill before Congress, and it was necessary to insert a provision there relative to the execution of that law, not germane to the miscellaneous appropriation bill. Will the Senate deprive itself of the right to make such an amendment, if, in its judgment, there is any necessity for it? If the Senate decides now that this amendment shall not be received because it is not germane to the bill, the Senate decides, unless it is to vary from day to day in its practice upon the question, that hereafter, no matter what may be the exigency or the imperious necessity requiring it, the Senate will not put on a miscellaneous appropriation bill anything that does not touch the matter of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to make a suggestion to the Senator there. In the House of Representatives, as the Senator from Ohio says—in the result I agree with him, although we understand the rule differently—there is an express rule standing all the time upon the book that in an appropriation bill such legislation shall not occur as changes existing laws; and yet in just such cases as the Senator now speaks of the House does it continually, as continually as the Senate. Why? Because the rules are always under control, and whenever any such instance as he speaks of arises, the rule is waived for that purpose. There is a rule there, among other things, that, during the last ten days of the session a motion is always in order to suspend all the rules. When, therefore, the last day comes, or the last day or two and something has been omitted that it is necessary to put in a bill, although strictly out of order, the majority do it, having the rules under their control. But the question here is, without any such emergency as that, why we should carry a dispensation of the rule to such an unheard of extent as this. The Senator says he has reasons which he is not at liberty to disclose, and of course I cannot discuss them.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose it is impossible to get a vote; and after consultation with the Senator from Maine, and with his approval, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope not till we dispose of this point.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 30, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON.

The reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. CAKE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of the House of Representatives one hundred and eighty thousand extra copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1867, and twenty thousand copies for the Commissioner of Agriculture.

TRADE WITH THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

Mr. CAKE, from the same committee, also reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand extra copies of the report from the Treasury relative to trade with the British provinces be printed for the use of the House.

CIVIL SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CAKE, from the same committee, also reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That three thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment in the civil service of the United States be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. CAKE moved to reconsider the votes by which the several resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE REPORT FOR 1867.

Mr. HIGBY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and, under the law, referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of the House twenty thousand copies of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year 1867.

PUBLIC DEBT, ETC.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a bill which I give notice I will move as a substitute for the bill to be reported from the Committee of Ways and Means under the resolution adopted yesterday in reference to the taxation of interest on United States bonds. The proposed substitute is as follows:

A bill relating to the public debt and the payment of interest thereon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue bonds, either coupon or registered, upon the faith and credit of the United States, in sums of not less than fifty dollars each, to the amount of $800,000,000, principal and interest, payable in coin, and upon the following terms and conditions, namely:

First. The interest on said bonds shall be at the rate of five and one half per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually.

Second. Said bonds shall be issued to citizens of the United States only, and shall be wholly void in the hands of any person not a citizen of the United States, or in the hands of any person who, at the time of receiving any such bonds, had knowledge or good reason to believe that the same had been issued or transferred to any person not a citizen of the United States; and this condition shall be expressed upon every bond issued under the provisions of this section.

Third. The bonds hereby authorized shall not be subject to State or local taxation, in any manner, nor by the United States at a rate exceeding one half of one per cent. of the income of the bonds on which such taxes are levied.

Fourth. Said bonds shall be made so payable that $50,000,000 thereof shall become due on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1883, and a like sum of $50,000,000 shall become due on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter.

Fifth. Holders of bonds known as five-twenty bonds may exchange such bonds for the bonds in this section, specified at any time previous to the 1st day of July, A. D. 1869, and applicants for an exchange of bonds may, within the limits prescribed by this act, designate the time when the new bonds issued to them shall be made payable.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue, upon the faith and credit of the United States, coupon bonds, registered or not registered, as may be desired, in sums of not less than $100 each, to the amount of $500,000,000, principal and interest payable in coin, and upon the following terms and conditions, namely:

First. The interest on said loan shall be at the rate of four per cent., payable semi-annually.

Second. The principal and interest may be made payable in the United States, or at Frankfurt or London, at the option of the person to whom the bonds are issued.

Third. Said bonds shall be made so payable that $50,000,000 thereof shall become due on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1890, and a like sum of $50,000,000 shall become due on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter.

Fourth. The bonds by this section authorized shall not be subject to State or local taxation in any manner; nor shall the bonds authorized by this section, or the interest thereon, be subject to taxation or abatement of any kind by the United States. When such bonds are owned by citizens of any foreign country, resident in such foreign country, but in the hands of citizens or residents of the United States, the income of such bonds shall be subject to taxation at the rate prescribed in the first section of this act.

Fifth. Holders of bonds known as five-twenty bonds may exchange such bonds for the bonds in this section specified at any time previous to the 1st day of July, A. D. 1869, and applicants for an exchange of bonds may, within the limits prescribed by this act, designate the time when the new bonds issued to them shall be made payable.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to use the sum of $25,000,000 of coin in the Treasury and not otherwise appropriated in the purchase of five-twenty bonds at the market price as hereinafter provided, the same to be held by the Treasurer of the United States as a sinking fund in accordance with the provisions of the fifth section of an act passed February 25, 1862, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States."

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, and the Attorney General be, and they hereby are, constituted a commission for the purchase of bonds as required in the preceding section. The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, give public notice for proposals for the sale of said bonds to the United States, and said commissioners may accept such proposals as they deem advantageous to the public interests. The bonds so purchased shall be legibly and indelibly marked, "The property of the Loan Sinking Fund of the United States." The Treasurer shall cause the interest to be paid upon such bonds, and the amount thereof shall in like manner be invested in the bonds of the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the purchases of bonds herein authorized shall be made during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1868.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to give public notice, whenever the amount of coin in the Treasury, belonging to the United States, exceeds $20,000,000 in addition to the amount appropriated by the third section of this act, that he will anticipate the payment of interest then first to become due upon the bonds of the United States to an amount as near as may be of the excess over said $20,000,000; such payments to be subject to a rebate of interest at the rate specified in the bonds.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, prohibited from making sales of gold for any purpose whatsoever.

The proposed substitute was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

PETER AND ANSON B. NODINE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Quartermaster General, relative to the claim of Peter and Anson B. Nodine for tolls collected by the United States during its use of their ferry franchise at Charlestown, West Virginia; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Third Auditor of the Treasury, relative to certain expenses incurred by the State of California in Indian hostilities; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JANE M'MURRAY AND HANNAH COOK.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (S. No. 546) for the relief of Jane McMurray, and the bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Hannah Cook; and the same were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. PHELPS.

PROTEST OF DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to report at once on the resolution referred to it providing for printing fifty thousand copies of the protest of Democratic members.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not suppose there was any good faith intended when the resolution was offered the other day by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

TRIAL OF E. WHITTLESEY AND OTHERS.

Mr. EGGLESTON, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the House a transcript of the records of a military court held at Raleigh, North Carolina, in the summer of 1866, for the trial of E. Whittlesey and others, of which Major General John M. Palmer was president.

EXPENSES OF COLLECTING REVENUE.

Mr. GETZ. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means are hereby instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the present enormous expense of collecting the internal revenue by the abolition of the offices of collectors, assessors, and other agents employed by the internal revenue department, and assessing the amount of direct taxes required to be raised from domestic sources upon the several States in proportion to the taxable population of each, to be collected by the authorities of the same in the same manner that State taxes are now collected, or by such other means as the several State governments may adopt for the purpose herein indicated; and that the said committee make report to the House by bill or otherwise at the next session of Congress.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I object.

Mr. GETZ. It is only for reference. There is to be no action until December next.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I withdraw the objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAY OF A CONTESTANT.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee of Elections:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Joseph Powell, contesting the seat of Hon. R. R. BUTLER, a Representative from the first congressional district of Tennessee, in full for his expenses in taking testimony under the direction of the Committee of Elections, the sum of $2,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to offer a privileged resolution, that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives adjourn their respective Houses on Wednesday, the 15th of July, at twelve o'clock m.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent, as the House is acting under the operation of the previous question on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I give notice that I will move that resolution as a matter of privilege as soon as the river and harbor bill is disposed of.

MEMBER-ELECT FROM FLORIDA.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I present the credentials of Hon. Charles M. Hamilton, Representative-elect from the State of Florida, and I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the credentials take the usual course, and be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' DISCHARGES.

Mr. COVODE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 319) in regard to charges of desertion in cases of soldiers honorably discharged from the service; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that in all cases where private soldiers in the late war for the Union served out the term of their enlistment and were honorably discharged from the service it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, upon the application of the parties, to remove any charges of desertion that may stand upon the rolls against such soldiers where there has not been a conviction for desertion by a court-martial.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXPENSE OF COLLECTING THE REVENUE.

Mr. MUNGUN. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform this House at the earliest moment he can conveniently do so the actual cost and expense of collecting the internal revenue of the United States each and every year since the revenue law of 1862 was passed by Congress, specifying the amount in the aggregate in each collection district and the total amount collected in each of said years.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object; all that information is in the reports.

Mr. MUNGUN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is certainly mistaken. There is a jumbled up kind of statement in regard to cost of collection in the reports to which he refers; but it cannot be ascertained the exact cost of collection in each district.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House.

A. R. THOMAS.

Mr. PAINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1342) for the relief of A. R. Thomas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the various votes of reference; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is House bill No. 1046, making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes; upon which the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered. At the time the House adjourned yesterday the bill was being read by clauses for engrossment. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill by clauses, and if a separate vote is desired upon any item of appropriation it will be indicated.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The following clause was read:

For improvement of White river harbor, Michigan, $75,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask for a separate vote on that item.

Mr. FERRY. I merely wish to state that the Board of Trade of Chicago passed a resolution urging this appropriation.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The question was then taken upon engrossing the clause just read; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 41.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, and Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 48, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Axtell, Barnes, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Grover, Higby, Hinds, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Jencks, Johnson, Kitchen, Loan, Lynch, Mallory, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Mungen, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Roots, Sawyer, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, and Windom—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Archer, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beatty, Boles, Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Coburn, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Eldridge, Ferriss, Golladay, Hill, Holman, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, Mercer, Niblack, Perham, Phelps, Polsley, Randall, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stone, Taylor, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodward—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Beaman, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boyer, Brownell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cake, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Covode, Cullom, Dawes, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Glessbrough, Gravely, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Igersoll, Jones, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, Loughridge, McCullough, Morrissey, Myers, Nicholson, Nunn, Orth, Peters, Pike, Pile, Pruyn, Raum, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Schenck, Selye, Shanks, Taffe, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Auker, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Wood, and Woodbridge—83.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

The following clause was read:

For improvement of Pentwater harbor, Michigan, $25,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask a separate vote on that clause.

The question was then taken upon ordering the clause just read to be engrossed; and upon a division there were—ayes 28, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. FERRY were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 61, noes 43.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

The following clause was read:

To improve the river from Chattanooga, Tennessee, to Decatur, Alabama, $90,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask a separate vote on that clause.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I would inquire if all the clauses just read by the Clerk are amendments to the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not all; some of them are.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now in order.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. SPALDING called for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to withdraw his motion until we get further along in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It is so big now that it would break down an elephant's back; but I will withdraw for the present the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. PAINE. It is not so large as the appropriation we made for the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order. The gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote on the item which has just been read by the Clerk.

On ordering the clause to be engrossed there were—ayes seventy, noes not counted.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

The following clause was read:

For improvement of the Des Moines rapids, $900,000.

Mr. GETZ. I ask for a separate vote on that item.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to amend the clause by striking out "nine" and inserting "four," so as to make the appropriation $400,000.

The SPEAKER. An amendment at this stage will require unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. GETZ. I call for the yeas and nays on the engrossment of the clause which has just been read.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 61, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Banks, Benjamin, Boles, Boutwell, Bromwell, Roderick R. Butler, Cake, Cary, Churchill, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Gravely, Grover, Higby, Hinds, Hopkins, Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jencks, Ketcham, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, O'Neill, Paine, Pile, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Ross, Sawyer, Smith, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beatty, Beck, Benton, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Coburn, Cornell, Covode, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Getz, Golladay, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Johnson, Julian, Kelsey, Kitchen, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Perham, Plants, Randall, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taylor, Thomas, Van Auker, Van Trump, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodward—61.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Dawes, Dodge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Griswold, Haight, Hulsey, Harding, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Judd, Kelley, Kerr, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, McCullough, Morrissey, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Polsley, Raum, Robertson, Robinson, Roots, Schenck, Selye, Taber, Taffe, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Wyck, Ward, William B. Washburn, John T. Wilson, and Wood—61.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

The following clause was read:

For survey of northwestern lakes, $75,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. As this appropriation is in another bill, I move to strike it out.

Mr. ELIOT. I will say that this appropriation is wanted in this bill, as I find by examination at the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The motion to strike out is not in order. A separate vote may be asked on ordering the item to be engrossed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask for a separate vote on the engrossment of the clause which has just been read.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the clause was ordered to be engrossed.

The following was read:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $450,000 is hereby appropriated toward completing the Louisville and Portland canal, in accordance with the plans and estimates made in the report of General Godfrey Weitzel, and that the Government of the United States do hereby assume the payment of the bonds issued for the completion of the said canal and branch, amounting to the sum of $1,567: Provided, That all title to and right in said canal and its appurtenances be ceded to and vested in the United States, and that the State of Kentucky shall relinquish all claim to the Government of the same; said canal on and after its completion to be and remain free from all tolls and tribute, except so much as shall be necessary to operate the same and keep it in repair, and that all moneys in the hands of the treasurer of the canal company, when transferred, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask a separate vote on this section.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I raise the point of order that this section has already been voted upon by yeas and nays on the motion to strike out.

The SPEAKER. That is very true; but under Rule 121 any member may call for a separate vote on ordering the section to be engrossed.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 61, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Beck, Boyer, Buckland, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Churchill, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Golladay, Gravelly, Grover, Higby, Holman, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Julian, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Mallory, Maynard, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Moorhead, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Peters, Pile, Poland, Polsley, Price, Raum, Sawyer, Shanks, Shellabarger, Stokes, Taber, Twichell, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and Thomas Williams—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Boles, Boutwell, Bromwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Getz, Hill, Hinds, Hulburd, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koonz, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Marshall, Marvin, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—61.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Archer, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Bingham, Blair, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Daws, Dodge, Eldridge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Judd, Kelley, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, Lynch, McCarthy, McCullough, Morrissey, Nunn, Phelps, Robertson, Robinson, Roots, Schenck, Selye, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, William B. Washburn, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Wood—63.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the third reading and engrossment of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be laid upon the table. We cannot carry over ten hundred millions.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 81, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beatty, Benton, Blaine, Boles, Boutwell, Boyer, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Eckley, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Getz, Hill, Hulburd, Johnson, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koonz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, Mercer, Miller, Morrell, Niblack, Orth, Randall, Ross, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Auken, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Beck, Benjamin, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Churchill, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Golladay, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Holman, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Maynard, McClurg, McCormick, McKee, Moorhead, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pike, Pile, Poland, Polsley, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Raum, Sawyer, Scofield, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Taber, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, and Windom—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Blair, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Cake, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Daws, Dodge, Eldridge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, McCarthy, McCullough, Moore, Morrissey, Mullins, Nunn, Phelps, Plants, Robertson, Robinson, Roots, Schenck, Selye, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Wyck, Ward, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, and Wood—56.

So the bill was not laid upon the table.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELIOT demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I should like to have the amendments read over again. I want the House and country to listen to the amendments put on after the bill was through.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the House will understand the gentleman himself voted for the amendments. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from Massachusetts voted for them, but he did not vote with me to lay the bill upon the table. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 59, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Archer, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Beck, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Churchill, Cobb, Cook, Cornell, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Golladay, Griswold, Grover, Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Holman, Hooper, Hopkins, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Koonz, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, Mercer, Moore, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Scofield, Starkweather, Stewart, Stokes, Taber, Twichell, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Windom—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Cake, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Delano, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Getz, Hill, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kelsey, Ketcham, Koonz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Morrell, Niblack, Orth, Phelps, Randall, Ross, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Auken, Van Trump, Elihu B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodward—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Barnum,

Beaman, Bingham, Blair, Boles, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Daws, Dodge, Ela, Eldridge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Haight, Halsey, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Judd, Kelley, Kerr, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, Lynch, McCarthy, McCullough, Morrissey, Nunn, Raum, Robertson, Schenck, Selye, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Wyck, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Wood, and Woodbridge—55.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House adjourn their respective Houses without day on Wednesday, the 15th day of July next, at noon.

I desire that we should adjourn at the earliest moment, because we shall have neither money nor credit left if we go on in this way.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend so that it will read, "Adjourn their respective Houses on the 15th day of July, at noon, until the 15th day of September at noon."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I demand the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to lay the resolution and amendment on the table.

The motion was disagreed to—yeas thirty-seven, noes not counted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow an amendment to substitute the 10th for the 15th of July?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Oh, no.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being on the amendment of Mr. KELSEY, there were—yeas 30, noes 84.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the original resolution.

Mr. HIGBY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 47, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allison, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Banks, Barnes, Beatty, Beck, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Churchill, Cook, Cornell, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferriss, Garfield, Getz, Golladay, Grover, Harding, Hill, Hinds, Holman, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Koonz, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, McCormick, Mercer, Moore, Mungen, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Peters, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Randall, Ross, Scofield, Shanks, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Starkweather, Stewart, Stone, Taber, Taffe, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Van Auken, Van Trump, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Woodward—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Benjamin, Benton, Boutwell, Cake, Sidney Clark, Coburn, Covode, Cullom, Driggs, Ela, Farnsworth, Ferry, Halsey, Higby, Hopkins, Jenckes, Kelsey, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Lynch, Maynard, McClurg, Miller, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pile, Raum, Roots, Sawyer, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taylor, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, and Thomas Williams—47.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Blair, Boles, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Burr, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Daws, Dodge, Eckley, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glossbrenner, Gravelly, Griswold, Haight, Hawkins, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hunter, Judd, Kelley, Kitchen, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, McCarthy, McCullough, McKee, Morrissey, Newcomb, Nunn, Polsley, Robertson, Schenck, Selye, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Wyck, Ward, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Wood—56.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT PITTSBURG.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the supervising architect of the Treasury, relative to the condition of the building used by the Government at Pittsburg for a custom-house; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ELECTION CONTEST—SWITZLER VS. ANDERSON.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to say, for a variety of reasons, I have concluded to waive my right to call up to-day the election case of Switzler vs. Anderson, of which I have heretofore given notice, and I now give notice that I will call it up on Wednesday of next week after the morning hour. I yield the floor, therefore, to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who is very anxious to proceed to the consideration of the subject of which he has given notice.

Mr. BANKS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. NIBLACK, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, (with the sense of this House,) That the present session of this Congress ought not to adjourn until some more thorough and efficient provision is made by law for the protection of American citizens, both native and adopted, while traveling or temporarily residing abroad.

THE TREATY-MAKING POWER.

Mr. BANKS. Before moving to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

Mr. DELANO, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the Globe:

Resolved, That all treaties made by the President and Senate which embrace stipulations on legislative subjects expressly vested in Congress by the Constitution, are in their nature incomplete and imperfect until Congress shall have passed such laws as are necessary to carry such treaties into effect; and that this House is not required, by a just interpretation of the Constitution, to pass laws necessary to the execution of such treaties unless it approves the objects and stipulations therein embraced.

Resolved, That a treaty which stipulates for the payment of money undertakes to do that which the treaty-making power cannot do without the aid of legislation, and therefore such a treaty is not the supreme law of the land until the required legislation has been obtained; and members of this House, while deliberating upon propositions for executing such treaty, act on their own judgment and responsibility, and not on the judgment and responsibility of the treaty-making power.

Resolved, That foreign Governments are presumed to know that the power to appropriate money is vested in Congress, and that no act of any one part of the Government can be regarded as a law until such act has the sanction of all Departments of the Government required by the Constitution to give it the force of law.

Resolved, That the integrity and limits of the territory of this nation cannot be altered or changed except by the will of the nation, given by express grant or implied by acquiescence; and therefore the treaty-making power has no authority under the Constitution to dispose of the nation's territory nor to acquire new territory without obtaining the assent of the nation therefor in one or the other of the forms herein indicated.

WILLIAM H. HARMAN.

Mr. BANKS. I now yield to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HUBBARD.]

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 183) for the relief of William H. Harman was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—HOGAN VS. PILE.

Mr. COOK. I desire to give notice that I will call up the contested-election case of Hogan vs. Pile on Wednesday next, or immediately after the case of Switzler vs. Anderson shall be disposed of.

REVENUE STAMPS.

Mr. BENTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 320) in relation to affixing revenue stamps to written instruments; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BANKS resumed the floor.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I rise to put a parliamentary question to the Chair. Does the yielding of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] on the question of privilege to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs deprive us of the morning hour? Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to make that point.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes that point the Chair will have to sustain it.

Mr. BANKS. Unanimous consent was given that the subject of the purchase of Russian America should be considered to-day, and the morning hour was not reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he has examined the Journal, and that the bill was made the special order for to-day after the morning hour, as all special orders have been made for after the morning hour.

Mr. BANKS. If it stands that way on the Journal, of course I do not object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Michigan insists upon it, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is not in order until after the morning hour.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I do insist on it.

The SPEAKER. Then the morning hour commences, and reports are in order from the Committee on the Judiciary, which is entitled to another morning hour.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS, ETC.

Mr. ELDRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment and with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 90) to authorize and require the administration of oaths in certain cases and to punish perjury in connection therewith.

The bill was read. It authorizes the chairman or acting chairman of any standing, select, joint, or other committee of the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, whose duty or business it shall be by virtue of any law, resolution, or custom in either House to audit or approve any claim, demand, or account against the Government, to be paid out of the contingent or other funds of either House or otherwise, to require the person or officer making the claim or presenting the same to attach his affidavit thereto in writing to the effect that the same is just, due, and unpaid, and in accordance with the law pertaining thereto. It authorizes such chairman or acting chairman to administer all oaths required in connection therewith, and it is made the duty of such chairman or acting chairman to require such affidavits in all cases where he believes, or has reason to believe, that the public interest will be promoted thereby, or where the majority of the committee direct him so to do. The second section provides that any person or officer who shall be guilty of perjury before any such committee in swearing to any such claim shall be liable to the pains, penalties, and disabilities prescribed for the punishment of willful and corrupt perjury.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out the words "and in accordance with the law pertaining thereto."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The necessity for this bill will probably strike the House as rather remarkable. In fact there is now no law authorizing the chairman of any committee to administer an oath to persons applying for payment out of the contingent fund. All this bill does is to authorize the chairman of a committee in his discretion to administer such an oath.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE,] that the fact being as he states, it would perhaps be well to refer this subject to the Committee on the Rules, in order that an additional rule may be adopted to remedy the difficulty should the Senate fail to act upon this bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Very well; I will adopt the suggestion of the Chair, and move that the Committee on the Rules be instructed to examine and report upon the subject of the administering of oaths by chairmen of committees of the House to persons claiming pay from the contingent fund of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JURISDICTION IN ADMIRALTY.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have been instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report adversely upon House bill No. 849, to amend an act entitled "An act extending the jurisdiction of district courts to certain cases upon the lakes and the navigable waters connecting the same," approved February 26, 1845.

The bill was laid on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I am also instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back House bill No. 293, to regulate and limit the admiralty jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States in certain cases, with an amendment in the form of an additional section, embodying the substance of the bill just laid on the table.

The bill, which was read, provides that the district courts of the United States shall be authorized to possess and exercise the same jurisdiction in matters of contract and tort, arising in, upon, or concerning, steamboats and other vessels of twenty tons burden and upward, enrolled and licensed for the coasting or other trade, and at the time engaged in the business of commerce and navigation between ports and places in different States and Territories upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting said lakes, or upon any of the inland navigable rivers or other waters of the United States, as is now possessed and exercised by the said courts in the cases of the like steamboats and other vessels employed in navigation and commerce upon the high seas or tide-waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and in all suits brought in such courts, in all such matters of contract or tort, the remedies and the forms of process, and the modes of proceedings shall be the same as are or may be used by such courts in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; and the maritime law of the United States, so far as the same is or may be applicable thereto, shall constitute the rule of decision in such suits, in the same manner, and to the same extent, and with the same equities as it now does in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving, however, to the parties the right of trial by jury of all facts put in issue in such suits where either party shall require it; and saving, also, to the parties the right of a concurrent remedy at the common law where it is competent to give it, and any concurrent remedy which may be given by the State laws, where such steamboat or other vessel is employed in such business of commerce and navigation; provided, that whenever in any such case or controversy any such district court shall first obtain jurisdiction in any litigation over any such steamboat or vessel, such jurisdiction shall be exclusive of the jurisdiction of all State courts in such case.

The amendments of the committee were to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten" before the words "tons burden and upward;" also to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the matters of contract mentioned in the foregoing section shall be held to extend to and embrace all cases of contracts for repairs to materials or supplies furnished for steamboats or other vessels of the class therein described, enrolled and licensed in the coasting trade, and employed in the business therein mentioned; and the maritime laws shall extend against such steamboats and vessels for such repairs, materials, and supplies, to be enforced in admiralty, subject to the right of trial by jury and the concurrent remedies provided in the foregoing section.

The question was upon agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WOODWARD. I want to know a little more about this bill. I have listened to the reading of it by the Clerk, and if I understand it—I am told by gentlemen around me that I do not understand it—this bill extends admiralty jurisdiction to every canal-boat on all the canals of this country. I observe that there is a most unskillful jumble in the bill about trial by jury. Now, trial by jury is unknown in admiralty jurisdiction. But how you are going to extend the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States to all the interior waters of the country, carrying with it trial by jury, I do not see very well. Surely that provision does not take away the objection I have to the bill. If I understand this bill—if I do not the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] will correct me—this is a proposition to subject all the navigable waters of the United States to the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not think it has that effect. The gentleman evidently misapprehends the scope, meaning, and effect of this bill.

Mr. WOODWARD. Allow me to say that I have only heard the bill read.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the gentleman had read the act of 1845 he would find in it all the objections which he suggests to this bill. In my judgment this bill does not extend the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States at all; it is simply a limitation upon that admiralty jurisdiction. It is intended to explain a discrepancy or a misapprehension which has existed in regard to the act of 1845, and in regard to the jurisdiction conferred by the act of 1787. By the Constitution of the United States and the act of 1787 the admiralty court, in my judgment, possesses all the jurisdiction that is sought to be conferred by this bill. This bill is to explain and to apply the provisions of the act of 1845 to the lakes and the connecting waters of the lakes, as it was intended by that act to apply it.

Mr. WOODWARD. What the gentleman says about my not understanding this bill may be correct, for I never heard it or of it until I heard it read at the Clerk's desk. But I submit that a bill which is so much misunderstood as the gentleman from Wisconsin says this bill is ought to be the subject of more deliberate consideration than he proposes we shall give this bill. It cannot harm any possible interest if the bill be postponed to some future day, that we may have an opportunity to learn what it is, that we may have an opportunity to study its relations to previous laws and the decisions of the Supreme Court upon the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States. If I understand the bill, I regard it as one of most mischievous consequence. I should be sorry to see it passed without proper consideration under the lead of my friend from Wisconsin. This is not the way that this side of the House ought to legislate on important questions. We ought to have an opportunity to consider such questions.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not see fit to enlighten the House upon the subject of the bill, and admits his inability to do so, I think he ought to have forbore to say that this bill is such a terrible "jumble" as he represents it to be. Now, I insist that the bill is no "jumble" at all; but the law as it has existed seems to be a good deal jumbled up in the head of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and he does not seem quite ready to apply the principles of this bill to the law as it now exists. I insist that the law as it stood under the Constitution and the act of 1787 extended the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States to all our navigable waters, rivers, lakes, and everything else. But in the minds of some persons it was supposed to have been limited to those waters where the tide ebbs and flows, corresponding with the doctrine held in England. The act of 1845, while it was intended to extend the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts, was in fact a limitation upon it. The act of 1845 limited that jurisdiction to vessels of twenty tons burden, whereas by the law of 1787 it had been extended to vessels of ten tons burden. The act of 1845 was therefore to that extent a limitation. In addition to this that act limited the jurisdiction to vessels employed in commerce and navigation between ports and places in different States. This bill is intended to do away with what was supposed in that bill to be a limitation by extending the jurisdiction to those boats and vessels which ply between ports of this country and the ports of Canada. I do not apprehend that it will have, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania supposes, any such effect as to extend this jurisdiction to canal-boats.

I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. KERR,] who, I think, will satisfy my critical friend from Pennsylvania that this bill is not such a "jumble" as he supposes it to be.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I shall be able to satisfy my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOODWARD] with reference to the provisions of this bill; but I am sure that if he understood it he would not be opposed to it.

I had the honor to introduce the bill, and I desire now to state the reasons for its introduction. Prior to 1851 it was held in this country that the State courts of the Union had jurisdiction in all matters arising upon our inland navigable waters, which, if they had arisen elsewhere, upon tide-water, or perhaps on our great lakes, would have been proper subjects of maritime and admiralty jurisdiction. But in 1851, in the famous case of the Genesee Chief, (12 Howard R., 457,) all of the previous decisions limiting the admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts to tide-water were overruled by the same court, and the broad doctrine declared that that jurisdiction extends where ever ships float and navigation successfully aids commerce, whether internal or external. That case rose out of a collision between two vessels on Lake Ontario. Its doctrine has been many times affirmed by the same court in subsequent cases. In some cases this jurisdiction has been exercised by Federal courts in the avowed execution of State statutes, and not under any claim of a general common-law power in these courts to such a jurisdiction.

It was not, however, in any of the cases prior to 1866 decided by the Supreme Court that the jurisdiction of the district courts in admiralty and maritime cases arising on our inland rivers was exclusive of the jurisdiction hitherto constantly claimed and exercised by the State courts. On the contrary, it was either not denied or it was in terms conceded that the jurisdiction of the State courts over all such cases was concurrent with that of the district courts of the United States. The State courts along our western rivers have, therefore, continued to exercise uninterrupted, if not unquestioned, jurisdiction in such matters. Being always conveniently accessible to suitors engaged in such commerce, they have afforded more prompt and satisfactory remedies than more remote Federal courts could do.

I cannot persuade myself that the denial of their jurisdiction is not a great public misfortune to the people of the country, whether that denial be legal or illegal. Their jurisdiction has been acquiesced in and approved for more than half a century, and the beneficent results of its exercise greatly promoted the prosperity and happiness of the people.

But it is now denied and declared never to have had any legal existence. By a sweeping edict of superior judicial power and construction it is absolutely annulled and destroyed. In the cases of the Moses Taylor, from California, and The Hine vs. Trevor, from Iowa, the Supreme Court of the United States, in December, 1860, decided that—

"1. The admiralty jurisdiction, to which the power of the Federal judiciary is, by the Constitution, declared to extend, is not limited to tide-water, but covers the entire navigable waters of the United States."

"2. The original jurisdiction in admiralty exercised by the district courts, by virtue of the act of 1789, is exclusive not only of other Federal courts, but of the State courts also."

"3. And that, therefore, State statutes, relating to western inland rivers, which attempt to confer upon State courts a remedy for marine torts and marine contracts, by proceedings strictly in rem, are void, because they are in conflict with that act of Congress."—4 Wallace Reports, pp. 411, 553.

Mr. Chairman, it will be readily seen and fully appreciated by the House to what a radical extent the jurisdiction of the State courts has been divested and that of the Federal courts extended and enlarged by the course of decisions to which I have referred. It will also be seen how important it is to the interests of the people that Congress shall give thought to the duties imposed upon it by these great changes.

But it may be alleged that the power does not exist in Congress to confer jurisdiction upon State courts over cases arising in any part of the country which properly belong to admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. If this were now an original proposition I should feel compelled to deny the existence of any such power. It is not, however; but, on the contrary, is res adjudicata, at least in the Federal courts. In this bill it is proposed to recognize and continue by express enactment the concurrent jurisdiction of the State courts over cases of this kind which arise "upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting said lakes, or upon any of the inland navigable rivers or other waters of the United States."

In the case of The Hine vs. Trevor, already referred to, the Supreme Court say:

"2. The grant of admiralty powers to the district courts of the United States by the ninth section of the act of September 24, 1789, is coextensive with this grant in the Constitution as to the character of the waters over which it extends."

"3. The act of February 26, 1845, is a limitation of the powers granted by the act of 1789 as regards cases arising upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting said lakes in the following particulars:

"1. It limits the jurisdiction to vessels of twenty tons burden and upwards, enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade, and which are employed in commerce and navigation between ports and places in different States."

"2. It grants a jury trial if either party shall demand it."

Now, I desire to say here to my learned friend from Pennsylvania that the Federal courts have repeatedly held that law valid; that it is competent to give suitors in the Federal courts the right of trial by jury in admiralty cases, and it has been enforced in all the States bordering upon the lakes.

"3. The jurisdiction is not exclusive, but is expressly made concurrent with such remedies as may be given by State laws."

It thus appears that the right of Congress to make jurisdiction in such case concurrent between the Federal and State courts is fully recognized by the Supreme Court, and may, for the purposes of this argument, be considered established. But the act of February 26, 1845, only makes such jurisdiction concurrent where the cases arise out of commerce upon the lakes and their connecting waters. In the case just mentioned that court say:

"The grant of original admiralty jurisdiction by the act of 1789, including, as it does, all cases not covered by the act of 1845, is exclusive, not only of all other Federal courts, but of all State courts."

Now, the very object of this bill is to extend the provisions of the act of 1845 to our inland navigable rivers and other inland navigable waters, as well as to the lakes and their connecting waters; so that the local State courts in the vicinity of our great western water highways shall retain and continue to exercise jurisdiction in the exceedingly numerous cases which arise out of the commerce carried on upon those streams, which is nearly equal to all the other commerce of the entire country in extent, value, and importance. It is another object of this bill to secure the right of a trial by jury in such cases. This right exists under all the systems of State laws for the regulation of such jurisdiction. But, I admit, the remedies in admiralty, which are derived from the civil and not from the common law, do not allow or include the right of jury trial. This, however, by no means justifies the conclusion that the right ought to be denied in such cases. It is in harmony with our general jurisprudence to allow that great right in all cases. There is nothing in the nature of the cases which arise in connection with our vast inland water commerce to distinguish them in any material respect from the general classes of civil actions which engage the attention of our courts. The extension of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, by a sort of judicial legislation to all the inland waters of our country on which "vessels float and navigation successfully aids commerce," has entirely destroyed the intrinsic difference between such jurisdiction and the general civil jurisdiction of the courts. The right of trial by jury ought therefore to be secured. This bill does not propose to give that right in cases in admiralty which arise out of the external commerce of the country, and cannot be tried in any State tribunals, but only in Federal courts.

Now, we are in this anomalous condition in this country. Under this and other decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts is exclusive of the entire judicial power of the States over every case of this kind, whether it arise upon the gulf or open waters of the world, or upon any of our inland rivers navigable by steamboats, except cases arising on the lakes and their connecting waters. We are in that peculiar condition in which one of these cases may arise upon one of the lakes, and then the jurisdiction of the local State courts is concurrent with that of the Federal courts, and the right of trial by jury is secured; but, if the case arise upon any of our great western rivers, then the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is absolutely exclusive, and the right of trial by jury is denied. This condition ought not to continue a single day. It is injurious to the country, unjust to the people, unequal in its effect upon different sections, and absurd in itself. It arises out of and results from the decisions to which I have referred. It can have no remedy except by congressional legislation. This bill provides a remedy, makes the law equal and just, saves the right of suitors to seek their remedies in the State courts, and secures the right of trial by jury.

The object of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to carry out the doctrine established in the act of 1845 as to the lakes, and to give to the local tribunals of the States concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal tribunals, to the end that justice may be cheapened and made more convenient and accessible to the people, and so that we may maintain and reestablish the very jurisdiction for which my friend from Pennsylvania is so anxious to have security in his bill. The object of this bill is to continue in operation the well-considered systems of State laws for the regulation of such cases in the State courts, and to suspend the effect of the judicial repeal of them by the Supreme Court.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. My friend from Indiana has made a good speech. I have understood no one has any difficulty about this bill but my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania; and now that it is shown not to be "a jumble," and that the act of 1845 provided for a jury, now that it is relieved of this difficulty, I demand the previous question.

Mr. MUNGEN. For the purpose of information, I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] a question touching the effect which this bill will have if passed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Certainly. What is the question?

Mr. MUNGEN. Will this bill, if passed, compel litigants to seek redress for trivial wrongs on inland waters in the Federal courts of the different judicial districts of the United States? If two canal-boats collide on any of the "raging canaws" of Ohio or Indiana, and the cook or any other man aboard sustains a slight personal injury, will the cook aforesaid be compelled to go into a Federal court where the costs and expenses of litigation are so enormous to seek for damages? There certainly are modes of redress pointed out and provided for in regard to such wrongs in our different State courts. If this be the intention of the bill, I am opposed to it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. That is the very question which troubled my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MUNGEN. If so, I am glad of it. I only asked for information, not having heard the gentleman's remarks on the bill. With the understanding that its object is to give State courts jurisdiction and lessen the expense of litigation I am for the measure, and will support it with my vote.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I am only the agent of the committee, and the gentleman must not blame me for insisting, as there are a number of bills to be reported, on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WOODWARD. I did not intend to invoke any lecture from the gentleman from Wisconsin by simply asking time enough to understand this bill. That is the front of my offending. I have asked this legislative body shall allow one of its members to understand this bill. I do not say I shall vote against it. From hearing it read at the desk it seemed to me to be a bill eminently worthy to be examined; and I think my honorable friend, my testy friend from Wisconsin, should allow us time to understand this bill before being called upon to vote on it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. This bill has been on the gentleman's file for four months, and he has had ample time to study it and make himself acquainted with it. He did not know or understand the position in which I am placed or he would not get angry and scold me because I cannot yield him further time. He cannot know I am the agent of the committee in reporting this bill, or he would not have accused my friend from Indiana with jumbling up matters in this bill. He says he is not familiar with it, and from what he said I am sure he does not know anything about it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object to the gentleman from Wisconsin yielding further.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WOODWARD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. ELDRIDGE, from the same committee, also reported back adversely House bill No. 182, extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act fixing the compensation of bailiffs and criers of the courts for the District of Columbia;" and the same was laid on the table.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEEDS.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 6) further to provide for the acknowledgment of deeds in the District of Columbia; which was laid on the table.

TITLES TO LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 568) explanatory of the act entitled "An act declaring the titles to land warrants in certain cases," with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill provides that the act referred to, approved June 3, 1858, shall be so construed as to authorize the legal representatives of the deceased claimants to file the proof necessary to perfect the claims.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIZE MONEY.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 501) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864; which was ordered to be printed, and recommended to the committee.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was entered.

COURTS IN IDAHO AND MONTANA.

Mr. CHURCHILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 263) amendatory of the organic act of Idaho, extending jurisdiction of justices of the peace, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute therefor.

The substitute was reported. It provides that the organic act of the Territories of Idaho and Montana, and the acts amending the same, so far as they relate to the jurisdiction of probate courts and of justices of the peace, be amended as follows: the probate courts in said Territories in their respective counties, in addition to their probate jurisdiction, are hereby authorized to hear and determine civil causes wherein the debt or damage does not exceed $2,000, and also such criminal cases arising under the laws of said Territories as do not require the intervention of a grand jury; provided that said probate courts shall not have jurisdiction in any matter in controversy wherein the title or right to the peaceable possession of land may be in dispute, nor of chancery or divorce cases. And provided further, that in all cases an appeal may be taken from any order, judgment, or decree of said probate courts to the supreme court of the Territory. The judge of each probate court in Montana, when the population shall exceed six thousand, may, if the Legislative Assembly of the territory so authorize, appoint a clerk for said court, who shall hold said office during the session of the court, and shall receive such fees as may be fixed by law. The probate courts in Montana where the Legislative Assembly shall have authorized the appointment of a clerk as herein provided shall be courts of record. Section two provides that justices of the peace in said Territories in actions and proceedings of which they now have jurisdiction by the laws of said Territories, and the acts hereby amended, are authorized to hear and determine matters in controversy wherein the debt or sum claimed shall not exceed the sum of $300.

Mr. CULLOM. I would inquire if this bill has been considered by the committee?

Mr. CHURCHILL. This substitute was drawn substantially by the chairman of the committee, and is approved by the committee. It extends to the probate courts of these two Territories, and also to the justices of the peace, the same jurisdiction that has been exercised for the last five years by the same courts in the Territory of Colorado, and which has been found to work very beneficially. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHURCHILL, the title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill extending the jurisdiction of probate courts and of justices of the peace in the Territories of Idaho and Montana."

Mr. CHURCHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CHURCHILL, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 348) to provide for holding terms of the United States district court for the western district of Missouri at St. Joseph in said State.

The bill was read. It proposes to enact that the western district of Missouri, as defined by an act of Congress, approved —, shall be separated into two divisions, as follows: all that part of the district which is included in the counties of Jackson, Ray, Carroll, Chariton, Macon, Sullivan, and Putnam, and all that lies to the north and west thereof, shall compose the western division of the district, and regular terms of the United States district court within and for the western district of Missouri shall be held at St. Joseph, in that division, on the first Mondays of May and November in each year; and adjourned terms of the court, as now authorized by law, may also be held at St. Joseph.

The second section provides that the clerk of the court shall appoint a deputy, whose duty it shall be, in addition to his other duties, to reside at St. Joseph, and to keep an office there, and authorizes and empowers him to do and perform in the name of his principal all acts and things which the clerk can or lawfully may do. And the marshal for the western district of Missouri is required to keep an office in St. Joseph, and in person or by deputy to be ready, at all reasonable times, to execute the process of the court in that division, and to perform all other duties devolving on him as marshal for said district.

The third section provides that all that part of the western district of Missouri which is not included in the western division thereof, as defined by this bill, shall constitute the eastern division of the district, in which terms of the United States district court, as now provided by law, shall be held.

The fourth section provides that all suits not of a local nature, may be brought in that division of the district in which the defendants, or one of them resides, and duplicate writs shall be served upon the other defendants before they shall be required to appear to the suit or other proceeding.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the following amendments:

Amend the first section by striking out, in lines twelve and thirteen the words "on the first Mondays of May and November in each year," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on the fourth Monday of May in each year, and at the city of Kansas, in said division, on the 4th day of November in each year;" and add at the end of the section the words "and the city of Kansas."

Fill the blank in the fourth line by inserting "March 3, 1857," and fill the blank in line five by inserting the words "an act to divide the State of Missouri into two judicial districts."

Amend the title by inserting after the words "St. Joseph" the words "and the city of Kansas."

Mr. SPALDING. I would like to know what the necessity is of this measure?

Mr. CHURCHILL. The State of Missouri at the present time is divided into two judicial districts, much the larger proportion of the territory being included in the western district. The terms of the United States district court in that district are now all held at Jefferson City, which is nearly on the eastern limit of the district. The cities of Kansas and St. Joseph, which are near the western limit, have become cities of considerable population and business, and much the larger portion of the business of the court arises in that portion of the State. The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States by which the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States courts has been extended over the rivers has largely increased the necessity felt by the people of those cities for a term of the court to be held there, and it is for the purpose of accommodating that necessity that this bill has been introduced.

Mr. SPALDING. I did not know that it was the policy of our Government to extend Federal courts into every county. Where there are two divisions in a State it is commonly thought to be enough. Now, if business has fallen off at one place, let them transfer the seat of justice to another. I object to increasing the number of district courts in a State above two.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like to know what the increased expense will be?

Mr. SPALDING. The expense is nothing. I am against the policy of the law.

Mr. CHURCHILL. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, that Jefferson City, where the courts are now held, is the capital of the State, and it would be proper that some terms of the court should be held there, while the city of St. Joseph is two hundred miles distant. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments were severally agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHURCHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURTS OF NEW YORK.

Mr. CHURCHILL, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, House bill No. 446, to amend an act entitled "An act to create the eastern judicial district of the State of New York," approved February 25, 1865.

The first section of the bill provides that the section of the act entitled "An act to create the eastern judicial district of the State of New York" shall be amended by striking therefrom the word "Suffolk" and inserting in place thereof the word "Richmond."

The second section provides that any civil action or proceeding arising out of any revenue law of the United States, which may have been instituted or be pending in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, or in the eastern district of New York, may at any time before final judgment in the district court in which it is pending, or on motion of the district attorney, be transferred to the district court of the same district; and upon the order to that effect being entered in any such cause it shall be the duty of the clerk of the circuit court forthwith to transmit to the district court all the papers, documents, and proceedings in such cause; and upon the entry of any such order the said district court shall have full power and authority to proceed with said cause, and hear and determine the same, and make all orders, take all proceedings, and render all decrees which said circuit court might have made, taken, or rendered had not such cause been transferred as aforesaid; and any such cause instituted or pending in the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, or in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of New York, may also, in like manner and with like effect, be transferred from such district court to the circuit court for said district; and for all purposes of appeal or writ of error every cause so transferred shall be regarded as a cause originally commenced in the court to which it shall be so transferred.

The third section provides that in order to facilitate the dispatch of business in the courts of the United States in the port of New York the judge of the southern district of New York shall hereafter reside within the limits of the city of New York; and the judge of the eastern district of New York shall hereafter reside within the limits of the city of Brooklyn; and in addition to the monthly terms of the district courts now required by law to be held in said cities, there shall be held by one of said judges a daily sitting at chambers in the city of New York, except Sundays, holidays, and the summer vacation; and any cause which may or can by law be determined without a jury may be then heard at chambers with like effect as if heard at a regular term of the court. And the marshals of the districts above mentioned shall hereafter, out of the sums allowed for the expenses of the courts in their respective districts, pay quarterly to said judges respectively a sum sufficient to make the yearly compensation of said judges, including the salaries now payable to them by law, equal to the yearly compensation of the judges of the supreme court of the State in and for the city and county of New York; which sums shall be allowed in the accounts of such marshals.

The fourth section provides that whenever it shall appear to any district or circuit court of the United States, upon the last day of any term thereof, that the grand jury of such court have before them business then unfinished but proper to be concluded by such jury, the court may, by order, continue such grand jury and the sittings thereof to the next term of the court; and thereupon the acts and proceedings of the grand jury so continued shall have the same validity and effect as if such grand jury had been originally summoned and sworn for the term to which they have been so continued.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the portion of the third section authorizing the marshals to pay the judges a certain sum necessary to make their annual compensation equal to the compensation of the judges of the supreme court of the State of New York, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The salaries of each of said judges shall be the same as that of the district judge of the district of California, to wit, $5,000 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I suppose the salary is now fixed twice. I move to strike out one of the clauses.

Mr. CHURCHILL. That is stricken out of the bill.

Mr. SPALDING. I notice from the reading of the bill that it proposes to increase the salary of the district judges in the city of New York.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHURCHILL] what is the present salary of those judges?

Mr. CHURCHILL. The salary of the judges of the first and second district is $4,000. This bill makes it $5,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to move to strike out the provision making that increase.

Mr. CHURCHILL. The bill as originally framed proposed to give the district judges in the city of New York the same compensation now paid to the judges of the State of New York residing in the city, $10,000. But that provision has been struck out, and we propose simply to make the salary of these judges the same as that of the judge of the district of California, which is $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I rose to move to strike out all that part of the bill referring to salary, leaving it as fixed by the present law, $4,000.

Mr. SPALDING. We raised all these salaries last year.

Mr. CHURCHILL. Mr. Speaker, when the salaries of these judges was fixed two years ago, the salary of the judge of the district of California was fixed at $5,000; the salary of the judge of the district of Louisiana at $4,500;

the salary of the judges of the eastern and southern districts of New York at $4,000. The statistics furnished by the Solicitor of the Treasury, and embodied in the last annual report of the Treasury Department, show that these judges in the city of New York do more than quadruple the work done by the judge in the district of California; and no one, I think, will claim that the expense of living in the city of New York is less than the expense of living in the city of San Francisco. There is evidently no propriety in exacting from the judges in the district of New York quadruple the labor performed by the judges in California, and yet allowing them but four fifths of the pay. The salaries paid to the judges of these two districts, who are men of the highest character for talent and industry, should bear some relation to the salaries paid to other judicial officers in the city of New York; and yet the ward justices in that city are paid at the present time $6,000 per annum, or more than the judges of the United States residing there, and more than this bill proposes to give them.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHURCHILL] to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. CHURCHILL. I will do so.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, only a year or two ago Congress adjusted the salaries of all these United States judges upon what was deemed a fair, just, and equitable basis.

Mr. SPALDING. Only at the last session of Congress.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Only at the last session we adopted what was intended as a definite settlement of this matter; yet now it is proposed in this special bill to raise the salaries of the district judges in the city of New York. I have no doubt that these two gentlemen, Judge Blatchford and Judge Benedict, are good judges, and perhaps their salaries are not adequate, but I do protest against this special legislation. As the gentleman has spoken in regard to the amount of duty performed by these judges, I undertake to say that the judge of the northern district of Illinois, who gets precisely the same salary as these judges in New York now get, works as many hours as they; and I do not know any reason why a discrimination should be made between them. If these two district judges are to have their salaries raised, I insist that the salaries of other judges who have just as much to do should also be increased.

Mr. CHURCHILL. In answer to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, I will inform him that while during the last year eight hundred and seventy-three suits in which the United States was a party were commenced in the southern district of New York, there were only two hundred and eighty-two in the district in Illinois to which the gentleman has referred. This bill, instead of requiring these judges to hold court as it is held by the judges in the State of Illinois, requires that they shall sit daily during the year, with the exception of Sundays and holidays and the summer vacation. The amount of labor of these judges is very great, and it is but fair they should have the inconsiderable increase of salary proposed for them by this bill. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment of Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 56, noes 42.

The remaining amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back House bill No. 1131, regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases for the protection of officers and agents of the Government, and for the better defense of the Treasury against unlawful claims, with sundry amendments.

The bill was read. The first section provides that all the provisions of section eight of the act of July 28, 1866, entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes," and the forms and modes by that section and the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1863, therein referred to, prescribed for prosecuting suits, withholding executions, and paying judgments against officers of the United States, or other persons engaged in executing the acts relative to captured and abandoned property, shall extend and be applied to all suits and proceedings (except those in behalf of the United States) which have been brought, or may hereafter be brought, against any officer or agent of the Government, civil or military, for acts done during the rebellion while acting by virtue or under color of his office or employment; and every defendant in such suit or proceeding having made full defense thereto, and having notified the Attorney General of the United States to appear and defend the same, shall be entitled to the full benefit and protection provided in said section for officers and agents of the Government engaged in the collection of the public revenue; and any defendant being aggrieved by any order or direction, certificate, ruling, or judgment of any court made or had in any such proceeding, may except thereto and appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court of the United States, and have the questions arising there heard and determined.

The second section provides that no action or suit shall be maintained in any court of the United States, or of any State thereof, in the name or in the behalf or interest of any alien, against the United States, or any person, for or on account of any act done or omitted to be done by such person as an officer or agent of the United States, in the administration of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," and approved March 12, 1863, or of the act of Congress entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," approved July 2, 1864, or in virtue or under color of the acts of Congress aforesaid, or any other acts of Congress relative to the said insurrectionary States, or to persons or property therein; and to any action or suit which may have been heretofore, or shall hereafter be, instituted by any lien against the United States, or any such person as aforesaid, on account of any act done or omitted to be done as aforesaid, the defendant may and shall plead or allege in bar thereof that such act was done, or omitted to be done, in the administration of one of the acts of Congress aforesaid, or in virtue or under color thereof, and such plea or allegation shall be, and shall be deemed and adjudged in law to be, a complete and conclusive bar to any such suit or action.

The third and concluding section provides that it is hereby declared to have been the true intent and meaning of the act approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," that the remedy given in cases of seizure made under said act, by preferring claim in the Court of Claims, should be exclusive, precluding the owner of any property taken by agents of the Treasury Department as abandoned or captured property in virtue or under color of said act from suit at common law, or any other mode of redress whatever, before any court or tribunal other than said Court of Claims; and in all cases in which suits of trespass, replevin, detinue, or any other form of action may have been brought and are now pending, or shall hereafter be brought against any person for or on account of private property taken by such person as an officer or agent of the United States, in virtue or under color of the act aforesaid, or the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection," the defendant may and shall plead or allege in bar thereof that such act was done or omitted to be done by him as an officer or agent of the United States in the administration of one of the acts of Congress aforesaid, or in virtue or under color thereof, and such plea or allegation shall be, and shall be deemed and adjudged in law to be, a complete and conclusive bar to any such suit or action.

The SPEAKER stated that the morning hour had expired, and the bill went over until to-morrow.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill, and to move that they be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the report of the committee be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I give notice that I expect to-morrow after the morning hour to move to go into committee to take up and act on these amendments. It is a very long bill, and we ought to get it into the hands of a conference committee at the earliest practicable moment.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

Mr. BANKS. It was my intention, Mr. Speaker, before moving to go into the Committee of the Whole, to move there be an evening session for debate, but on the representation of the minority committee I am induced to forego that purpose.

Mr. ELIOT. I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order in the committee.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope there will be an evening session. If this goes over until to-morrow I shall move to postpone it and take up the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. There are several members not upon the committee who would be willing to speak this evening. The Chair has the names of ten gentlemen who wish to speak on this question.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the committee take a recess from four and a half o'clock until half past seven o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. GARFIELD in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867.

Mr. BANKS addressed the committee for an hour and a half. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

At four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m. the committee took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At half past seven o'clock p. m. the Speaker took the chair, and stated that in the absence of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Mr. GARFIELD, he would ask Mr. ORTH to act in his place.

The House then, under the order of the House, resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORTH in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867.

The CHAIRMAN stated that Mr. LOUGHRIDGE was entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move the following amendment in the nature of a substitute:

Whereas the President of the United States, on the 30th of March, 1867, entered into a treaty with the Emperor of Russia, by the terms of which it was stipulated that in consideration of the cession by the Emperor of Russia to the United States of certain territory therein described, the United States should pay to the Emperor of Russia the sum of $7,200,000 in coin; and whereas it was further stipulated in said treaty that the United States shall accept of such cession, and that certain inhabitants of said territory shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights and immunities of citizens of the United States; and whereas the subjects thus embraced in the stipulations of said treaty are among the subjects which by the Constitution of the United States are submitted to the power of Congress, and over which Congress has exclusive jurisdiction; and it being for such reason necessary that the consent of Congress should be given to the said treaty before the same can have full force and effect; having taken into consideration the said treaty, and approving of the stipulations therein. To the end that the same may be carried into effect: Therefore,

SEC. 1. Be it enacted, That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the stipulations of said treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman it was the agreement that no business should be done this evening, but the session should be devoted to debate on the Alaska purchase.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I give notice, then, I will offer it at the proper time.

Mr. PRYUN. Cannot he offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is business, and it cannot be done under the order of the House.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the circumstances under which this question is presented to the House it is one of very great importance, and one which demands our most serious consideration, and my great fear is that in the pressure of business it may not receive that careful consideration at our hands that its importance demands. I rise to discuss it fully impressed with my inability to do justice to the subject, and yet I cannot remain silent and feel that I have done my duty as one of the Representatives of the people upon this floor.

I shall leave the question of the physical character of this Territory and its value to others better informed than I am on that question. There is another question involved of far more importance, one before which the question of the value of this territory sinks into utter insignificance, a question a more important than which has never been discussed within these walls. That question, sir, is in relation to the rights, the powers, and the constitutional prerogatives of this House of Representatives as one of the departments of this Government. That question is directly involved in this case, and to that I propose to direct my remarks; and so far as that question is concerned it makes no difference whether this territory is a worthless, frozen waste of eternal ice and snow, or whether it is a fertile, blooming, fruitful garden. Upon this question the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs has said but little in his remarks in favor of this bill, and I say in all candor that I am unable to gather from the report of the committee or from the speech of the chairman what the opinion of the committee or of the chairman is in relation to the extent of the treaty-making power as vested in the President, or in relation to the constitutional rights and prerogatives of the House in connection with treaties.

Did the President, in the purchase of this territory, the execution of an obligation purporting to bind the Government for the amount of the purchase money, and the taking possession of the territory without the consent of Congress, exceed his constitutional powers? If not, let the world understand it. If he did, then by all means we should at once repudiate his unauthorized assumptions of power; otherwise we will be bound by like acts in the future by adopting these without protest.

An attempt is being made, through the means of the treaty-making power, to concentrate almost all of the power of this Government in the hands of the President, subject only to the advice and consent of the Senate. And this proposition is, if adopted, a long step in that direction. I hesitate not to say, sir, that if, without any explanation, disavowance, or protest, we make this appropriation, we shall, so far as this House can do it, have surrendered practically all the power of the Government into the hands of the treaty-making department, and reduced this House to the position of an involuntary agent of that power with no discretion but to carry out its expressed will. That we are rapidly drifting in that direction it seems to me must be apparent to the most casual observer. By substituting a foreign Government or an Indian tribe in place of this House, on the principle claimed by the Executive, there is nothing within the whole scope of the legislative powers of the Government that cannot be done without the consent or intervention of this House. I defy any gentleman to point out a single act of legislation that cannot be done through and by the treaty-making power, if we admit that power to the extent claimed by the Executive.

Why, sir, but a few months since, through the means of this treaty-making power, eight hundred thousand acres of the most beautiful land on the continent has been transferred to the ownership of a private citizen without the consent of this House or the legislative department of the Government. And still more recently a vast section of our country, containing eight million acres, has been through this same means transferred from the Government to a private corporation, who thus become the absolute owners of this vast territory, equal in extent to the three States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island—and this not only without the consent but against the protestations of this House—and all this right in the face of the constitutional provision that "Congress shall have power to dispose of the territory belonging to the United States."

It is true this last transaction has not yet received the consent of the Senate, and it may not. This House in its new position as a petitioner or memorialist at the bar of the Senate may have sufficient influence with that body to prevent this consent being given. That this House still has the right of petition left to it is an exceedingly pleasant reflection; and I hope we shall at least insist upon retaining that right. I trust the Committee on Foreign Affairs will never consent to the surrender of the right of the House to petition the Senate in relation to treaties which rob the House of its prerogatives and the people of their rights.

But, sir, whether the Senate consent to this last outrage on the Constitution and the rights of the people or not makes no difference in the force of the illustration afforded by the case. The power is claimed and exercised. And, sir, under this power, if eight million acres of the public domain can be given away, every acre of it can in the same way be disposed of; and the power is not confined to the disposal of the public lands, but by this new legislative power the President, the Senate, and the Indian tribes have complete control over the Treasury of the Government, and can by treaty appropriate money for any purpose, and to an unlimited extent.

To show that this absolute power, exercised through the instrumentality of Indian treaties, was not claimed originally by the Executive, but is the result of gradual encroachment upon the powers of Congress, I refer the House to the first instance of a treaty made by the Government with Indians. On the 7th of August, 1789, the President in a message to Congress said:

"If it should be the judgment of Congress that it would be most expedient to terminate all differences in the southern district, and to lay the foundation for future confidence by an amicable treaty with the Indian tribes in that quarter, I think proper to suggest the consideration of the expediency of instituting a temporary commission for that purpose, to consist of three persons, whose authority shall expire with the occasion."

In consideration of the subject Congress passed an act authorizing the appointing three commissioners and giving them the power to treat with the Indians, and appropriating $20,000 for the purpose. The President appointed the commissioners and gave them instructions, which were communicated to the House, in which instructions the following language was used:

"You will please to observe that the whole sum that can be constitutionally expended is $20,000, and that the same cannot be extended."

Why could the commissioners not expend more than $20,000 constitutionally? Because Congress had not authorized it. Notice the language of President Washington:

"If it should be the judgment of Congress that it would be expedient to negotiate a treaty with the Indians" * * * "to negotiate a treaty with the Indians" * * *

I think proper to suggest, &c.

Here was a direct admission by the President of the power and control of Congress over the Indian question. The commissioners appointed not having effected anything, the House of Representatives, in March of the same year, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That provision ought to be made by law for holding a treaty to establish peace between the United States and the Wabash, Miami, and other nations of Indians northwest of the Ohio river; also for regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes and the mode of extinguishing their claim to lands within the United States."

This resolution shows that the House of Representatives then thought that they not only ought to provide by law for holding treaties with Indian tribes, but that Congress had the power to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indians, and to prescribe the mode of extinguishing their claims to lands within the United States. Now, the treaty-making power regulates these matters and takes charge of and disposes of the public lands without any reference to Congress whatever and in defiance of the protests of this House.

Thus we see that this treaty-making power, from being an instrument or agent in the hands of Congress in connection with Indian affairs, as it was originally, has now, by a series of encroachments, come to exercise absolute and unlimited control, not only to regulate Indian affairs, but through them to exercise vast powers of legislation.

I have referred to the matter of Indian treaties for the purpose of showing the necessity of strictly restraining that department within its proper sphere, and for the purpose of illustrating the extent to which it will go if left unchecked. The question now before the House is one connected with a compact with a foreign Government, and is important not only on account of the political question involved, but because it is claimed that our good faith with a foreign Government will be broken in case we refuse to make the appropriation asked.

It is important and truly desirable that all our negotiations with foreign Governments should be so conducted as to preserve the honor and the good faith of the nation untarnished, and to maintain a national reputation for inviolable fidelity. That this should be the reputation and character of our Government I doubt not is the sincere desire of every patriotic American citizen; and to this end, sir, I regard it as of the very first importance that there should be a perfect and settled understanding and agreement between the several coordinate branches of the Government as to the powers and the prerogatives of each in connection with questions involved in negotiations with foreign Powers, so that the action of the different departments may be in harmony. Otherwise we will be continually liable to be involved in difficulties.

Our Government has been in operation eighty-one years, and it would seem reasonable to suppose that by this time questions of the importance of this should have been definitely settled. And yet, sir, from the history of this case, we are forced to recognize the fact that there is a very wide difference of opinion between the House of Representatives and the executive department as now organized in relation to the extent of the treaty-making power and the jurisdiction of this House, going upon the presumption, as I do, that the House still adheres to the doctrine first declared in 1795, and which it has never yet surrendered by any declaration or act. From the course of the Executive in this case, it is clearly his opinion, and that of his advisers, that Congress has, in no case, any discretion in relation to passing the laws necessary to carry treaties into effect. But that when a treaty is made by the President and ratified by the Senate it is the duty of this House then to recognize it as the supreme law of the land, and to pass all laws necessary to carry it into effect, whatever may be the nature or character of its stipulations and regardless of the views of Congress as to its expediency or its bearing upon the public good. That the President has the power, with the consent of the Senate, to purchase territory from foreign Powers, to any extent, and annex such territory to and make it a part of this Government, and make all its inhabitants citizens of the United States, and to appropriate for such purpose such sums of money as he may see fit; that this may be done by secret treaty, without any authority or consent from Congress, and that after such treaty is consummated Congress has no control whatever over the matter, but must, without question or hesitation, appropriate the money required, and pass all necessary laws to carry the treaty into effect; and there is no limit to the extent of this power—it may extend to the purchase of the whole continent, British America, Mexico, West India Islands, and thus insure the destruction of our Government.

Sir, as one of the Representatives of the people upon this floor I here enter my earnest and solemn protest against this monstrous assumption—this fatal political heresy. If this doctrine is to prevail, then, sir, this House is but a useless appendage to the Government, and for all practical purposes might as well be abolished. Can any gentleman upon this floor go home to his constituents and tell them that he has agreed to the surrender of his rights, his power, and his dignity as a member of this House, and the surrender of the constitutional rights of the people through their Representatives upon this floor, to be heard upon as important questions as are involved in the unlimited extension of the jurisdiction of our Government, and the unlimited increase of our already crushing debt? And yet, sir, this is just what the President now demands at our hands, and I am sorry to say is what will be the result of the action recommended by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; the passage of this appropriation without any accompanying declaration in relation to the unauthorized acts of the Executive in connection therewith, which will be in law and in fact a tacit admission of his right to exercise the powers he has assumed in this case, and will thus form a precedent for the future.

I hold the true doctrine and the law in relation to the treaty-making power to be that which the House declared in 1795. That while the treaty-making power is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and while the House has no agency in making treaties, yet when a treaty contains stipulations in relation to subjects which by the Constitution are submitted to Congress, the treaty must depend for its execution upon laws to be passed by Congress, and that in all such cases it is the prerogative and the duty of Congress to deliberate, to take into view all of the considerations bearing upon the question, and to act upon it according to their judgment of the interests of the Government and the wishes of the people, and either pass the necessary laws and thus give the treaty vitality and effect, or refuse to pass them, as in their opinion the public good requires.

Take the case now before the House: the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, made a treaty of purchase with Russia, whereby that Power agreed to transfer to the United States certain territory, in consideration of which territory the United States agrees to pay Russia $7,200,000 in gold. This treaty was ratified by both Powers and ratifications exchanged. And Congress is now asked to enact a law for the appropriation of the necessary money and to carry the treaty into effect. Now, if the doctrine I have referred to, and to which I object, is correct, and if without any legislation by Congress the treaty is effective, clothed with vitality and the law of the land, then no laws of Congress are necessary, and the treaty itself is a sufficient law for the appropriation of the money. Sir, the application to Congress for the passage of a law for the appropriation of the money and to carry the treaty into effect is a clear and conclusive demonstration of the error and the unsoundness of the doctrine claimed by those who regard this negotiation as perfected and binding without the action of Congress.

The great error of those who deny the necessity of congressional action in any case, and the right of Congress to exercise its discretion in passing laws to carry treaties into effect, is, in regarding the treaty-making power as granted to the President, with the advice of the Senate, as unlimited and absolute in its character. In an absolute monarchy or an empire, where the power of the ruler is unlimited, the treaty-making power, wherever vested, is unlimited; but in a Government like ours, where the powers of the Government are limited and specified by a written constitution, the treaty-making power is necessarily limited by the provisions of such constitution. The Constitution of the Republic defines and delegates the powers of the Government, and expressly provides that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution are reserved to the States or the people." In such a Government the treaty-making power cannot be absolute. How far and to what subjects it extends depends upon the provisions of the constitution. All we find in the Constitution in relation to treaties is the provision in article two, section two:

"The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators concur."

And this further provision in article sixth:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution and laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Constitution in delegating the powers of Congress specifies the powers granted, while in delegating the treaty-making power it uses only general terms and makes no specifications. Will it be claimed that because the power is given in this general language that therefore the power is unlimited in its extent? This cannot be claimed, for most assuredly it must be admitted that the power is limited by the Constitution at least to this extent, that no law can be made by treaty contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. For instance, a treaty with a foreign nation, which provided that any particular form of religion should be established in this country and supported by the Government, although made with all the forms of law by the President, and ratified and consented to by two thirds of the Senate, would be void, because providing and stipulating for that which is forbidden by the Constitution.

Again, the treaty-making power being delegated in general terms, without any enumeration, if certain powers are specifically granted to another department of the Government, then by a proper rule of construction they would be denied to the treaty-making department, for the simple and apparent reason that in construing the Constitution all its parts must be taken together, and if possible made to harmonize. Among the powers granted to Congress is to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. Therefore, the treaty-making power could not, without the consent of Congress, make a binding treaty stipulation that the emigrants from any foreign country should upon their arrival here be invested with full rights of citizenship, or make any stipulation by treaty in opposition to the laws of Congress on the subject of naturalization. Another of the powers granted to Congress is that of raising and supporting armies, and standing armies in time of peace being dangerous to the liberties of the people the framers of the Constitution with great care and caution provided in connection with this power that no appropriation of money for the use of an army should be made for more than two years, thus giving the House of Representatives, or the Senate, either of them, the power by refusing to agree to an appropriation to put an end to the Army establishment at the expiration of every term of two years. This power thus delegated to Congress was thus carefully guarded. Could it be claimed that the President, with the consent of the Senate, would have the power to stipulate by treaty with England, for instance, that the United States should maintain a standing army of one hundred thousand men for the security of peace along the borders, and that such stipulation would be binding on the Government of the United States without the consent of Congress? I think not, and only because the Constitution has vested in Congress this important power.

Again, and to come to the question directly involved in the case now before the House, the Constitution vests in Congress the control over the Treasury of the nation, and provides that no money shall be drawn therefrom but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and makes the further unusual provision that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, a provision not made as to any other class of laws. Evidently it was the intention of the framers of that instrument, careful as they were to guard well the interests and rights of the people, to throw around the Treasury as many guards as possible, and, therefore, they provided not only that no money should be drawn from the Treasury in consequence of a law passed through both Houses of Congress, but that such law must originate in the House of Representatives, the most numerous body in the Government, and more directly accountable to the people than any other department of the Government.

Now, sir, looking at these provisions of the Constitution, what is the fair and reasonable conclusion? It seems to me there can be no difference of opinion that the intention of the framers of the Constitution was that no money should be taken from the Treasury of the United States but for some object which should first receive the sanction of the judgment of the people's Representatives in this House, and ultimately the sanction of Congress. Now, sir, it is claimed that it is the duty of this House to pass a bill making this appropriation, and that we have nothing to do with the merits or the propriety of the appropriation; and the case is compared with that of the appropriation for the payment of the salaries of officers, which salaries are fixed by law, and yet which cannot be paid without an appropriation, and it is claimed that this House has no more right to refuse an appropriation in the one case than in the other.

I do not admit, sir, unconditionally that the House has no right in any case where the law provides for an expenditure to refuse an appropriation for such expenditure. Where an office is established by the Constitution, such as the President or Supreme Court, I admit the House would have no right to refuse the appropriation that might be fixed by law for the salary of such office, for the simple reason that the Constitution, which is the highest law, by establishing the office requires the payment of the compensation, and expressly provides that they shall receive their compensation. But there may be cases where the House would be justified in refusing to make appropriations for the payment of salaries provided by law, and I have already referred to one where I think the framers of the Constitution recognized the right of either House so to do; at least it is difficult to imagine any other reason for the provision. I refer to the provision in relation to the standing army, that no appropriation shall be made for more than two years. It was evidently the intention to give either House the power by refusing to consent to an appropriation to put an end to the Army establishment, and this is the view taken of that clause by Mr. Madison and other great statesmen of that day.

But aside from this, sir, the cases are not analogous. In all cases where appropriations are asked for salaries and for other purposes provided by law the propriety and the necessity of the appropriation have already previously been passed upon and assented to by both Houses of Congress. The people's Representatives have, in all such cases, given the assent of their judgment that the public good requires such appropriations. But in this case there has been no provision whatever by law of Congress for the appropriation required; the purpose for which it is to be made has never received the assent of the people's Representatives; they have never decided that the public good required it, or would be enhanced by it, nor that the finances of the country are in such condition as to justify it; and we are told that we have no right now to take into view any of these considerations, but, regardless of our own convictions as to the propriety of the transaction, we must vote the amount of money asked. To-morrow we may have notice of some other treaty entered into by the treaty-making power with some foreign Government providing for some purpose or other an appropriation of a hundred millions, and on the same principle we are bound to foot the bill without question, and thus, by this doctrine, the President and the Senate would have absolute and unlimited control over the Treasury, inasmuch as the amount of money which might be expended by treaty is unlimited and the objects and ways in which it might thus be expended are also unlimited.

I trust, sir, that but few will be found upon this floor willing to consent to a doctrine so dangerous, willing to yield up the authority and prerogatives of this House vested in it by the Constitution of the country, and which it has always heretofore persistently maintained. But there is another question involved in this case in addition to that of the appropriation of the money, and one of equal importance and interest; and that is, as to the power of the President with the advice and consent of the Senate and without the consent of Congress, or of the people of the United States, by treaty to extend the area of our Government, and bring into its jurisdiction foreign countries and foreign peoples. This power I deny. I do not claim that the Constitution has vested this power in Congress in express terms. As I read that instrument it is silent on the subject. Such power is not by that instrument given to any department of the Government in express terms. I do not wish to be understood as denying this power to the Government. By the laws of nations all Governments have the right to add to their domain by purchase and by conquest, and I suppose that our Government has this right, by the laws of nature, the same as the right of self-defense; the right to do what is necessary for its own existence.

Jefferson, I believe, placed the power to purchase Louisiana upon the law of necessity, of self-preservation. Many of our greatest statesmen have placed it upon the clause in the Constitution giving Congress the power to admit new States into the Union. But from whatever source the power is derived, I deny that it belongs to or is vested in the treaty-making department, but that it belongs strictly to Congress. It may doubtless be properly exercised through the agency of the treaty-making department, which in such case acts as the agent of Congress, yet it cannot properly be done without the authority and consent of Congress, and ought not to be done without that consent previously obtained, as in the Louisiana and the Florida cases it was previously obtained.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be understood to assert that the previous assent of Congress was obtained to the acquisition of Louisiana before the treaty was made?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. That is my understanding. An appropriation of $2,000,000 was made before any step was taken by the President. And yet, sir, while the treaty-making department may thus act in the premises, Congress has the power, without the coöperation of the treaty-making department, to enter into the necessary compact, and to consummate the purchase, as was done in the case of the annexation of Texas. Indeed, I apprehend that strictly the term "treaty" as used in the Constitution, where the power to make treaties is given to the President, does not include transactions or negotiations of the kind now under consideration, but that as used there it is limited to questions inter alios; that is, to questions between this Government and foreign Powers, which require negotiation to adjust and settle them, and that a single transaction of bargain and sale would not come within its scope. The definition of a treaty as given by Vattel in his treatise on the laws of nations is as follows:

"A treaty, in Latin foedus, is a compact made with a view to the public welfare by the superior power, either for perpetuity, or for a considerable time.

"The compacts, which have temporary matters for their object, are called agreements, conventions, and factions. They are accomplished by one single act and not by repeated acts. These compacts are perfected in their execution once for all. Treaties receive a successive execution, whose duration equals that of the treaty."

A single transaction, then, of bargain and sale, which is not continuing, but is perfected at once by its execution, does not come within Vattel's definition of "treaty." The framers of the Constitution I claim used the word in that instrument in this same sense; and this view is strengthened and made apparent from the fact that a clear distinction is taken in the Constitution between, "treaties" and "agreements and compacts." Section ten of article one provides that no State shall enter into any "treaty," while further on in the same section it provides that—

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with a foreign Power."

If all agreements with foreign Powers are treaties, then the treaty-making power is not vested exclusively in the President, with the advice of the Senate, for Congress may authorize States to enter into treaties. The only conclusion, then, is that while the power of making treaties is vested exclusively in the President, with the advice of the Senate, yet the term is used in the sense Vattel uses it, as contradistinguished from simple agreements, conventions, and compacts, which consist of a single transaction accomplished by one single act, such as a transaction of bargain and sale. And this view of the Constitution has been sanctioned by all departments of the Government. In the case of the compact between this Government and the republic of Texas, by which that republic ceded all its territory to the United States and became annexed to the United States, as I have before stated, the treaty-making power took no part in the transaction; it was done entirely by the legislative department of the Government. The validity of that transaction has never been questioned, but has been sanctioned by all departments of the Government; whereas, if the compact with the foreign republic of Texas, which was thus entered into, was a treaty in the meaning of that term in the Constitution, then the whole transaction was without authority of law; for if the negotiation was a treaty, in the sense of the Constitution, the jurisdiction of the treaty-making power was exclusive; if not a treaty, then the treaty-making power had no jurisdiction.

Applying the same principles to the case now under consideration, which is entirely similar in its character, and I claim that a just conclusion is that this case does not come within the jurisdiction of the treaty-making power, but is entirely and properly a matter for the legislative department of the Government; and that, while the negotiation for the purchase was carried on by the treaty-making department, it was done without the authority of Congress previously given, and the whole question as to the propriety of the purchase is as fully open for the consideration and the judgment of the House and of Congress as if no treaty had been entered into; and it is our prerogative, and not only that, but our duty, to examine into the merits of the case, and to confirm or reject the purchase as in our judgment the public good requires.

But we are told that the emperor of Russia has delivered possession of the territory purchased, and that this Government has accepted and taken possession of it, and that for that reason we are estopped from refusing to carry out the contract. I am at a loss to know upon what principle of law this conclusion is arrived at. So far as this Government is concerned, I deny that there has been any legal or authorized taking possession of the territory. The act of the President in assuming to take possession was without authority of law, and was not the act of the Government, of which fact the emperor was presumed to be cognizant. I take it to be a well-settled principle of law that the conductors of all Governments are presumed to know the constitutions and public laws of all other Governments. The emperor of Russia is therefore held to know the provisions of the Constitution, the public laws and proceedings of this Government, and with this knowledge, if he relied upon an incomplete, inchoate negotiation, one not yet consummated, and which, by the Constitution and laws of this Government, required the consent of Congress before it could be carried into effect, and, so relying, made a formal transfer and delivery of the territory, he has placed himself by his own imprudence in a position where he would have no good cause of complaint if Congress, in the exercise of its rightful discretion, should refuse to carry the treaty into effect. In such case the Government of Russia could resume possession of the territory if it desired to do so.

The President, acting without any authority of law, it seems, directed a military officer to take possession of the territory, which direction was complied with in form by such officer. The Russian flag was withdrawn and the flag of the United States substituted. The President might, with as much right and authority, have directed military officers to take possession of Canada or the British possessions.

The act was as unauthorized as it was unnecessary, and deserving of the severest condemnation. And here I desire to direct the attention of the House and the country to the difference in the course of President Jefferson in 1803, in connection with the purchase of Louisiana, and the present Administration in relation to the assumption and exercise of doubtful powers. Although the Louisiana territory, commanding as it did the mouth of the Mississippi, and its acquisition regarded as a pressing necessity, yet with a desire to keep within the bounds of his constitutional powers, Jefferson did not venture to enter into negotiations for its purchase until authorized to do so by Congress, and an appropriation was made by Congress for that purpose.

In this Alaska case the President, without any notice to, or authority from Congress, on his own motion, entered into a treaty for the purchase of a territory, for the acquisition of which by this Government there was at least no immediate or pressing necessity, a territory of but little value as compared with Louisiana. In the Louisiana case, after the treaty was consummated and ratified by the Senate, before attempting to take possession of the territory, Jefferson transmitted a copy of the treaty to Congress for the action of Congress, in its legislative capacity, suggested to Congress that steps should be taken to take possession of the territory, and awaited the action of Congress. An act was passed authorizing and empowering the President to take possession of the territory, and in obedience to such law of Congress the President afterward formally took possession of the territory.

In this case President Johnson, immediately upon the ratification of the treaty by the Senate, before any appropriation had been made by Congress for the payment of the price stipulated, before Congress had in any way had the matter under consideration, dispatched a brigadier general of the Army, with a vessel and a detachment of soldiers, with orders to take possession of the territory, which orders were formally obeyed. And now the Representatives of the people in Congress are told that in consequence of such unauthorized act on the part of the President they are deprived of any discretion, and are under legal obligation to appropriate the money and pass the laws to carry the treaty into effect, and that if they refuse so to do Russia will have good cause of war.

Sir, if this doctrine is correct, what security have we but that to-morrow, by virtue of some secret treaty, negotiated and ratified in regular form, without the knowledge of this House or the people, some military officer may hoist our flag over the halls of the Montezumas and take possession of Mexico, annex all that territory to the United States, and transform its ignorant and vicious population into citizens of this Republic?

I insist that if such an addition is to be made to our territory and our population that the people of this Government should have some voice in its consummation. It would seem reasonable, sir, that this should be; and the doctrine that would deprive them of this right is certainly unwarranted by anything in the Constitution or laws of the Republic. The necessity of congressional action to give full validity and effect to treaties of purchase and to treaties which include in their stipulations subjects which by the Constitution are granted to Congress has always been recognized from the organization of the Government. It has always been claimed by this House, has been declared by the Supreme Court, and recognized, I think, by every Executive except Washington.

In the case of the treaty of 1795 with Great Britain, which was a treaty of commerce, amity, and navigation, the treaty was duly ratified in October, 1795, and the President promulgated the same and transmitted a copy thereof to the House of Representatives on the 1st of March, 1796, for the information of Congress. On the next day a resolution was offered requesting the President to lay before the House copies of the correspondence relative to the treaty. This resolution raised the question whether Congress had any right in connection with that treaty to deliberate upon the expediency or inexpediency of carrying the treaty into effect, and to act thereon as, in their opinion, the public good required. Those who denied this power to Congress opposed the resolution; those who claimed it advocated the resolution. A debate of great ability followed, lasting three weeks, in which Mr. Madison and Mr. Gallatin took the lead in favor of the power of Congress, when the resolution was passed by a vote of 55 yeas to 36 nays. To that resolution the President responded in a message denying the power claimed by the House, and declining to furnish the correspondence and papers requested. That message of the President was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and the following resolution was offered:

"Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution 'that the President shall have power, by and with the advice of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senate present concur,' the House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties; but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress. And it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives, in all such cases, to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good."

This resolution was advocated by Mr. Madison in a speech of great power, and was passed by a vote of yeas 57, nays 35; and had all the members voted the vote would have been 63 yeas to 36 nays.

Thus at an early day the House of Representatives, by a decisive vote, settled the doctrine, so far as the House is concerned, settled it directly and deliberately, and with a full realization of the importance of the question. In the course of the debate Mr. Livingston, who was in favor of the resolution, remarked, "That it was the most important question that had ever been agitated within the walls of the House." After thus settling the doctrine for itself, the House, on a resolution declaring that laws should be passed to carry the treaty into effect, discussed the merits of the treaty for over two weeks, James Madison, Albert Gallatin, and John Livingston, and others of the most distinguished statesmen of the country opposing the resolution to carry the treaty into effect; and on the final vote the resolution was adopted by but three majority, there being 51 yeas and 48 nays.

In 1803 the United States purchased from France the territory of Louisiana. But in that case the initiatory step was taken by Congress. The matter was discussed in secret session, and was referred to a committee which made a report in favor of the purchase of the territory, stating, among other things in their report, that—"In the opinion of the committee the possession of that territory was not only required for the convenience of the United States, but would be demanded by their most imperious necessities."

And recommended the adoption of a resolution appropriating $2,000,000, to be applied, under the discretion of the President, toward the expenses of the negotiation for the purchase of the territory, which resolution was adopted and the money appropriated, and afterward, having thus the express sanction of Congress, President Jefferson entered into negotiations for the purchase of the territory by treaty, which was made and ratified by the Senate; and on the 22d of October, 1803, the President transmitted a copy of the treaty to Congress, "for the purpose (using his own language) of the consideration of Congress in its legislative capacity;" and after a discussion upon the merits of the treaty the usual resolution was adopted by a vote of yeas 90, nays 25, declaring that provision should be made by law for carrying the treaty into effect. Thus, in that case, Congress not only authorized the purchase in advance, but ratified and confirmed it after it was negotiated. And, as I have before stated, after this treaty was made and ratified, President Jefferson declined to take possession of the territory, awaiting the action of Congress in their legislative capacity upon the treaty. And after Congress had resolved to carry the treaty into effect, and passed an act authorizing the President to take possession of the territory, and not until then, did Jefferson presume to exercise that authority.

What a pity, sir, that Jefferson had not lived to this day that he could have learned something of the Constitution of the country and of the power of the President. In the case of the purchase of Florida from Spain the treaty was concluded on the 22d of February, 1819, but was not ratified until February, 1821.

The treaty was then communicated by the President to Congress for the legislative consideration and action necessary to give it effect. The President, in that case, did not assume to take possession of the territory until after the assent of Congress had been given, but awaited that action; and on the 3d of March, 1821, an act was passed by Congress, as in the case of Louisiana, authorizing and empowering the President to take possession of the territory, and by virtue of such authority the President formally took possession of the territory.

The last instance to which I shall refer is the annexation of Texas in 1845. As I have already stated, the treaty-making department took no part in that negotiation whatever; it was consummated by a joint resolution of Congress, approved by the Executive. The question of the power of Congress without the intervention of the treaty-making department, to enter into a compact with a foreign Government, and to negotiate for the annexation of foreign territory, was fully discussed in both branches of Congress, and the joint resolution was passed in the House by a vote of 132 yeas to 76 nays, and in the Senate by a vote of 27 yeas to 25 nays. Thus we have in that case not only the judgment of the House of Representatives in accordance with its previous uniform action, but also the deliberate assent of both of the departments constituting the treaty-making power, the Senate and the President, to the principle that Congress has the power, without the intervention of the treaty-making department, to enter into a compact with a foreign Government for the acquisition and annexation of territory.

I submit, sir, that this action of the Senate and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled, and of the Executive, settles the doctrine which I claim to be correct, that a compact with a foreign Government for the purchase of territory, and which includes no other objects or stipulations, is not strictly a treaty in the meaning of the term as it is used in the Constitution, in article two, section two, where the power to make treaties is given to the President, with the advice of the Senate, but that it is a compact or agreement such as is mentioned in section ten, article one, where a State is forbidden, without the consent of Congress, from entering into an agreement or compact with a foreign Power; and therefore not within the jurisdiction exclusively, if to any extent, of the treaty-making department.

The doctrine which I claim has been settled, so far as this House is concerned, by its own action, and by the unvarying practice of the Government, has received the assent of very nearly all the great statesmen of the country. Jefferson, Clay, Calhoun, Randolph, Madison, Gallatin, and Monroe all held that opinion, and advocated it on all occasions. Calhoun, in his treatise on the Constitution and Government of the United States, speaking of the treaty-making power, says:

"But although the treaty-making power is exclusively vested, and without enumeration or specification, in the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless subject to several important limitations. It is, in the first place, strictly limited to questions inter alios; that is, to questions between us and foreign Powers which require negotiation to adjust them. All such clearly appertain to it. But to extend the power beyond these, be the pretext what it may, would be to extend it beyond its allotted sphere, and thus a palpable violation of the Constitution. It is, in the next place, limited by all the provisions of the Constitution which inhibit certain acts from being done by the Government or any of its Departments; of which description there are many. It is also limited by such provisions of the Constitution as direct certain acts to be done in a particular way, and which prohibit the contrary, of which a striking example is to be found in that which declares that 'no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations to be made by law.' This not only imposes an important restriction on the power, but gives to Congress, as the law-making power, and to the House of Representatives as a portion of Congress, the right to withhold appropriations; and thereby an important control over the treaty-making power whenever money is required to carry a treaty into effect; which is usually the case, especially those of much importance."

John Randolph said on this question:

"Where a treaty is made involving matters confided by the Constitution to Congress, the Representatives are as free as the President or the Senate were to consider whether the national interests requires or forbids their giving the forms and force of law to the articles over which they have this power."

And this was quoted and approved by Jefferson in 1795. In a letter to Colonel Monroe, in 1796, Mr. Jefferson used the following language:

"The British treaty has at length been laid before Congress. All America is on tiptoe to see what the House of Representatives will decide on it. We conceive the constitutional doctrine to be that, though the President and Senate have the general power of making treaties, yet when they include in a treaty matters confided by the Constitution to the three branches of the Legislature an act of legislation will be necessary to confirm these articles, and the House of Representatives, as one branch of the Legislature, are perfectly free to pass the act or to refuse it, judging for themselves whether it is for the good of their constituents to let the treaty go into effect or not."

Again, in volume nine, page 106, of Jefferson's works, he says:

"When money is to be paid, the House of Representatives should be consulted previously to concluding the treaty, or the treaty should be made conditional to the sanction of the House."

Now, sir, in view of this record of the practice of our Government, in view of the provisions of our Constitution, and of the expressed opinions of the greatest statesman of the Republic, it cannot be claimed by any foreign Government engaged in negotiations with us that the law of this country on this question is not settled and well understood; that a negotiation of this kind cannot be made and consummated so as to bind the Government without the consent of Congress, and that until such assent is given such negotiation is without force or effect, and that no act of the executive department not authorized by Congress can make it effective or clothe it with vitality. And I have no hesitation in saying that the unauthorized and unwarranted act of the President in taking possession of this territory was not binding on the Government, and should have no influence in the investigation of the case or its final decision; and to give such unauthorized acts any influence in the case would be setting a dangerous precedent for the future.

I come now to the question as to what action should be taken by the House in relation to this treaty. I, for one, cannot consent to do what the Committee on Foreign Affairs ask, to pass this bill making the appropriation without any accompanying declaration of the opinion of the House as to the regularity and the legality of the acts of the President in relation to the treaty, and as to the rights and prerogatives of the House in such cases. To do this would, in my opinion, as I have before stated, be a tacit admission of the power of the President to do the same acts in the future, and would be establishing a precedent fraught with danger.

I am willing, under the circumstances of this case, to vote for this appropriation, if, by the adoption of a proper preamble to this bill, or by some accompanying resolutions, the House will repudiate the claim of the President to exercise such powers, and assert its constitutional prerogatives and rights in connection with all subjects which, by the Constitution, are submitted to the control of Congress. But, sir, if not accompanied by some such declaration, I shall deem it my duty to oppose this bill. I care not how valuable this territory may be; for it is of far more importance that the constitutional liberties of the people should be preserved than that we should acquire wealth and empire.

Mr. Chairman, we can engage in a reckless career for wealth, power, national aggrandizement, and the unlimited extension of our territory; the temptation is great to do so; the field is inviting. Other republics which have gone before us have set us the example, and we may follow in their footsteps; but, sir, would it not be more wise to legislate with a view to the liberty, the security, and the happiness of the people and the perpetuity of our Government? And it should be remembered that one of the greatest securities for the liberties of the people is in the control given by the Constitution to the House of Representatives over the Treasury of the nation; and that when that security is taken away and the President has unlimited control over the public purse, subject only to the consent of the Senate, one of the strongest safeguards of the people against oppression is broken down.

It has always been a maxim in connection with liberty in this country and in England that all public money is from the pockets of the people, and that it should be expended by none but their representatives. I conjure the House not to abandon this doctrine now, or surrender up this dearest right of the people. The Constitution has carefully provided a system of checks and balances which are essential to constitutional liberty. The powers of the Government are distributed among the different departments of the Government in such manner that each one is a check upon the other. But, sir, if this unlimited and supreme power is conceded to the treaty-making department, then the Constitution is a mockery and a cheat, the President and the Senate constitute the Government, and the people have nothing to do but to submit to the despotism thus established.

I shall, Mr. Chairman, offer an amendment to the bill, which, if adopted, will remove my objections to it, and it will receive my support; but if that amendment or something substantially the same is not adopted, I shall feel it my duty to vote against the bill.

The debate was continued by Mr. BOYER and Mr. PRUYN. [Their remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. PRICE obtained the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. It is now getting late, and there are few members present. As this is a question of great importance I would suggest that the committee now rise, with the understanding that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] shall have the floor, after I shall occupy it to-morrow as was agreed upon to-day.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Iowa does not wish to go on, I would like an opportunity to say something.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope I may be allowed to submit some remarks to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The order of the House requires that at the close of the morning hour to-morrow, the floor shall be assigned to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN,] and the floor must next be awarded to some gentleman on the other side.

Mr. HIGBY. I do not know why there should be any objection to permitting the debate to go on to-night with the understanding that the gentleman from Iowa shall hold the floor at the adjournment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. If the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] goes on to-night, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] can take his place to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly; the gentleman from Iowa can take my place to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Wisconsin has finished his remarks, the Chair will feel obliged to give the floor to some gentleman on the opposite side of the question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. But if every one assents to the arrangement suggested, I do not see why it should not be carried out?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] yield his place to the gentleman from California, [Mr. JOHNSON?]

Mr. PRICE. If by unanimous consent it can be agreed that the gentleman from California shall take my place this evening, and that I shall follow the gentleman from Wisconsin to-morrow, I have no objection.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous consent of the committee is asked for the arrangement just stated? Is there any objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, on account of the deep interest felt by California in the speedy settlement of all questions of difficulty concerning the purchase by our Government of Alaska, I deem it my duty as a Representative to give my views to the House. The interest felt by California in regard to this matter does not proceed from uncertain or chance hope of profit, but comes from a knowledge of the great commercial advantages to accrue from that acquisition, a knowledge obtained by nearly twenty years of intercourse with the little settlements along the borders of that territory. This purchase extends up from the parallel of 54° 40' north latitude to the northern extremity of the continent, embracing many valuable islands, one of which, Kodiak, is large enough for a respectable sized State, and it extends west from the one hundred and forty-first to the one hundred and ninety-third degree west longitude. Within the limits of this purchase there is more of the earth's surface than there is in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Scotland, Ireland, England, and Wales combined. Yet some gentlemen honestly and conscientiously oppose paying the purchase money. It is estimated that the area of this territory is over five hundred and seventy thousand square miles, and that the length of mainland coast is more than four thousand statute miles. Imperfect as it may be, our Coast Survey shows that this whole extent of water front is "indented by capacious bays and commodious harbors without number, embracing the peninsula of Alaska, one of the most remarkable in the world, fifty miles in breadth and three hundred miles in length, piled with mountains, many volcanic, and some still smoking, penetrated by navigable rivers, one of which is among the largest of the world, studded with islands which stand like sentinels on the coast, and flanked by the narrow Aleutian range which, starting from Alaska, stretches far away to Japan, as if America were extending a friendly hand in trade to Asia." It is estimated that the coast line, including bays and islands, is not less than eleven thousand two hundred miles.

Now, as to the value of all this, for its fisheries, furs, timber, ice, agricultural productions, &c., we are furnished with abundant proof to establish the fact that no waters in the world can yield the toiling fisherman so rich a harvest as he may gather in the waters immediately under that northern coast. Oysters, clams, and crabs are found in abundance; also an odd species of the herring, and also the salmon, the herring, the halibut, the cod, and the whale, until all these fill and thicken the waters. From the lights received upon the subject it is not too much to suppose these the greatest fisheries in the world. The advantages to the country from the opening of these fisheries will be incalculable. It should be borne in mind that the cod fisheries of the Atlantic coast was for a long time one of the chief sources of the development and wealth of the northern States, and was the great school in which we trained our seamen and made efficient our merchant marine. It was always a paying business; it never failed to yield a profit. Yet this Government thought it quite necessary to aid it by subsidies, because it was a school for the training of the adventurous seaman who carried the American flag and American commerce over every sea to the remotest ends of the earth.

The northern Pacific fisheries are probably ten times as extensive as are those on the Atlantic, yet the Atlantic fisheries employ over one hundred thousand tons of shipping and ten thousand men, yielding nearly three millions annually. It is a well-known fact that the Atlantic fisheries are diminishing in yield, and that we must look to some new field in which to restore to us and keep up that great branch of maritime and commercial industry. Last year alone twenty cargoes, making one thousand one hundred and eighty-three tons of dried fish, were brought into San Francisco. Pay this money, give us a government for the country, and next year San Francisco will receive ten times the number of tons received last year. England, as a wise commercial nation, has always paid a great deal of attention to her fisheries, and in our fostering care of our Atlantic fisheries we have only imitated her example. Last year, as may be seen by the inspector's report, London received through Billingsgate one thousand six hundred and sixty-six tons of salmon, worth $1,069,015. Now, do not be encouraged to hope this House is to receive anything through that "gate." I expect to see the day, however, when Alaska salmon will compete in the London markets with the salmon taken from Welsh waters.

France pays millions a year in bounties to her hardy fishermen. She pays nearly one million yearly in fostering her fisheries in American waters. Canada pays a bounty of four dollars per ton to enable her fishermen to compete with ours, and to train up her young men for the sea, that she may build up and improve her merchant marine. We need no bounty for our Alaska fisheries. Clear away the difficulties, and in three years we can supply the markets of the world with fish. And in addition to this and other advantages, some of which I shall briefly notice, in five years from the organization of government in Alaska San Francisco will enter and clear more tonnage than New York does to-day. But we will by no means rival New York, for her increase will almost be in proportion to ours. The great value of the furs of Alaska, as well as its great abundance, is known to all the world, and needs but a passing notice. It is admitted by all that every animal wearing a fur coat may be found in that country, some of them in great abundance. With that country in our hands, and under a proper government, we may handle the fur trade with other countries as we choose. Is it not something to be masters of this great branch of commerce? In the partial and limited examinations made it has been ascertained that Alaska has deposits of coal, copper, and gold; also forests of the best ship-building timber trees. And if we believe the official reports we have from there, and I do, the climate of that country, particularly Kodiak and Sitka, is not worse, but far better than that portion of Canada lying north and east of Quebec. That being true, it is safe to say that all the hardier grain, such as winter wheat and barley, may be grown in that country, in addition to the numerous hardy vegetables which we know grow and flourish there. A country of such vast extent, with such a variety of valuable productions, should be considered of inestimable value to any government having the least hope of maritime greatness.

Sitka and Kodiak are at present the principal ports of the territory. Sitka is a little nearer to San Francisco by direct line, but not nearer, I suppose, by the track of vessels. It is also more difficult of access and has not so good a harbor; still the harbor is large enough to shelter and protect at anchor eight or ten of the largest vessels. Kodiak is five hundred and fifty miles from Sitka, but nearly in the same latitude, being nearly west of that place. It is possessed of a good harbor, easy of access, deep water, the best of anchorage, and a convenient wharf. Numerous cod-fish banks are found near by; it is also most convenient to the whale fisheries, and is the place from whence San Francisco gets its supply of ice, instead of Sitka, as generally supposed. Although further north, it has a much better climate than Sitka, cattle doing well upon the island without care or attention, grass being in great abundance. Salmon, halibut, and cod-fish are found in abundance around the island. Upon the whole, without going further into details, Kodiak should be the capital at present.

Unless we intend to have a rupture with Russia, and give up the purchase, we should act speedily in this matter and provide a government for that country. The great interests of our Pacific commerce require it. At present there are no custom-houses in the territory, the Treasury Department having an agent at Sitka alone. Vessels clearing at San Francisco for Kodiak are compelled to travel one thousand miles out of their way to report to that agent before going to the place of their destination. There is now nothing to prevent English enterprise, or any other, from sailing up the Strikien river and bartering whisky and fire-arms with the Indians for their valuable furs, which should be poured out through the regular channels of commerce to enrich our country. There is not a light-house on the coast to protect our already important shipping interests there; and without government there is no protection to those that are now settled in the country; besides, the want of government prevents thousands from going there to settle.

Gentlemen are alarmed when they come to consider the expense of an organized government in Alaska, but they should not be. No military force will be needed, none whatever. Two revenue cutters is all that would ever be needed to keep order in that country. Owing to the peculiar topographical features of the coast, two or three light-houses only would have to be erected. There should at least be two custom-houses, one at Kodiak and one at Sitka. The civil government may be a very cheap one until the country begins to show its importance. A Governor and an Indian agent, who shall be ex officio secretary of the Territory; a surveyor general, and a register and receiver; one judge, who shall sit with justices of the peace, and we have a complete system and at little cost. It is objected that the treaty-making power does not go to the extent of obliging us to make the necessary appropriation to carry out this treaty. I think it does. If the question of the purchase of territory was now up for the first time I should say that the Constitution did not justify it. But it is not a new question. It was decided the other way early in the history of our Government in the matter of the Louisiana purchase, and is not now an open question.

The President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, may make treaties of purchase, and in this purchase they have not exceeded their constitutional powers. Now, I understand it to be our sworn duty to make appropriations to carry on the Federal Government because that Government is the object of the Constitution which we are bound to carry out if we can. If this be correct, and I think it will not be denied, then if this purchase is justified by the Constitution it is our sworn duty to carry the provisions of the Constitution to that country for the protection of the people, who have a right to the protection of its provisions. How may this be done? In one way only; that is, by making needful rules and regulations (laws) for the government of that territory under the Constitution. And more, if the reasoning be correct we cannot escape the duty of making this appropriation. Like all other debts constitutionally contracted by the Government, its force on us is a part of the force of the Constitution itself.

I do not desire to argue the question as to whether we must make this appropriation; the national importance of this purchase is so manifestly great that we should first consider its advantages to the Republic, and we will never have to go further. By this purchase our sea-board on the Pacific is made greater than on the Atlantic, and is extended close up to the borders of Asia. The Pacific sea-board, although so extensive, has a much less number of harbors than the Atlantic, being mostly rock-bound, but in nowise dangerous to navigation, and may be protected easier than any similar extent of sea-coast in the world. Pay this money, give us a territorial government, and it will be the opening of a new field of enterprise to our merchant marine, in its vast fisheries and fur trade traffics, which will necessarily bind us more closely with our China and Japan trade, and tend to consolidate in the hands of our merchants and in our commerce the greater portion of the mercantile traffic of that section of Asia and its island dependencies. The great national advantages in giving to the United States the jurisdictional preponderance on an ocean destined to become the great maritime highway of the future, opening to our merchants a certain road to the attainment of the largest proportion of the world's traffic, and placing within our grasp the proud distinction of being the greatest commercial government of the globe, peacefully taking and wearing the palm so long held by England through toil, bloodshed, and the expenditure of countless millions of treasure, is such a victory of peace and statesmanship that we should not hesitate one moment. While I admit the incalculable advantages to accrue to the Pacific States from this purchase, I still insist that the benefits will not be local, but extend to the whole Union, creating an incentive, in solid profits, to the marine of the whole country, until darkness shall no longer dwell upon the face of the waters anywhere that an American vessel can float.

It is not a measure for the present alone, but has much to do with the future permanence of our republican Union, and, in a political sense, should be viewed with deepest interest. It removes a foreign flag from the shores of America, and confines to narrower limits one of the great Powers of the earth. It extends our territorial jurisdiction, and greatly lessens the probability of a consolidation of empire and an overthrow of our Republican institutions, a calamity greater than all other evils that might befall us as a people. As a Representative from California I may be pardoned for a particular notice of the advantages to accrue to that State by this acquisition. California is a young State, but is mature in all that constitutes the elements of a rising and prosperous Commonwealth. Minerva-like, she sprung out fully developed from the fertile brains of her own statesmen. As a commercial, agricultural, mechanical, and wealth-producing State, despite disasters from floods and fires, she has attained a greatness which makes the records of her prosperity appear almost fabulous. Experience has developed her channels of prosperity, and she stands today the most notable example in the world of the energy, enterprise, and industry of a people. Scarce nineteen years ago her hills and plains were settled by the best young bloods of our country, when she commenced an existence with all the elements to make her an excelsior State.

With her first life she was possessed of all the advantages of the improvements of the age, and did not have to grow into their use by overcoming the prejudices of the past. We are of the present time, and availing ourselves of the advantages of the day, and as each progressive benefit for the community is developed, we have incorporated it with our daily life, thus lending vitality ever to our young blood and venturesome spirits. Too much honor can never be done the young men of California. Among us are settled young men from every country in Europe. With the liberal spirit of the age and our own institutions we have adopted all that is good to the community from each. Such valuable traits, methods, and means of future benefit as was consonant with our institutions we have wove into the fabric of our social as well as business life, and have thus become more liberal and expansive in our views, more progressive in our exertions. We differ essentially in our manners and customs from other communities which are trammelled by old-fashioned routine and by old traditions, and worse, by old prejudices. We are daring and venturesome. Old fogies would call us daring, extravagant, and, perhaps, reckless, but our course is controlled by rules of progress and commerce which accord with the spirit of the age, and so we make our paths of industry broader, brighter, and more inviting than can be found elsewhere. The wants of the community and the natural impulse of enlarging the sphere of commercial interests—an interest which binds together the States of this Union—rationalizes our progress.

We need no better example to illustrate this than the recent change into our hands of the trade of China via California, which will eventually make San Francisco the center of the commercial world, and place in the lap of her queenly and capacious robes the wealth of Asia, however this may be to the disadvantage of England. This is one of the revolutions resulting from our progress; and does it not reflect equal credit on the commercial enterprise of the great marts of the Atlantic whose interests are so closely interwoven with our own as to be almost identical. Any benefit accruing to California is a benefit to them in a commercial point of view. We are raising up in our youths, as it were, a new nationality, educated on a scale unknown elsewhere in the Union. The blessings of a free education are not confined to the channels of English knowledge alone, but the French, Spanish, and German classics are taught in our public schools, as also the fine arts, the law, medicine, mechanics, metallurgy, music, and painting, while theology is not neglected. We intend that our posterity shall possess the same vigor, mentally, that a beneficent God has given them physically; for we are blessed with a climate beyond compare and a soil teeming with richness, bearing with astonishing prolificacy all the cereals and fruits of the most temperate as well as tropical climates. Our only anxiety is to afford employment to our greatly increasing population, who will dispute every avenue leading to advancement with our own sons. We cannot confine them to mercantile, mining, or mechanical life entirely; they cannot all become lawyers, doctors, divines, poets, or literary men. We need a new sphere of action for many. We need a mercantile marine of our own, to cover the Pacific with our own fleets, to advance in the art of ship-building, navigation, and commerce abroad by sea.

The waters washing the shores of Alaska are to be the future fields of these new sources of prosperity. The fisheries, the fur trade, the lumber trade, all of which that territory is wealthy in, must become sources for the use of our increasing wealth and the development of new industrial pursuits. We cannot halt in our progress; our taste of greatness is too palatable for us ever willingly to upset the banquet-tables; our motto is onward and upward. Progress cannot retrograde; it must advance, and it is our duty as legislators to lend our aid in its behalf. Give our people the right to avail themselves of these benefits by honorably discharging a debt honorably and fairly incurred, a debt the non-payment of which affects the national repute, and it will not be many months before the realization of what I portray will gratify and gladden the whole country.

We, having the national credit in keeping, should recollect that our capitalists, looking upon the purchase of Alaska as a commercial transaction, view the non-compliance of treaty stipulations as making investments in that territory or in its commerce dangerous; and it is certain that California enterprise cannot have its full flow and energy in that direction until that compliance is had and the treaty honorably fulfilled. The past has been full of experience, sad and otherwise, to our people, and through the trials of fire that we have been subjected to we should take lessons of wisdom in finance, commerce, and, in fact, in statesmanship. While we are glorifying our steam communication with Asia, it is well to reflect that the possession of Alaska is an adjunct to its success and prosperity.

The course of ocean navigation varies on the Pacific owing to the prevalence of the trade winds. Six months in the year it traverses to the south by or near the Sandwich Islands, and the other six months it is by the north, following the course of the Alaska peninsula and the Aleutian group of islands which stretch out, indicating a past connection with the islands of the China and Japan seas. Coal is essential to the use of our Pacific steamers; this is to be found in Alaska. Ship timber is another essential; Alaska abounds therein. So did Maine and so did Washington Territory; but the European Governments, with a keener eye to future need, have for years been supplying themselves from the latter, while we have exhausted the lands of the former to such an extent that the interests of our commercial marine demand at our hands as legislators the repeal of the duties imposed on the importation of lumber from the Canadas. We daily lament the decadence of our ship-building interests; let us cease our lamentations and breathe new life into this great interest by giving to our artisans and capitalists the opportunity of covering the Pacific and Atlantic oceans, Japan, China, and Yellow seas, with our ships, so that each Asiatic port may be alive with our seamen, filled with our ships, and canopied all over with the American flag, which, if we will it, may majestically wave all other flags from the sea, and beckon a commanding invitation to the wealth of the world to enter and tarry in our ports. These are considerations well worthy of reflection; I do not draw an imaginary future when I make these assertions.

Yet all depends in a great measure on the action of this House in upholding our national credit and honor.

The greatest enterprise of the age, or any age, the Pacific railroad, had to slumber for years from lack of faith in its practicability; who doubts its success and benefits now. It is erroneous to suppose that all those benefits are to accrue to the Pacific States; but while its benefits will be mutual with the whole country those States will be the last to reap the harvest. This may seem illogical, but I hold that the various branches of the Pacific railroad will benefit the whole Union primarily by building up the vast plateau of the Rocky mountains, as it is termed. The land of the red man, the great plains, will be peopled, and cities, towns, villages, and ultimately States will grow, and all this long before it will confer benefits on the Pacific States equal to those received by the western and Atlantic States, through whose ports and over whose lines of railroad must enter and be transported the population of the great basin of the continent, whose growth into civilization will be as rapid and astonishing as that of California.

The benefits of such gigantic enterprises are cooperative in their nature, and are scattered broadcast over the whole land. The late unfortunate civil war in our country has severed ties to localities; change of fortune, the heavy hand of misery, the disruption of family ties, all tend to add stimulus to a change of locality, to emigration to new scenes where life may be begun anew, and hope points to the far West as that land of promise. The Pacific railroad I look upon as the great highway open to such, and as such highway it will carry the people who are to add to our empire, and carry civilization into the desert. We do not for one moment think that every train over those broad, iron roads is to be freighted with men, woman, and children for California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington Territory. We expect but our share of the emigration, and are not so selfish as to desire its monopoly. It cannot be laid at our door, then, that all those great national works are but for the benefit of our sturdy young State, as many allege. Nor is the vast outlay they cost to be added to our account current with the Government, for it is well known that many look with regretful eyes on the favors bestowed on California, and call that State a "petted and spoiled child, extravagant in her demands and petulant when not gratified," a statement wholly devoid of truth, uttered, I believe, more as an admonition than as a stigma. We are not presumptuous enough to believe that we are much wiser or greater than the people of other States, and therefore we admit it may be well at times to apply the "break" when we are putting on "too much steam." In the acquisition of Alaska we look with an eye to its and to our national importance.

Give us Alaska as a Territory organized under a proper government as one of the Territories of the United States, and right soon we will make California so great that you will all boast when you go abroad that you live under the same Federal jurisdiction that we do. And because of our riches, resources, energy, high civilization, and general prosperity, you will all be proud to tell that you have brothers, cousins, or relatives in that State. And our Speaker, when old and worn out in the public service, will recount with pride and with glee what he saw and heard, his haps and mishaps, as he flitted two or three years ago across our golden sands. I appeal to honorable members, let us be just, let us be honorable, let us be great as this occasion is great, and do ourselves and our country lasting honor. The value of this purchase to our country can be better understood when we consider the unsurpassed richness of California in all that makes up the greatness of a State. Then, briefly as possible I shall try to show what California is to-day, leaving gentlemen to judge what it may be in the future. California is over seven hundred miles in length, having an average width of about two hundred and twenty-five miles. Within the limits of the State there are about seventy million acres of agricultural land, and about fifteen million acres of grazing lands.

California now produces about thirty million dollars per annum in gold and silver, and it is safe to suppose that this yield will not be materially diminished for fifty years to come. Her yield of grain will be this year about forty million bushels—twenty-three million bushels of wheat and seventeen million bushels of other grain. In ten years we will produce, perhaps, not less than three times this amount. This will give us one hundred and twenty million bushels—more than enough to feed twelve million people. Our crop of wool last year was over ten million pounds, and in ten years from this time it is safe to conclude it will be fifty millions. This will clothe fifteen million people. I do not know what number of gallons of wine we produce, but I do know that we produce the best grapes that are grown in the world, and that in a few years, when our young vineyards have matured, we can supply all the people in the United States with a pure article of as good wines as ever gladdened man's heart or made a soul merry. There is no country on earth where cattle do better than in California, and sheep and hogs multiply faster there than in any other country on the globe. We have fruits of all descriptions, unsurpassed in yield and in delicacy of flavor. Our State is overflowing with corn, wine, and oil, and we must have, we will have, ships to carry these good things abroad. And we must have the furs, fish, and timber from Alaska to increase, diversify, and vitalize our commerce.

We have at this time seven hundred and fifty-six vessels, with an aggregate of one hundred and forty-six thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight tons burden, belonging to the city of San Francisco; but this is not more than one third the tonnage demanded by our commerce. Because of our richness and greatness the Atlantic States have kindly sent the iron horse on his mission to bring away our products, to empty our granaries and our factories and our warehouses of their rich Oriental fabrics. The continued greatness of California does not depend upon this purchase, but I believe it will be worth more to her, in a commercial point of view, than all the gold in all her hills. Then let us vote this appropriation; for an increase in California's commerce is equally beneficial to all parts of the Union.

Give us this appropriation and then a territorial government for Alaska, and the good this will do us, considered with the benefits to accrue from the Pacific railroad and our commerce with China and Japan, will in ten years bring to San Francisco the chief merchants of the world. From every land we will receive orders for our grain, for our woolen goods, for our fish, and our furs. We will cover all the seas with our ships and control the commerce of the nations. Our hills and valleys will afford happy homes for millions who fail in other countries to meet that thrift and prosperity which always follows industry and frugality with us. The industrious of every land are invited to take wealth from our inexhaustible mines, and to make homes upon our fertile lands, where they may joyfully spend their lives with peace and plenty in the cool, refreshing shade of their own vine and fig tree.

With our great future so near at hand as to plainly be seen it is hardly possible that this Alaska purchase, adding so much to our commercial importance as it does, can be rejected; for, as I have already stated, the advancement of California in this particular is the advancement of the whole Union.

The other States of this Union, and the Federal Government which they ordained and established, shall have the history of their greatness written in letters of gold taken from California's mines. California's "corn, wine, and oil" shall soothe the wounds of the afflicted, make joyful the hearts of the oppressed, and drive away hunger from the poor and needy all over our land. Will you yield us this purchase for the benefit of our commerce?

Mr. MAYNARD obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. BANKS, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being House bill No. 1036, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, (at ten o'clock and ten minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. PAINE: The petition of Sarah Briggs, of Delavan, Wisconsin, for increase of pension.

By Mr. STOKES: Additional papers in the case of the claim of J. A. Brents, of Albany, Kentucky.

By Mr. TAYLOR: The petition of Anna W. Spencer, for a pension.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 1, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating an estimate from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of appropriation required to pay the damages sustained by settlers in Niobrara township, Nebraska, by reason of locating the Santee Sioux upon lands owned by them, in the year 1866; which, on motion of Mr. HARLAN, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARLAN presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that a pension be allowed to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and to the widows of those that have died; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Thomas J. Brooks and others, employés of commissaries of subsistence, asking to be included in the bill giving twenty per cent. additional compensation to clerks and others; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of members of the bar of the District of Columbia, praying an increase of the salary of the judge of the orphans' court of the District; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWE presented a petition of Lewis John, for himself and others, members of the Oneida tribe of Indians, praying that they may be granted bounty for services rendered during the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of Andrew J. Berrian, praying indemnity for damages occasioned to his property in Tennessee during the rebellion by rebel soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present the petition and protest of the settlers upon the Cherokee neutral lands in Cherokee county, Kansas, setting forth that the settlers of the Cherokee neutral lands settled there under the conviction that as soon as the Indian titles were extinguished they would have a right to the benefit of the preemption and homestead laws, and that they are now in danger of losing their homes and having them transferred to railroad corporations; that they believe they are entitled, as soon as the Indian titles are extinguished, to the benefit of the preemption and homestead laws, and that in the name of twenty-five thousand men, women, and children now living on these neutral lands they protest against the selling of any of these lands to others than actual settlers. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YATES presented the petition of Isaac Rutishausen, praying compensation for services rendered as assistant assessor of the eleventh division of the first district of Illinois, the same having been withheld on account of his failure to take the oath of office; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the protest of numerous wholesale liquor dealers of the city of New York, protesting against the sections applicable to them in the tax bill now undergoing examination by the Committee on Finance. The protest is long and particular, a very instructive statement, I think, and it contains numerous objections which the memorialists deem conclusive. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of Alexander H. Bullock, Governor of Massachusetts, and a large number of other distinguished citizens of Massachusetts, protesting against any sanction by Congress of a recent act by the Legislature of California giving rights to certain persons in the Yosemite valley, asking that it may be kept sacred to the public in all times. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER presented a remonstrance of H. Williams and forty-three others, citizens of Neosho Falls, Kansas, against the pending treaty with the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians, with a prayer for the protection of the settlers and the school interests of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a remonstrance of J. J. W. Fox and others, citizens of Osage county, Kansas, against the pending Osage treaty, together with the objections of the State superintendent of public instruction against said treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. THAYER. I also present the protest of White Hair, principal chief, and nine other chiefs and head men of the Osage nation, against the ratification of the pending Osage treaty, setting forth the threats and inducements held out by the commissioners to secure their signatures to said treaty, and a declaration that the tribe does not want it confirmed. Also, that the rest of the chiefs of the nation are absent on a buffalo hunt, otherwise they would have signed with them. I have been requested to ask that this remonstrance be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The remonstrance will be read if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object. I want to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the paper being objected to, it cannot be read unless by a vote of the Senate. The question is, Shall the paper be read?

The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative; and the Chief Clerk proceeded to read the remonstrance.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the reading should be suspended. It seems to relate to executive business, and the paper ought to be presented in executive session.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to lay it on the table, and then it can be read in executive session, where it belongs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Our rules say that when a paper is presented and its reading is asked, and the reading is objected to, it cannot be read unless by a vote of the Senate; and when the Senate have voted that it shall be read, I suppose it must be read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to the reading of the paper, but I supposed it related to executive business, and ought to be presented in executive session.

Mr. THAYER. It is a remonstrance against the ratification of the Osage treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps it belongs in executive session. That may be an objection. Perhaps it is out of order to offer it in open session, as it relates to a treaty.

Mr. POMEROY. There is no objection to its being read except that it belongs to executive business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it take the same course as the others, and be referred to the committee.

Mr. THAYER. I do not yield to the force of the suggestion that this paper should be presented in executive session. A petition or remonstrance is a public matter, and I think may properly be read. I do not, however, insist upon the reading; but the request was made to me that I should ask for the reading of the paper. I will not ask for its further reading, but simply move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom were referred two resolutions, one to print ten thousand copies of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and another from the Committee on Public Lands, for printing thirty thousand copies of the same in various languages, have instructed me to report a resolution as a substitute for them. I should like to have the substitute read, and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will it lead to debate?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will take but a minute or two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That five thousand copies be printed for the use of the Senate, and two thousand copies for distribution by the General Land Office, of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1867, without the sketches or illustrations, and without the maps, except the connected map of the United States.

Resolved, further, That an abridgment of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1867, containing such portions of it as may best encourage immigration, shall be prepared by him without sketches or illustrations, and without maps, excepting the connected map of the United States; and that two thousand copies be printed for the use of the General Land Office, and also that two thousand copies in English, three thousand copies in German, and one thousand copies in Swedish, be printed for distribution in Europe, under the direction of the Department of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to make a motion in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better go over.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands of this body, and I desire to submit a very few words in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont object to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir. I want it to go over until to-morrow and be printed. I have no objection to my friend from California making his suggestion.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no objection, I presume, to my making the motion and to disposing of it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The trouble is that it will lead to debate.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all; there will be no debate whatever.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have a word to say; but not to debate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont object to its present consideration?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. I yield the floor to the chairman of the Committee on Printing first.

Mr. ANTHONY. I prefer to hear what the Senator has to say about it.

Mr. CONNESS. That will be on my motion to refer.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, Mr. President, this is a resolution from the Committee on Public Lands which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and the Committee on Printing reported a substitute for it, and now it is proposed to refer it back to the Committee on Public Lands. I simply wish the Senate to understand it.

Mr. CONNESS. The condition of the case is this: there is a proposition to print a given number of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office with certain maps accompanying that report. Under the standing rules of the Senate the proposition to print an extra number had necessarily to be referred to the Committee on Public Printing. That committee now report in favor of a very restricted publication, in my opinion, not one consistent with the highest public interests. I do not mean in saying that to make any condemnation of the committee at this time. But it is a question necessarily involving high considerations, and I desire, and I do not think the honorable chairman of the Committee on Printing should object to that, that the Committee on Public Lands shall have the consideration of the question. They can probably report to-morrow or the day after, and then we can act upon the report. Therefore, I submit now a motion to refer the matter to the Committee on Public Lands, that they may consider this report.

Mr. STEWART. I should like that suggestion to be carried out. I have some amendments on my table, and I desire to have those amendments considered by the Committee on Public Lands. The resolution was formerly considered by that committee, and I should like to have them consider the amendments. I hope it will be referred to that committee, and they can report it back at an early hour, perhaps to-morrow morning, after consultation.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to any disposition the Senate chooses to make of this matter. This is a resolution for printing extra copies of a document which is altogether the most expensive document presented to the Senate at this session. The printing of it, according to the resolution of the Committee on Public Lands, would cost from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. The Committee on Printing have reported, as the Senator from California justly says, a very restricted resolution, cutting it down, I suppose, at least nine tenths. Now, the proposition of the Senator from California is to refer this economical resolution to the same committee that reported the more expensive one. I have no objection; but I do not want, when it comes up, that the question shall be taken out of the hands of the Committee on Printing and given over to the Committee on Public Lands. I do not want anything done when the Committee on Public Lands are not aware of it.

Mr. CONNESS. That is not my object. My object is to save the time of the Senate. There are a great many facts to be stated which may be considered and collated in the Committee on Public Lands, and we may save much time by that course.

Mr. ANTHONY. If this resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, that committee will of course report in favor of printing some additional copies, and by a rule of the Senate, and by a law of Congress which the Senate cannot suspend, although it very often assumes to do so, that report must go back to the Committee on Printing. When the Committee on Public Lands make their report it must by law go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STEWART. Then I will simply ask that that matter lie over until I consult the members of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, I do not object to the reference; I only wish the Senate to understand what it means.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say to the Senator that the object is not to get an additional number recommended by the Committee on Public Lands, and that committee will probably not take that course, but they will offer, as they would to day, the amendments that they will propose. They desire to have the subject considered; that is all.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well; let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, to refer this report to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 139, excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us go through the morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The reason why I ask to have this resolution taken up now is that it is a measure of such a nature that I feel quite sure it will require at least ten days—not to make any offensive or unparliamentary remark—at least ten days to pass it, after we shall have once considered it, and therefore it ought to be acted upon one way or the other now. That is all I wish to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent to consider the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to appeal to the Senator to allow me to call up a bill of some interest, which I have charge of, from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. I object to taking up the measure indicated by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion being objected to cannot be entertained at the present time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 486.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope we shall go through the morning business first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it cannot now be taken up.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move to take up House bill No. 1129, which is a short bill, and will take but little time. It is for the relief of the widow of Colonel Mulligan. I hope nobody will object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel obliged to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion being objected to cannot now be entertained.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to suspend all prior orders, and take up the bill to which I referred, Senate bill No. 486.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under our new rules a motion to take up a bill is not in order, except by unanimous consent, during the presentation of morning business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am glad of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of William B. Todd, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 202) to create the office of surveyor general in the Territory of Utah, and establish a land office in said Territory, and extend the homestead and preemption laws over the same, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1129.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be done, except by unanimous consent, until the morning business is through with.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees the presentation of resolutions will be in order.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. CONNESS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to direct the heads of the several Departments of the Government to promulgate the law limiting the hours of labor, recently enacted, with such regulations as will lead to an immediate compliance with the law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 139, the same that I mentioned before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are not resolutions through with?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I do not know. If there be no further reports of committees the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1129.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That requires unanimous consent as much as mine did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There seems to be no further morning business.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to submit a motion. I move that Friday next, after one o'clock, be set apart for the consideration of business pertaining to the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 780, for the relief of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones. I will then yield to any morning business for a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is not through with.

Mr. THAYER. I ask the Chair to put the motion, and then, if it prevails, I will yield for the morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Half a dozen Senators on the floor have submitted similar motions. We must go through with the morning business.

Mr. DAVIS. There is a report here from the War Office in response to a resolution of the Senate passed some time since. I move that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1129.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I do not hear of any more. If there is any more it must be attended to, as the morning hour has not expired. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of James A. Mulligan, deceased.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senate will not proceed to the consideration of that bill at this time. I have no objection to the bill. I believe I am in favor of it from the statement that has been made to me; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the joint resolution which I have moved to take up, and if the Senate shall choose not to take it up my duty will have been performed, and I shall leave it then; but that is a resolution which is to regulate the counting of the electoral votes from the States lately in rebellion, and to provide that the loyal governments set up by Congress shall be the ones that shall be recognized in that count, not the rebel ones that the President of the United States claims to be the true governments. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not proceed with this private bill, but will take up the joint resolution I have named, which, if it is to be acted upon at all, must be acted upon now, obviously. That is all I have to say.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The bill which I have moved to take up will occupy but a very few minutes, and then the Senator from Vermont can proceed with the consideration of the resolution that he has named. There is nothing so pressing about it that we cannot take a few minutes to pass this bill.

Mr. POMEROY. There are a great many private bills that ought to be considered, and we ought to have a day set apart for their consideration. The bill referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, and also the one that the Senator from New Jersey has in charge, are very important, and I should be glad to vote for them both as private bills; but there are several public bills that ought to be considered, and if we cannot proceed with them after one o'clock we ought to proceed with them in the morning hour. I have one in my hand now, and there are several others. I think we should not allow the morning hour to be spent on a private bill at this time, but should have a day set apart when we can consider them all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Why, Mr. President, the morning hour belongs to private business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from New Jersey.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes four, noes not counted.

EVENING SESSION FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being given up, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution I have named, a joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will yield to me long enough to enable me to submit a motion with a view of accomplishing a purpose which the Senator from New Jersey and myself and others have in view? I desire to make the suggestion to see if it will meet the approbation of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the motion?

Mr. THAYER. I will state it: that we have an evening session this evening to consider the bill which I have named, for the relief of Mrs. Jones, and also the bill in favor of Mrs. Mulligan, and other private bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this joint resolution can be laid aside informally for that purpose, I have no objection.

Mr. THAYER. I move, then, that the Senate take a recess to-day until half past seven o'clock this evening, in order to consider the bills which I have named and other private bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator to fix the time of taking a recess; that the Senate at five o'clock take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say half past four.

Mr. FESSENDEN. From five o'clock will give us two hours and a half, which I think will be ample.

Mr. THAYER. Very well; I will put my motion in this form: that the Senate take a recess at five o'clock until half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of considering in the evening the bills that I have named and other private bills.

Mr. RAMSEY. Will not the Senator say half past four o'clock? That is a better hour.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; let it stand as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate take a recess at five o'clock until half past seven o'clock this evening for the purpose of considering private bills.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 263) to extend the jurisdiction of probate courts and of justices of the peace in the Territories of Idaho and Montana;

A bill (H. R. No. 348) to provide for holding terms of the United States district court for the western district of Missouri at St. Joseph and the city of Kansas in said States;

A bill (H. R. No. 446) to amend an act entitled "An act to create the eastern judicial district of the State of New York," approved February 25, 1865; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF LATE REBEL STATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized. It provides that the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, respectively, shall not be entitled to representation in the Electoral College for the choice of President or Vice President of the United States, and no electoral votes shall be recognized or counted from any of such States, unless at the time prescribed by law for the choice of electors the people of such States, pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf shall have since the 4th day of March, 1867, adopted a constitution of State government under which a State government shall have been organized and shall be in operation, and such State shall have also become entitled to representation in Congress pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the joint resolution with an amendment, to insert after the word "operation," in line fourteen, the following words:

And unless such election of electors shall have been held under the authority of such constitution and government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I regard the joint resolution under consideration as one of very great importance. I think that some legislation on this subject is necessary; but as I did not, in the Committee on the Judiciary, agree to the joint resolution in the shape it is reported, I think it proper that I should state to the Senate the reason why I did not.

It seems to me eminently fit and proper that some bill should be passed in regard to those States which shall not have been restored to their practical relations to the Union before the adjournment of Congress; but it is a very delicate subject to deal with. In my judgment, no more delicate questions than those involved in this very resolution, taken up in the morning hour, will come before Congress at the present session.

If it should so happen that the result of the presidential election shall depend upon the counting or not counting of votes from the late rebel States, and such a count should be made as to declare the election of a person favorable to the political views of those who make the count, the opposite party will be very likely to charge its opponents with having made a partisan decision. In my judgment, no discretion should be left to the President of the Senate, or to the Senate and House of Representatives in counting the presidential vote; and if a discretion is left to determine from what States votes may be counted and from what States not, this country may again be involved in a civil war on the question of inaugurating a President. It is upon such questions that people go to war. Nearly all the revolutions in the South American States grow out of the election of their presidents.

While I am in favor of a bill which shall state distinctly from what States votes shall not be counted, if there are any such States—such a bill or joint resolution as we passed four years ago, and applicable to the States of Texas, Mississippi, and Virginia, assuming now that neither of those States will have perfected their State organizations in time to be recognized by Congress—I am utterly opposed to any bill which shall leave to the discretion of Congress, when it counts the electoral votes in February next, to count votes from Arkansas or Florida or not as it shall think proper; and yet we have a joint resolution that is proposing that very thing. In my judgment, the State of Arkansas is as much a State of the American Union, with all the rights and privileges of a State, as is the State of New York or the State of Illinois, and it has the same right to vote for President as any other State of this Union. I want no joint resolution or bill of Congress passed which shall put it in the power of the canvassers of the electoral votes to receive a vote from Arkansas or not as they shall please. This resolution, it will be seen, provides:

That the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, respectively, shall not be entitled to representation in the Electoral College for the choice of President or Vice President of the United States, and no electoral votes shall be received or counted from any of such States, unless, &c.

Why pass a joint resolution that no electoral votes shall be counted from the States of Arkansas and Florida any more than in regard to New Jersey and Illinois, or Vermont and Massachusetts? It is saying, in my judgment, to the people of those States, "Your votes for President may or may not be counted in the next presidential election." It is saying to the rebel element in those States that Congress has some doubt about the stability of the governments which have been inaugurated, and if they can succeed in overturning them, or if they can get up a revolution, no electoral votes shall be counted from those States. I want to regard the action of Congress in recognizing the State governments inaugurated in Arkansas and Florida as a finality, as conclusive and ended, and I do not wish to say to those people that we have any apprehensions that any other governments are to be recognized there. Why, sir, it would be but civil war if any party in Arkansas to-day should undertake to maintain a State government in opposition to that which Congress has recognized as the legitimate government of that State by admitting its Senators and Representatives to seats here. It would be but revolution. The Supreme Court has decided, all the departments of the Government have decided, that Congress, when it admits Senators and Representatives under a State organization, thereby decides what the proper State organization of a State is. That was decided in the Rhode Island case. There was an attempt to set up two State governments in Rhode Island, and the Supreme Court decided in that case that when the Congress of the United States had admitted Senators and Representatives from one of those State organizations that was conclusive and binding upon all the departments of the Government. Now, we have admitted Senators and Representatives from a portion of these rebel States. We have, therefore, settled it finally and forever that the State organization under which those Senators and Representatives came here is the legitimate organization for the State, and I do not wish to pass a law declaring that the electoral vote from those States shall not be counted unless—what?

"Unless at the time prescribed by law for the choice of electors the people of such States, pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf, shall have, since the 4th day of March, 1867, adopted a constitution of State government under which a State government shall have been organized."

Well, sir, have we not decided that already as to Arkansas and Florida? Is it to be left an open question, to be decided again in February next when the vote is counted, whether they have adopted constitutions and State governments? Did we not decide a few days ago that the State of Arkansas has adopted a constitution and State government in accordance with the reconstruction acts, and have we not admitted Senators and Representatives from that State? If we have so decided, why is it to be decided over again, unless it is intended to vest in the President of the Senate or the two Houses of Congress at that time, a revisory power to count or not the electoral vote from that State? I submit that that is a settled matter; that the State of Arkansas has already adopted a constitution of State government since the 4th of March, 1867, under which a State government has been organized and is in operation. But, says this joint resolution further:

"And unless such election of electors shall have been held under the authority of such constitution and government, and such State shall have also become entitled to representation in Congress pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf."

Now, sir, these facts all exist and have been settled except one. A constitution has been framed in Arkansas; a government has been organized in Arkansas in conformity to the reconstruction acts, and the State of Arkansas has become entitled to representation in Congress pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf. Why do you want to pass upon that again? Is not that all settled? But then there is another clause:

"And unless such election of electors shall have been held under the authority of such constitution and government."

I hardly know the meaning of this clause, for it will be observed that the constitution of a State has nothing to do with the mode of electing the President. A President of the United States is to be elected by electors chosen in the several States in the manner provided by the Legislature, not by the constitution of the State. The Legislature of each State in this Union is created, it is true, under and by authority of the constitution of the State; but when created it is vested with authority to appoint electors of President and Vice President of the United States, not by virtue of the constitution of the State, but by virtue of the Constitution of the United States. The body, the Legislature, being created, the Constitution of the United States devolves this power upon it. The language of the Constitution is:

"That each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress."

And again:

"The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; the President of the Senate shall in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed."

Now, what has the Congress of the United States or the President of the Senate to do in canvassing this vote? Simply to open these sealed packages or lists containing the votes of the electors who are appointed in the mode prescribed by the Legislature in each State, and the votes are then counted in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the person having the largest number of votes, if a majority of the whole, is declared to be elected President of the United States. This is all that the President of the Senate is authorized to do, and all that the Congress of the United States is authorized to do. Each State, through its Legislature, determines the mode of appointing electors of President, and it is competent for any Legislature in any of the States of the Union to appoint the electors without submitting the question to a vote of the people at all. Formerly several of the States appointed their electors in that way; and the State of South Carolina, until a very recent period, down, I think, to the breaking out of the rebellion, always appointed her electors for President and Vice President by the Legislature. It would be competent for any State to do that, and all that is to be done here is to canvass the votes of these electors; that is, to open the packages containing the list of votes given by the electors and count them.

Now, we have a measure providing that no votes shall be counted from certain States. I ask why? I ask the Senator from Vermont why is it necessary to pass an act of Congress declaring that a vote shall be counted or shall not be counted from the State of Arkansas? Is not the State of Arkansas as much a State of this Union as the State of Vermont; and if such a measure as this is to pass, why not include the State of Vermont and the State of Illinois? I am sure the Senator from Vermont regards, as I do, the action of Congress in recognizing the existing State government in Arkansas as the legitimate State government of that State; and I am sure that he would be as ready as I would to exert the whole power of this nation, if it became necessary, to put down any organization hostile to that State government in Arkansas. The State government which has been recognized in that State, and in the State of Florida, is to be maintained and must be maintained at all hazards and at every cost, or else you cannot maintain this Government; and I want no "ifs" and no "unless" about it. I would make no provision for counting the electoral vote of the State of Arkansas different from that which we make in regard to any other State; and that is the objection which I have to this measure. It looks to me like a concession or an admission on our part that there might be some other government established in Arkansas; some other government inaugurated there hostile to the one which has been recognized by the proper authority under the Constitution of the United States.

I am unwilling to make such a concession; I am unwilling to give color even to such a suggestion. I think it is competent and proper to pass a resolution that no vote shall be counted from the State of Texas or the State of Mississippi or the State of Virginia, and why? Because there is no State organization existing in either of these States through which it is competent for it to vote for President. There is no Legislature existing in either of these States, and can be no Legislature existing in either of them which has authority to provide for the appointment of electors of President and Vice President until Congress shall so determine. Congress has said that the existing organizations in those States are provisional only; that they are without legal authority; that they are acting in subordination to the military power; and until some other State government is inaugurated which is recognized by Congress as having the power and authority of a State government neither of those States can, as a matter of course, vote for President and Vice President; and, therefore, I should be in favor of this joint resolution if it provided that no electoral vote should be counted from either of those States which Congress had not recognized; but as to the States which Congress has recognized, it seems to me invidious to make such a provision; and it looks to me, though I do not suppose the Senator from Vermont intends that, as if it might be construed as vesting some sort of discretion in the Congress of the United States to count or not to count the electoral votes from these States; and I do not want it to have any other discretion in regard to Arkansas than it would have in regard to Vermont. I wish to treat these States all alike; and I think we shall encourage opposition to our reorganization measures if we pass a joint resolution of this character. I move to amend it by striking out in line four of the joint resolution the words "Florida" and "Arkansas."

Mr. DAVIS. I am gratified, Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the morning hour has expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Maine to let that unfinished business lie over until we can dispose of this joint resolution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it would not lead to debate, and we were simply to take the vote, I should not interpose. But the Senator from Vermont knows that it is quite necessary that the bill under consideration should be concluded, and go to the House of Representatives, as there are many amendments that will lead to a conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to discharge my whole duty, as my friend from Illinois has occupied all the time so far, and the Senator from Kentucky is to aid him, I move that the appropriation bill for the time being be laid aside in order that we may proceed with the consideration of this joint resolution, for the reason, as I have stated, that it is a measure sure to be vetoed; there is no need of disguising it. The President cannot be logical unless he does veto it, and I do not suppose he will veto the appropriation bill. I do not think I shall do my duty unless I make this motion in order that the Senate may determine whether they will dispose of this measure or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the unfinished business be postponed for the purpose of continuing the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 159.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It seems to me it cannot be good economy of time for the Senate to postpone one of the regular appropriation bills now almost finished to take up a matter in regard to which debate is likely to be so extensive and general as has already been indicated this morning in regard to the measure of the Senator from Vermont. It is for the Senate to say whether they are willing to postpone the appropriation bills involving the appropriation of millions of money to a period when they cannot be thoroughly considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend knows that I have no disposition to antagonize this against that; but this is a measure that ought to be considered, and it may as well be considered now as at any other time; because it will take some time to consider it whenever we do it, and it ought to be passed soon so that the other branches of the Government may have an opportunity to consider it. I have said before that we know it will take ten days longer to dispose of this bill after it shall go through this body than it will any of the other bills that are named; and it ought, therefore, to be acted upon at once. If it should not be passed, as my friend from Illinois and my friend from Kentucky seem to have determined, undoubtedly then we shall have disposed of it, and it will not take any more time now than it will hereafter. But I do not wish to occupy time on this question. I merely wish to discharge my duty.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should vote to lay aside the appropriation bill and to continue the consideration of the joint resolution of the Senator from Vermont but for this reason: this measure has not been much considered by the Senate; I think that it is an important measure, one requiring the exercise of a good deal of discretion and judgment, and that it will be profitable for it to lie over until to-morrow. I shall, therefore, vote to proceed with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to postpone the unfinished business for the purpose of continuing the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 139.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Edmunds, Harlan, McCreery, McDonald, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Wade, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cole, Conkling, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howe, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Trumbull, Vickers, Willey, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Vermont, Nye, Rice, Saulsbury Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wilson—18.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 263) to extend the jurisdiction of probate courts and of justices of the peace in the Territories of Idaho and Montana;

A bill (H. R. No. 348) to provide for holding terms of the United States district court for the western district of Missouri at St. Joseph and the city of Kansas, in said State; and

A bill (H. R. No. 446) to amend an act entitled "An act to create the eastern judicial district of the State of New York," approved February 25, 1865.

The bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yesterday the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment, which was objected to as not in order. The question before the Senate is whether that amendment is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the request of a number of Senators I have concluded to withdraw the amendment with the understanding that the funding bill shall be taken up as a separate measure immediately after the disposition of this bill; and I now give notice that after this bill is disposed of I shall move to take up the funding bill with a view to offer the amendment which I proposed to this bill as a substitute for that bill, by direction of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That amendment being withdrawn, I move to amend the bill by inserting after line forty-six:

To meet expenses incurred in the prosecution and collection of claims due the United States, $15,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On what authority is that moved?

Mr. HENDRICKS. On the recommendation of the head of the Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I send the letter to the desk to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 24, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit the draft of a clause which it is very desirable to have incorporated in the general appropriation bill for the Executive Departments for the ensuing fiscal year, appropriating $15,000 to cover expenses of collecting claims due the United States.

There are outstanding many balances due from former disbursing officers, and debts upon failure of conditions in bonds of various sorts, which can be recovered only by expenditures of greater or less amount in costs and compensation of agents necessarily employed. The Department has hitherto experienced considerable embarrassment in regard to this subject, and has been compelled, from time to time, to draw from appropriations which, though in some sense applicable to this object, could be but illy spared from other objects still more properly chargeable to them.

The customs fund has been particularly burdened in this way, and it is indispensable to relieve it as far as possible for the future.

On other accounts, too, a specific and limited appropriation is to be desired for this object, which must continue to be a source of expense for some time to come if the effort now being made to close up the old outstanding balances which have too long cumbered the books of the Treasury is to be sustained.

The Solicitor of the Treasury has expressed his view of the matter in a letter of which a copy is inclosed to you herewith.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. L. M. MORRILL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I offer from the Committee on Printing this amendment, to come in after line sixty-nine, on page 4:

For payment for the Congressional Globe and Appendix, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, $20,000, to be taken from the appropriation heretofore made and unexpended for the purchase of one complete set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each Senator and Representative who has not already received them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is that for a deficiency in the publication of two extra sessions?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. ROSS. In explanation of the amendment I send to the desk a letter which I desire to have read.

The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 12, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In consequence of no appropriations whatever being made to meet the accounts of this office for reporting and printing the debates of the Senate for the additional session (sittings of March, July, and November, 1867), and for the copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for Senators for the same session, a deficiency has been created—a deficiency which may, however, be in large part met and provided for without additional appropriation, and in this way, namely: by authorizing a transfer of a portion of an unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made to pay for complete sets of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for new Senators. [Not more than fifty per cent. of the appropriations made for that specific purpose have ever been required.]

The unexpended balance referred to amounts to $27,233 84; of which sum $20,400 may be transferred to meet the deficiency existing in the sum requisite to pay for the Congressional Globe and Appendix for Senators for the current session, which work has been completed to the extent of more than three thousand pages limit, and delivered to Mr. Deffries, the Congressional Printer, and for which we hold his receipts.

We would suggest that, providing such a transfer as we have indicated be made, a very suitable point in the bill now pending (H. R. No. 605) would be immediately after line sixty-two—as lines sixty one and sixty-two contain a proposition to pay for that particular branch of the work for the ensuing sessions.

The deficiency which exists in the appropriations for reporting and printing in the Daily Globe we shall take measures to have provided for in the deficiency bill now framing by the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives.

Trusting that our suggestion may be favorably considered by yourself and your honorable committee, we remain, very respectfully,

F. & J. RIVES & GEORGE A. BAILEY.

Reporters and Printers of the Debates of Congress.

Hon. L. M. MORRILL, Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 16, after line three hundred and seventy-two:

For surveying the boundary line between the State of Nebraska and Territory of Colorado, and that portion of the western boundary of the State of Nebraska embraced between the forty-first and forty-third degrees of latitude, estimated at three hundred and twenty miles, at not exceeding fifteen dollars per mile, $1,800.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to add the words "to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office." I have the concurrence of the mover of the amendment in this modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. THAYER. I will state that this amendment has the sanction of the Committee on Territories. There is a disputed boundary, and it is not known whether a certain place belongs to the State of Nebraska or to the Territory of Colorado or Dakota.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to know something about this proposition. I see no estimate for it in the estimates submitted to the Department. The Senator says the amendment comes from the Committee on Territories. There ought to be an estimate from the Department. I find an estimate among the regular estimates for surveying the eastern boundary of Colorado, and also for surveying the eastern boundary of Nevada.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands have recommended that in their amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But I see no estimate for this particular item.

Mr. THAYER. It emanates from the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and I was informed that it was in the estimates, and I had no doubt that it was. It was submitted to the Committee on Territories and approved by them; and I offer it with their sanction. As I said, there is a disputed boundary and there is a long tract of country in regard to which it is not known whether it belongs to Colorado, Nebraska, or Dakota. The people of the town of Julesburg have been in doubt for two years past whether they were in the State of Nebraska or the Territory of Colorado or Dakota, and a great deal of confusion has arisen from this.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All these propositions ought to emanate, I submit, from the Department, and if the Senator knows that it is recommended by the Department I shall make no strenuous objection.

Mr. THAYER. Yes, sir; I stated that before.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to amend the bill on the seventeenth page, line three hundred and eighty-eight, by increasing the appropriation for surveys in Oregon from $28,000 to $40,000. Forty thousand dollars was the estimate, but the House of Representatives allowed only $25,000 for surveying in the State of Oregon. The matter was before the Committee on Public Lands, and representations from that State were made of such a pressing character that the Committee on Public Lands thought we ought to come up fully to what was estimated for. We found, in reference to most of the new States, that the immigration and the demands for settlement upon the public lands require surveys. The increased impetus that has been given to settlements upon the public lands require that they should be surveyed. Anybody who has had any experience knows the inconvenience of settlers going in advance of surveys. They have conflicting claims, conflicting boundaries, conflicting titles. It retards the growth and prosperity of a State not to have it surveyed. The Senators from Oregon, and all the persons I have seen from the Pacific coast, think we should come up fully to the recommendation of the Land Office. This amendment is reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and was printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations a few days ago.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say to the Senator that the appropriation in the bill is in conformity with the estimates of the Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a letter from the Commissioner recommending this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let that be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to subjoin a statement to what has already been said by the Senator from Kansas, as to the necessity of this addition to the appropriation. Heretofore the appropriations for the State of Oregon have been rather limited in view of the extent of country to be surveyed; and there is a large proportion of the habitable part of that State now occupied by people that has not been surveyed, and the want of the necessary surveys is an obstruction to the settlement of the State. I can name several valleys of considerable extent there, valleys of fertile land upon which persons have settled, and upon which others are desirous to settle, that have not been surveyed, such as the valley of John Days' river, the Upper Des Chutes valley, the Malherouse valley, the Jordan Creek valley, Wild-horse Creek valley, Goose Lake valley, Lost-river valley, and other valleys of that description have not been surveyed. There is a necessity that they should be surveyed without any considerable delay, so as to enable the people upon the lands there to enter them and obtain a title for their property. I need not say to anybody who has any experience in any of these new States that it tends greatly to retard their improvement to limit the amount of surveys, and there is no real economy in such a course, and it rather has the contrary effect.

Since the estimate was made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office he has written a letter which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 7, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 4th instant upon the subject of an increase in the estimate of appropriation submitted to Congress by this office for surveying the public lands in Oregon for the next fiscal year.

In reply, I have to say, that at the time the estimates were made this office had in view the exigencies of the surveying service and counteracting influences exerted by the then disturbed condition of the country on account of Indian hostilities.

The estimate now before Congress for the survey of the public lands in Oregon is $5,000 in excess of the appropriation made for the current fiscal year. Had it not been for the reported dangers in Oregon to surveying parties in places remote from the immediate vicinity of military establishments in Klamath Lake and Surprise valley, much larger estimates would have been presented for the extension of the lines of public surveys, demanded by the provisions of an act granting lands to the State of Oregon for the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of Oregon.

In the presence of the foregoing impediments to the progress of the public surveys and a due regard to the husbanding national resources, the estimate of the surveyor general of Oregon, amounting to $55,450, was restricted to the sum of $25,000.

Representations having since been made to this office of more pacific attitude of Oregon Indians in the region of country demanding early surveys on a larger scale than estimated, I would be willing to recommend to Congress $40,000 appropriation instead of $25,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, &c.,

JOS. S. WILSON, Commissioner.

Upon the representations that were made to him, inducing him to believe that these Indian hostilities were not such as they had been represented to him to be, he makes the recommendation of an additional appropriation of $15,000.

Besides the other reasons for adding to this amount I may mention that there is a large tract of land granted for a military road, upon which a vast amount of work and money has been expended, from the Willamette valley to the eastern part of the State across the Cascade mountains; and it is impossible for the company, notwithstanding they have invested their money, to make use of the lands donated to them, because there are no surveys and there is no money to expend in surveying the lands along the line of that road, and thus the lands are kept out of market. The company cannot sell them because there are no surveys. I think in view of the extent of the State of Oregon and the limited appropriations that have heretofore been made for that State and the prospect that the immigration will rapidly increase, that this is not an extravagant appropriation. Some of the States have $50,000; Nebraska has $50,000.

Mr. POMEROY. Forty thousand dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, $40,000. California has $50,000. Any one who will look upon the map showing the public surveys in the country, will see that a very large proportion of California has already been surveyed, while but a very inconsiderable proportion of the State of Oregon has ever yet been touched by the public surveys. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the joint Committee on the Library to offer an amendment, to come in after line four hundred and eighty-three, on page 21:

To enable the joint Committee on the Library to pay Mrs. Sarah F. Ames an additional compensation for her marble bust of President Lincoln, $500.

I will state what the case is. Something like two years since the Committee on the Library made an agreement with Mrs. Ames for a marble bust of President Lincoln for the sum of $1,500. The bust was to be of life size, and when completed was to be satisfactory to the Committee on the Library. It has been completed, it is satisfactory to the committee, and she has received the compensation of $1,500; but, instead of its being life size, she made it larger than life, made it the heroic size, at some additional cost; and the committee, after full consideration of the subject, and inasmuch as Mrs. Ames had made a good bust of a great and good man, probably a better bust than any that has yet been produced, concluded to ask for the appropriation upon this bill of the additional sum of $500. These are the facts in the case.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I move further to amend this bill on the sixteenth page, three hundred and seventy-sixth line, under the head of "surveying the public lands in Nevada," by striking out "twenty" and inserting "fifty," so as to make the appropriation for that purpose $50,000. That comes up precisely to the estimate of the Department; and the same reasons apply to Nevada, I apprehend, that apply to Oregon. As I said before, I do not desire to argue any of these questions; but the increased demand for public land requires surveys, and any landlord who is able to own an estate is able to survey it if he wants to sell it. We kept back during the war the surveys of the public lands; they were not called for during the war, and therefore they were not surveyed; but since the close of the war a great impetus has been given to immigration and these lands are called for, and they ought to be surveyed. The Committee on Public Lands have recommended this amendment so as to bring up the appropriation to the estimate of the Department.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to understand on what principle the House Committee on Appropriations make up these appropriation bills. It seems to me that they strike blindly and cut down appropriations without any particular reason, send their bills mutilated here to the Senate in the expectation, probably, that we will correct all the mistakes that are made. It seems that one bill after another comes here in the same style, all cut up into fragments. We have to restore the appropriations to the estimates. It is very remarkable.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I might say in explanation of the matter of inquiry, that it has been customary with Appropriation Committees to follow the appropriations of the previous year where they have no better information on the subject. The appropriation of a former year for a particular service has generally been adopted as a proper rule for the current service in the absence of better evidence.

Mr. POMEROY. Do they continue to make an appropriation where all the lands are surveyed because they had done so the previous year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think my honorable friend's question perhaps is a little sharper than it sounds. I spoke of the continuance of the service. I suppose the service would end when it was performed.

Mr. POMEROY. I referred to the action of the House, and not of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The House probably would not pursue the service after it had ended; but so long as the service continues an appropriation made for one year is generally considered authority for an appropriation for another year. I should say, therefore, that this appropriation follows the appropriation of last year. The House committee having probably no information, as certainly the committee of the Senate had not, except a general estimate here, as to the necessity of any further appropriation being needed, followed the appropriation of last year. I suppose that may account for it. The Senator from Kansas, acting as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, who moves this amendment, states that which he holds to be somewhat conclusive, that this follows precisely the estimates; and for that reason he desires that it should be accepted by the Senate. But a moment ago, when the estimates did not come quite up to his standard, the estimates went for nothing. If the Senator means, acting as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to furnish proof to the Senate, and that proof is to be the estimates, I should like to have him bound by them. But a moment ago he moved to increase the estimates $15,000, and now he thinks the estimates are quite conclusive. I am not certain that this appropriation of $50,000 is not needed in this place. It is a pretty large appropriation, however. It will be seen that it increases it $30,000 over the appropriation of last year.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me one word of explanation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. There was never any survey in our State of any consequence until last year; but there had been appropriations; we had no surveyor general's office established, and those appropriations accumulated to some seventy thousand dollars. The surveyor general then undertook to use the money in the most advantageous way by running standard lines and meridian lines to reach the agricultural valleys which were distributed over the State, and he is now in a position to sectionize, to run the section and township lines in those valleys. The Commissioner of the General Land Office estimated $50,000 for that service, but even that is not as much as could be used to advantage this year, for the reason that the Pacific railroad is progressing much more rapidly than was anticipated; and there will be in the State some two or three hundred miles, perhaps four hundred miles, of that road this year. A line of settlers have gone out along the road, and it is very important that the surveys should be prosecuted. Fifty thousand dollars is as small an amount as ought to be appropriated under all the circumstances; and it will be of more advantage to have it done this year while the force is in the field. We had a good appropriation last year and ran the standard lines and meridian lines, and if we could go on with the work this year it would be a great accommodation to the settlers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire, also, to move an amendment to the bill on the eighteenth page, in the clause which now reads:

For surveying the eastern boundary of Nevada, estimated four hundred and twenty-five miles, at not exceeding fifteen dollars per mile, $6,375.

Our information is that that will not pay for the expenses of the survey, and that it cannot be prosecuted at that price. I do not know the fact myself, but that is the representation that has been made to the committee, and I think from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that that will not pay the expense of running that line.

Mr. STEWART. The Commissioner asks for twenty-five dollars a mile. The cost of this work may be judged from the cost of running other similar lines. The southern line of Oregon is a precisely similar line. The appropriation there was as follows:

"For the survey of the forty-second parallel of north latitude, so far as it constitutes the common boundary between the States of California and Oregon, estimated two hundred and twenty miles, at not exceeding sixty dollars per mile."

That is a very similar line. Then the eastern boundary line of Oregon is entirely similar. Although this line is a short distance further East, it runs through precisely the same kind of country. There the appropriation was:

"For surveying the boundary line between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Idaho, commencing at the northern boundary of the State of Nevada, and running north to its intersection with Snake river, estimated one hundred and sixty miles, not exceeding sixty dollars per mile, $9,600."

Those are the appropriations made for similar lines. I had a conversation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject. I thought this work could be done cheaper than that. He took considerable trouble to estimate it, and put it down at the lowest figure at which he thought it could possibly be done, twenty-five dollars a mile. I do not know that you can get anybody to do it for that; but certainly it cannot be done for less than twenty-five dollars per mile. There is no use in making any appropriation at all unless it is as much as twenty-five dollars per mile. I will state that it is important to run this line. We do not ask for an appropriation to run the northern line. We can get along for another year without that; but it is important that the eastern line should be run, because there are settlers on that portion of the line, and they refuse to pay taxes either in Utah or Nevada, because they do not know where they ought to pay them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Why should it cost any more to run that line than the line in Utah, for instance?

Mr. STEWART. We have not run a boundary line in Utah on either side.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Why should it cost any more than surveying the eastern boundary line of Colorado?

Mr. STEWART. It is a different country altogether. The eastern boundary line of Colorado runs right through a valley where there are grass and water and a level country. This line runs a portion of the way through deserts, and in order to make a survey you have got to carry water on mules for several days' supply. They have got to fix their starting point on the Colorado river. It is a very difficult line to run. For running a precisely similar line sixty dollars a mile was appropriated; but if you will appropriate twenty-five dollars a mile in this case the Department will make the effort to get the line run for that sum. Certainly it cannot be done for less.

Mr. POMEROY. The amendment which I wish to move is to strike out "fifteen," in line four hundred and ten, and to insert "twenty-five;" and also, in the same line, to strike out "six" and to insert "ten;" and also to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five;" so that it will read:

For surveying the eastern boundary of Nevada, estimated at four hundred and twenty-five miles, at not exceeding twenty-five dollars per mile, $10,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Ten thousand six hundred and twenty-five dollars is the estimate.

Mr. POMEROY. I call it exactly four hundred miles. It is estimated to be four hundred and twenty-five miles; but I think it is about four hundred.

Mr. STEWART. Ten thousand six hundred and twenty-five dollars would be the exact sum according to the estimates.

Mr. POMEROY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be reported as modified.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments, which was in line four hundred and ten to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" and also to strike out the word "six" and insert "ten;" and in lines four hundred and ten and four hundred and eleven to strike out the words "three hundred and seventy-five" and insert "six hundred and twenty-five;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the eastern boundary of Nevada, estimated at four hundred and twenty-five miles, at not exceeding twenty-five dollars per mile $10,625.

Mr. STEWART. That is it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I have another amendment to offer, and which, as it has not been submitted to the committee, I desire to have passed by unanimous consent. It comes from the State of Florida. The State of Florida was not represented here until yesterday, and the Senator therefore could not send the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is it estimated for?

Mr. POMEROY. I think none of the States not represented were estimated for; but the Senator who has arrived from Florida makes the statement to the committee, which I knew was true before, that they have some public lands that they want surveyed; that there is now an immigration demand for them; and if the amendment can be received by unanimous consent it is simply to insert in the appropriate place the following:

For surveying public lands in the State of Florida, $20,000.

I think they ought to have that appropriation to complete their surveys in the State of Florida.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there any recommendation from the Department?

Mr. POMEROY. There is no recommendation and no estimate for it, because the State was not represented here until yesterday.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the Department has been here all the time.

Mr. POMEROY. The Department has not recommended anything or estimated anything since the commencement of the war for any of these States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does the Senator understand what the condition of the public lands in that State is?

Mr. POMEROY. Only from representations made to me by gentlemen directly from there.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Under the circumstances I will not raise a question under the rule. I leave it to the Senate to decide.

Mr. POMEROY. I think myself there ought to be a little appropriation for the State of Florida. Of course it will be the pleasure of the Senate to receive it or not under our rules. It is an appropriation of $20,000 for that State. The public lands there have been neglected during the whole war; there has been no surveying there; many of the old boundaries are being obliterated, and they need, to build up again the waste places and find out what are public lands and what are not, to have a little appropriation for surveys. Twenty thousand dollars is the sum we have recommended. It can be received, of course, only by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not recollect what is the condition of the surveys of the State of Florida; but I have no idea that it is important now to make additional appropriations. I do not think the immigration to that State requires it. I think it would be exceedingly loose legislation to appropriate $20,000 for surveys there when we are not informed at all of the amount of unsold lands already surveyed. The Senator from Kansas has no information on that question; and I should want to know from the General Land Office what amount of lands are already surveyed in that State and unoccupied. My impression is that there is a very large quantity, and that there is no occasion for this appropriation.

Mr. POMEROY. I said we had no estimate; but it must be evident to every Senator, as it is known to me, that there is a large tract of public lands in Florida. It is evident also to every Senator that for the past few years we have made no appropriation whatever. Now, if the objection is to prevail that because there are lands not occupied in Florida that have been surveyed we should not make this appropriation, that would apply to any of the States. All our States contain some unoccupied lands that have been surveyed. In fact, the public lands of the older States of the South are unoccupied to a great extent. That is not an argument that we should not survey such as have not been surveyed. There are very valuable lands and very attractive lands, I know from the representations made to me, in Florida, that are not settled upon because they are not surveyed. I think we should begin, as these States come back, one after another, where they have got public lands to make a small appropriation for them to continue the system of surveying. I think this amendment ought to commend itself to the Senate; and I hope a vote of the Senate will be had first on the question whether we will receive it. I offer the amendment, and move that we receive this amendment to the appropriation bill appropriating $20,000 for surveys in Florida.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert on page 18, after line four hundred and seven:

For surveying public lands in the State of Florida, $20,000.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A moment's reflection will satisfy Senators that for the present surveys cannot possibly be had in that State, as the operations in the field cannot be carried on, and there will be but very little delay in waiting until the next session of Congress, when we can have some information on the subject. I am in favor of liberal appropriations to prosecute public surveys; but they ought to be made in those localities where the settlements are extending out into the public lands. I do not believe that is the case in Florida. I do not believe there is any occasion for it there, and I think we ought to have some information from the proper office on the subject. It would take the Commissioner but a few minutes to prepare a letter on the subject. Inasmuch as there is really but very little delay in waiting until the next session, I think this amendment ought not to be adopted without some information on the subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is that amendment objected to? Has that gone over?

Mr. POMEROY. One objection cannot carry it over. A vote of the Senate can carry it over.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understood that the Senator from Indiana objected to its reception, and it cannot come in without unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it is objected to, under the rules it cannot be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the objection was waived, if there was any objection at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. I only desired to offer another amendment in case this one was disposed of.

Mr. POMEROY. I trust there will be no serious objection to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not make any.

Mr. POMEROY. I think we ought to pass it. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I now offer an amendment to come in on the eighteenth page, immediately after the amendment just adopted. I will remark that it is an appropriation which has passed the Senate during the present session, but under a misapprehension was reported against in the House of Representatives. It has passed through the Committee on Public Lands and also the Committee on Appropriations. It is to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,908 50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay balance due for the survey of lands embraced in the Osage Indian reservation and the Cherokee neutral lands, in the State of Kansas, under contracts dated respectively August 14 and 16, 1866, the said sum to be returned to the Treasury out of the proceeds of the sale of said lands, as provided by treaties with said Indians.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $7,775, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the balance due for surveying several Indian reservations in Utah Territory, the survey of which was provided for by act of Congress approved May 5, 1864.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $39,014 63, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, to pay for the survey of the Osage Indian trust lands, ceded to the United States under treaty concluded September 29, 1865, upon a contract made with the General Land Office under date of September 18, 1866, and another contract for another portion of said trust lands, dated May 28, 1867; which survey is according to the provisions of the second article of treaty concluded with said tribe September 29, 1865.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,362 03, to pay the balance due for the survey of the lands embraced in the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservation in the State of Nebraska, under contract dated August 14, 1866, as provided by a treaty with the Omaha Indians and authorized by act of Congress approved July 28, 1866.

Mr. HARLAN. The exact amount in the first section of the amendment ought to be "$9,263 85."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that money due by the contract?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir; and the work is all done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By the contract was not the money to be taken out of the proceeds of the sales?

Mr. HARLAN. This comes out of the proceeds of the sales.

Mr. POMEROY. What was the sum mentioned by the Senator from Iowa?

The CHIEF CLERK. Nine thousand two hundred and sixty-three dollars and eighty-five cents.

Mr. POMEROY. How did I report it?

The CHIEF CLERK. Nine thousand nine hundred and eighty dollars and fifty-one cents.

Mr. POMEROY. That modification is correct. I accept it.

Mr. HARLAN. In line seven of the first section of the printed amendment the words "and the Cherokee neutral lands" should be stricken out.

Mr. POMEROY. They may as well be stricken out, because that part has been settled for. If left in, there would be no money appropriated for them, because that contract has been extinguished.

Mr. HARLAN. In line eight of the same section the word "respectively," and also the words "and sixteenth," should be stricken out.

Mr. POMEROY. Those modifications are accepted. They are mere surplusage to the language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to explain to the Senate how this happens, so that they can see that we know something about it. This is a payment of money for the surveys of Indian lands. They were provided for under certain treaties made recently with the Indian tribes for whose benefit in part these surveys were made. By the stipulations of those treaties the Government of the United States engaged to make these surveys for the Indians, and of course they became obligated to incur the expenses of the surveys at first, but they are all paid out of the sales of the lands, so that it is really an advance payment, as I understand. The correction which the Senator from Iowa has proposed to the first section by which the sum is reduced from $27,980 50, as it stood originally, to $9,000, results from the fact that since this estimate was made in the early part of the year the difference between these two sums has been received out of the sale of the lands.

Mr. HARLAN. That is for the survey of the Cherokee neutral lands. That appropriation has been passed as a separate bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The land described in this first section?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir; part of the lands were Cherokee neutral lands, and the treaty has been ratified under which money has been paid over, and a sufficient amount has been applied to the payment for the surveys of that part of the land. For the survey of the Osage lands described in the first section the money is now lying in the Treasury; but the First Comptroller holds that it cannot be paid out by him without an appropriation. The proceeds of the sales of the land are actually there. That is not an advance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. So that the proposition is true that it does not make an appropriation to come out, except indirectly, from the Treasury of the United States. The money here appropriated really comes out of the trust funds of the Indians.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir; that is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. POMEROY, and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to propose another amendment, which is the last one I shall offer.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to get a chance to offer an amendment while there is some money left in the Treasury; but I do not think I shall get the opportunity. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We are now disposing of the Indian funds.

Mr. POMEROY. My amendment is to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to continue the extension of the geological explorations begun in Nebraska under the provisions of the second section of the deficiency act of Congress, approved March 2, 1867, to other portions of the public lands; and for that purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I move this amendment at the suggestion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and very many other persons who desire to prosecute what they commenced last year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does it come from any committee?

Mr. POMEROY. And to continue this geological survey over the other Territories besides Nebraska. I have to say that it does not come from any committee, because it was only put into my hands yesterday, and the committee have not had a meeting on the subject; but the Senator from Wisconsin and other Senators desired that this appropriation should be presented to the Senate. It is an appropriation of only $10,000 to continue the geological survey. I hold in my hand Miscellaneous Document No. 136, sent to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, in which the Interior Department urge and recommend and give very extended reasons why this geological survey should be continued. They speak at considerable length of the importance of the work, and the benefits that have already accrued to the Government from what was done last year; and they desire to have a small appropriation to continue it this year. I shall have discharged my duty by presenting it to the Senate. I know no more about it personally than any other Senator, I suppose; but I have presented it to the Senate, and hope that it may be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN. I desire to offer a couple of amendments to this bill. On page 14, at the end of line three hundred and ten, I move to insert the following:

Provided, That no improvements, alterations, or repairs of the Capitol building shall be made except by direction and under the supervision of the architect of the Capitol extension.

Heretofore certain repairs have been made which have been paid for out of the contingent fund of the Senate and House of Representatives by officers of the different branches, without any direction or supervision of the architect. The design of the amendment is to prevent that, if possible, hereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the close of the bill:

For expenses of the trial of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate.

I desire to state that heretofore Congress appropriated $10,000 to pay the expenses of the impeachment of the President. This amendment proposes $6,000 more. The entire expense of the impeachment, including witnesses, furniture, printing, and the fees of officers for summoning witnesses will not exceed $16,000, and will probably fall a little short of that amount; but it is necessary that something more should be appropriated. I make this statement in relation to the expense of the impeachment trial, and hope Senators will hear what I say, that the entire expense will not exceed $16,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Are you instructed by your committee to offer the amendment?

Mr. CRAGIN. It is recommended by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose when the Senator speaks of the entire expense he has reference to the expense to be paid by Congress.

Mr. CRAGIN. I mean the entire expense so far as the Senate is concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to call up the amendment that I offered yesterday. It is to insert on page 11, after line two hundred and forty-two, the following:

For construction of a building to be used as a custom-house and United States court-room and post office, at Portland, Oregon, $50,000.

I desire to have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 1, 1868.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to the necessity of a building for the use of the custom-house, post office, United States courts, and internal revenue officers at Portland, Oregon, I have the honor to say that the commerce of Portland is rapidly increasing—the customs receipts alone for the past year being upward of fifty thousand dollars in gold.

There is great difficulty on that coast in renting safe buildings for Government purposes, and as the papers and documents connected with the customs and other offices, such as registers of vessels, internal revenue cases, &c., are extremely valuable, the interests of the public service demand that provision should be made for their preservation in a fire-proof building.

The necessity for buildings of this character is even greater in that locality than on the Atlantic coast, as on this coast secure and suitable structures can be rented for the purposes mentioned, while in Oregon none can be obtained unless erected by the Government.

In view of these circumstances, therefore, and of the saving that will be effected in the rent now being paid for the insecure and unsuitable buildings at present occupied by the various offices, I recommend the erection at Portland of a substantial fire-proof building of sufficient capacity to accommodate all the civil officers at that port, believing that such a course will promote both the interests of the Government and of the city. I know of no city on the Pacific where the necessity for a building of this character is more pressing.

A suitable building cannot, it is believed by the supervising architect, be erected for less than $100,000 in gold, but an appropriation of $50,000 would be ample at present.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary of the Treasury.
Hon. Z. CHANDLER, Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. CORBETT. I will state that it is the intention to erect a building containing room sufficient to accommodate the internal revenue officers at this point. The collector and assessor of the State reside at Portland and have their offices there. I have another letter here from the Postmaster General, in which he states that "it is a matter of very great importance that means should be taken at an early day to furnish a post office adequate to the requirements of the city of Portland and the country to be supplied from it." I also left the papers at the office of the Secretary of the Interior; but Judge Otto, the Assistant Secretary, was obliged to come to the House on some important business, and he stated to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he considered it not only important but absolutely necessary that a court-room should be built at this place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that this amendment will be adopted. I have made frequent representations to the Departments of the necessity of such a building at Portland, in Oregon, and it has been generally understood that at some convenient time they would recommend an appropriation of this kind; but now the necessity has become so obvious that there seems to be no question anywhere with any Department that the construction of this building is necessary and proper. I will simply add that we have no public buildings in the State of Oregon, not one building of any kind or description that has ever been erected at the expense of the Government. In the city of Portland, where the United States district court is held, the business for that court is rapidly accumulating. The accommodations for the court at this time are exceedingly limited, and it is absolutely necessary for the United States, if possible, to hire another court-room at considerable additional expense, or to construct a building for the purpose of accommodating the court. When you consider the expense that the United States incurs in hiring a post office, hiring a court-room, and hiring the other public buildings that the United States are compelled to hire there, it will be seen that as a matter of economy it will be to the advantage of the Government to construct this building, for the expenses now paid amount to more than the interest on the money that the Government would so expend. I hope therefore that this amendment will be adopted, as I am satisfied it meets the approval of all the Departments.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest a verbal amendment simply in the form of the amendment. It is to insert the word "public" before the word "building;" and also to strike out the words "to be used;" so that it will be "a public building for a custom-house, United States court-room, and post office."

Mr. CORBETT. I accept that modification.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not see that there is any reasonable objection to this proposition upon the evidence.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. On page 18, at the end of line four hundred and eleven, I move to insert the words "under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office," to make that clause correspond with the others.

Mr. POMEROY. The effect of that is to require that the surveying of the eastern boundary of Nevada shall be prosecuted under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I think that is very proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. On page 18, after line two hundred and ninety-three, I move to insert the following:

Mining:

For collecting statistics of mines and mining, $5,000.

This amendment is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee on Mines and Mining. It is a less sum than has usually been appropriated; but it is to carry out the plan inaugurated by the Secretary some two or three years ago under which we have the reports from Mr. J. Ross Browne. The Secretary has now appointed a gentleman from New York by the name of Raymond, the editor of the Mining Journal, a scientific man, a young man of great ability; and the Secretary is desirous of continuing this appropriation for the next year. He sets forth abundant reasons for the appropriation. If any one desires it, his letter can be read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. I gave notice some three or four days ago of an amendment that I should offer in line four hundred and three on page 17. That clause makes an appropriation of $15,000 for the surveys in Montana Territory. I move to amend it by making it $25,000. I am advised that $25,000 at least will be required. The surveys there have just begun, and they are very much needed.

Mr. COLE. I will ask what the estimates are?

Mr. MORTON. I do not know.

Mr. COLE. I desire to know whether this is up to the estimates or not.

Mr. MORTON. My information is derived from the surveyor general of the Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was on page 17, line four hundred and three, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in Montana Territory, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $25,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I believe that amendment is in harmony with the estimates from the Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLE. I have a little amendment to offer, to insert at the end of the bill the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to institute experiments for the planting and growth of forest trees on the treeless plains of the West, the result of which experiments shall be reported to Congress, $5,000.

I asked leave to offer this amendment in the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member. I believe it to be a most worthy object, much desired by humanitarians and philanthropic men of our country. A good many have turned their attention to this subject already. Those who have been upon the plains certainly know well the necessity of this proposition. In the settled portions of our own country there has not been much necessity for anything of this sort, but great attention is given to it in the older countries; and in this new country, where population is now going, there is certainly very great necessity that some attention should be given to it. This is a small appropriation asked for the purpose of carrying on some experiments and testing the possibility of growing trees there. I provide in the amendment that it shall be under the Secretary of the Interior; but whether he shall make use of the funds, or the Land Office department, or the Agricultural Department, or some other Department, I know not, nor do I care, so that the experiments are carried out. It is not local in any sense; it is national in its object. I have asked for no amendment so far as California is concerned, nor has any been asked for California; but I believe this would be a wise measure, and I ask the Senate to look upon it in a favorable light.

Mr. YATES. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "Commissioner of Agriculture," instead of "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. COLE. I left it with the Secretary of the Interior; but I am not particular about that. I am willing that that amendment shall be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly think that the Senate ought to adopt this amendment without knowing what it is.

Mr. COLE. I am sure anybody can know very well what it is from the reading of it. There is nothing abstruse in it. It is plain and simple.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I heard the statement of my honorable friend, but still I am a little in doubt what it means. I will read it for the information of the Senate. I think the Senator will agree with me that it is novel.

Mr. COLE. Certainly it is; it is new.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It reads:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior—

I believe that is now charged to "the Commissioner of Agriculture!"— to institute experiments for the planting and growth of forest trees on the treeless plains of the West, &c.

I do not know what experiments the honorable Senator refers to. I suppose he means the planting of trees, but how far the honorable Senator thinks it is proper for the General Government to enter upon the undertaking of covering the treeless plains and trackless deserts of the West with forest trees, I do not know. I do not know how much information the honorable Senator has on that subject, as to the practicability of it, but I submit that the undertaking is a novel one, and if it is entered upon I do not see the end of it. I am sure this is one of these experiments, if they are to be regarded as experiments, which belong rather to the local communities than to the Government of the United States.

If it is to be entered upon I agree with the honorable Senator from Illinois that it should be under the care of the Commissioner of Agriculture; but I am sure the Senate will agree with me that it would be enlarging the sphere of his duties very much indeed to charge him with the duty of clothing the western plains with forest trees. If that is entered upon as a policy I hardly know where it will end. The resources of the Government of the United States might be very largely taxed, I can conceive, if it should become the settled policy annually to make appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture. Not even a Newton would be able to accomplish that task on a great scale to cover these treeless plains with forest trees at anything like a reasonable expenditure from the public Treasury.

If it is to end in an experiment only to test the practicability of doing it, and then it is to be turned over to somebody else, I can understand that it might be worth while to do this. Sometimes we have had experiments, I believe, to test the capacity of steamships. We had several propositions before the Committee on Commerce this year to test the capacity of certain new improvements supposed to have some adaptation to steam-engines and to the propelling power of ships upon the seas. There is no end to the experiments which the Government might enter upon if it had the curiosity to do so.

But I submit to my honorable friend whether, as a practical question, this is not so new and so novel and carrying the thing so far out of the ordinary track of the duties of the Commissioner of Agriculture that if once entered upon it will involve the expenditures of the General Government to an amount which the Senator will be very reluctant, I know, from his habits and notions of economy and that strict propriety to which he holds the administration of all the Departments of the Government, to agree to? I submit to him whether he is not opening a door here which would be rather too broad a one for us to enter upon simply as an experiment?

Mr. COLE. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to inquire what committee this comes from?

Mr. COLE. I mentioned it in the Committee on Appropriations, and said there that I would offer it in the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator does not mean to say that it comes here with the recommendation of that committee?

Mr. COLE. I have stated that I had the permission and consent of the Committee on Appropriations to offer it in the Senate. I mentioned in the committee that I would offer it in the Senate, and there was no dissent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the honorable Senator mentioned the subject in committee, that this was a proposition that he took an interest in, but I did not understand the honorable Senator to invoke the judgment of the committee on the subject of whether it could be offered here as coming from that committee. The proposition offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] a few moments ago about the geological surveys was presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] in a similar way, informally, and he was told that it would require, before it could be presented here for consideration, the recommendation of a distinct committee outside of the Committee on Appropriations. I dislike exceedingly to interrupt the progress of the matter in this way.

Mr. COLE. Of course it does not come from the Committee on Appropriations. If it did, it would be in the body of the bill. It comes from myself, under the circumstances I have stated.

I am not at all surprised that the Senator from Maine, who is so much accustomed to the pine forests of that region, does not see the necessity of these experiments, or something of this sort; but those who have been on the treeless plains of the West have often observed this great want in that region.

I cannot state how these experiments are to be carried out. I presume, however, that the Commissioner of Agriculture will expend some portion of this sum, perhaps all of it, in gathering and distributing the seeds of forest trees, which are not gathered unless for some premium, to the people who are settling on the plains. That disposition of the fund would be entirely satisfactory to me, and, I believe, equally satisfactory to Congress.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations seems to apprehend that this may open the door for wide and unlimited expense. He asks where it is to end. So far as I am concerned, it will end with the experiments that are made by this appropriation. It is for the purpose of experiments, and nothing else; and this sum is sufficient, I doubt not, to test the practicability of growing trees on those barren plains. There it will end. No further appropriation will ever be asked for, in my judgment. I have no belief that I shall, at any time, ever ask for any other appropriation for this end. It will end, therefore, I take it, with this appropriation, if it is made; and if it is not made I presume it will not end without a further application from some other quarter.

I will state that I do not know who is to expend this money, or who is to use it. I know of no person, indeed, who has any desire to be the guardian or custodian of it, or to expend it. It is to be expended under the direction of some public officer. That the object is a good one I have no question. That it will result in great public good and advantage to the whole nation I do not at all doubt.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see how the Senator will get his amendment on this bill, but I can see very well how it would be very desirable to have this experiment made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand whether exception is taken to this amendment being in order or not. The Chair does not except to amendments unless an objection is urged by some Senator.

Mr. POMEROY. The Chair will understand when anybody objects. It has not been objected to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Objection was made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by the inquiry as to what committee recommended it. No committee recommends it, and there is an end of it.

Mr. POMEROY. I will only add that if this means raising trees on what are known as the sandy plains, that really would be an experiment, although I do not know how it could be prosecuted very well. If it means simply an experiment to raise trees on the prairies, where grass will grow, that has been tried over and over again with success. There is not the least doubt about it. The only trouble is to meet the expense. The fact that trees will grow where grass and other vegetation grow has been established over and over again. It is not an experiment to grow trees on the prairies; but it may require some experiments to grow them on what is known as the desert, those sandy plains where the sand drifts. I confess I do not know any way to grow trees there; but I suppose there may be some way found out after a while.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator if it would not be necessary to put some man there to take care of these trees while they are growing?

Mr. POMEROY. I apprehend the trouble will be not to take care of them, but to get them to grow first.

Mr. COLE. I doubt not there will be many men ready to take care of them if they are furnished with the seeds.

Mr. POMEROY. If they are paid for it they will take care of them.

Mr. COLE. The people there will feel a great interest in taking care of them themselves.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see how we can enter on this experiment, not that I do not think it desirable. I would not like to cast a shadow over such an enterprise; but I do not apprehend that we can make any appropriation for it now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I dislike very much to interfere with my friend from California; but his proposition does not seem to be in order at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless it comes from a committee it is not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLEY. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 13, after line three hundred and five:

For expenses of receiving and arranging and taking care of copyright books, charts, and other copyright matter, $1,800, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund.

This seems to have been inadvertently omitted in the bill, and the attention of the Committee on Patents was called to it by a letter from the Secretary from the Interior. I gave the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations notice of this matter several days ago, and I make this motion at the instance of the Committee on Patents. If it is required, I have here the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the letter not being called for, the question is on the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I want to have a little information on this subject. I think it is estimated for, and I think it has been appropriated for heretofore; but it was not appropriated for by the House of Representatives, and not being found in the bill the attention of the committee was called to the subject, and we did not have any information which authorized us to infer that it was necessary to appropriate $1,800 for the specific purpose of taking care of those copyrights. The Committee on Appropriations had no information on that subject, and so referred it to the committee of which the honorable Senator from West Virginia is chairman, that he might present to the Senate some facts to enable it to judge why, in a Department employing so many clerks as are employed there, it should be necessary to appropriate a sum for the specific purpose of taking care of these particular writings.

Mr. WILLEY. About all that the Committee on Patents know about it is contained in the letter which I send to the desk from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it be read. The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 24, 1868.

SIR: My attention has been called to House bill No. 818, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes," and to the omission therefrom of the item for copyright service in charge of the Patent Office, $1,800, which has been the annual appropriation for that object for years past.

I have the honor to recommend that said omission may be supplied, and to submit herewith for the consideration of your honorable committee a draft of a section for that purpose.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
O. H. BROWNING,
Secretary.

Hon. L. M. MORRILL, Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We had that letter before the Committee on Appropriations; but it will be seen that it does not give much information on the subject. We are still left in the dark about the service.

Mr. WILLEY. If the Senator will allow me, I will give him what information I have on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. WILLEY. That letter refers to the fact that this is the usual appropriation made every year for this purpose. I have only taken occasion to go back two years. I find in 1867 this provision:

"For expenses of receiving, arranging, and taking care of copyright books, charts, and other copyright matter, $1,800, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund."

I find exactly the same appropriation in 1866:

"For expenses of receiving, arranging, and taking care of copyright books, charts, and other copyright matter, $1,800, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund."

So that it appears that it has been considered necessary heretofore to make this appropriation for this purpose. On referring to the law it will be seen that as the law formerly stood it was required every year that a certain return should be made originally to the office of the Secretary of State. The old law read as follows:

"And it shall be the duty of the clerk of each district court, at least once in every year, to transmit a certified list of all such records of copyright, including the titles so recorded, and the dates of record, and also all the several copies of books or other works deposited in his office according to this act, to the Secretary of State, to be preserved in his office."

It will be seen there were a great many books of this kind required to be transmitted annually to the Secretary of State. That law was subsequently modified in the act of 1859, as follows:

"That all books, maps, charts, and other publications of every nature whatever, heretofore deposited in the Department of State, according to the laws regulating copyrights, together with all the records of the Department of State in regard to the same, shall be removed to, and be under the control of, the Department of the Interior, which is hereby charged with all the duties connected with the same, and with all matters pertaining to copyright, in the same manner and to the same extent that the Department of State is now charged with the same; and hereafter all such publications of every nature whatever shall, under present laws and regulations, be left with and kept by him."

It seems that it is necessary to have some person to take charge of these copyrights and these books.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think this appropriation ought to be made. I deem it to be quite necessary for the purpose for which it was originally made. The laws require that books, in order to secure a copyright, and other inventions shall be sent to the Patent Office, and there be arranged. It is important to them that they should be preserved, and be preserved in such a way that access can readily be had to them. It is important, also, to the public, that the public may know whether the parties claiming the benefit of a patent for a discovery is entitled to it or not. One of the evidences of title is the fact that the matter has been properly recorded in the office. The expense attending the keeping of these matters is to be paid out of the Patent Office fund, and that is received from the inventors; it does not come out of the public Treasury. The Patent Office more than supports itself; and as this is for the benefit of the patentees themselves, it would seem to be but just even to them, and right as a matter of policy, that there should be some compensation provided for the preservation of all these matters upon which their own titles to their inventions depend.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to inquire whether this amount is the salary of the clerk who has charge of these books and records.

Mr. WILLEY. This is not an appropriation, let it be understood; it is to authorize this sum to be paid out of the Patent Office fund. Of course it requires the care and attention of some person, some clerk, to take charge of this copyright matter.

Mr. HARLAN. Is this the clerk's salary provided for in this way?

Mr. WILLEY. I do not know.

Mr. HARLAN. I suppose it to be; and if so, there is hardly a doubt that it ought to be passed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the trouble; it does not appear.

Mr. WILLEY. This is not an appropriation, be it remembered. These books and charts and copyrights must be taken care of by some person; and to enable that to be done the person employed must be paid for. The object of passing this is to avoid making a draft upon the Treasury to do it; that the party who performs it shall be paid out of the Patent Office fund. That is the object of the appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The difficulty which the committee had still remains. The Senator from Iowa raises the point precisely of embarrassment in the case. It does not purport to be an appropriation for a clerk, and the Senator from West Virginia does not understand that it is to pay the salary of a clerk. If it were so, of course it would say so; but the language of the appropriation itself negatives the idea that it is for a clerk. It is for "expenses." Expenses for what? Not for a clerk; but "expenses of receiving, arranging, and taking care of copyright books, charts, and other copyright matter." What are those expenses? They are not the payment of a clerk. What are the expenses incident to receiving books and other copyright matter? The Government provides a building for them, the Patent Office. Of course there is no expense for rent. The Government provides for that out of the general appropriation. The Government employs all the clerks and pays all the clerks that I know of, that are necessary for this or for any other work. The language of the appropriation itself negatives the idea that it can be for any clerical service.

The difficulty in this case is there is not the slightest speculation or the slightest information about it; and my honorable friend from Iowa, who has had charge of that Department, to the satisfaction of the country, I am very glad to say, does not himself know. He seems to think it is for a clerk; but it is not for a clerk. It is so much money, $1,800, drawn from the Patent Office fund for a class of expense which it is not possible for me to conceive really can exist there. It may be all right; I am not saying it is not; but the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the House having left it out, and there being nothing but the former appropriation on the subject, and no information whatever about it, the Committee on Appropriations turned it over to the Committee on Patents in the hope that that committee would find some item of expenditure which might be charged to the Patent Office fund.

The Senator from West Virginia thinks that he has stated a justification for this appropriation when he says that it is not an appropriation. The honorable Senator moves it on an appropriation bill, and if it is not an appropriation why should it be moved on this bill? The truth is, Mr. President, it does appropriate so much money, and it appropriates it out of the Treasury of the United States; for this money, although called the Patent Office fund, is really in the Treasury of the United States, and not one dollar of it can be taken out except upon a specific appropriation of this character.

Now, I state to the Senator from West Virginia that there does seem to be here an entire absence of all information whatever which authorizes an appropriation for the expenses of receiving, arranging, and taking care of copyright books. I dare say that they have books of this character, and charts, and copyright matter. There is no doubt about that; but I submit that the clerical force which has charge of it is paid for by the general appropriation bill; the clerks are appropriated for in the general bill; and there is an utter absence here of any item of expense of that Department which justifies, as I submit, the appropriation of one dollar.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, I took it for granted when the Secretary of the Interior thought it necessary to address a letter to one of the committees of the Senate in regard to this matter, calling the attention of the committee to the fact that the usual appropriation in this behalf had been omitted, that that fact alone was sufficient to justify us in the belief that the appropriation was required, was proper to be made. There are a variety of duties to be performed with these records, maps, charts, and books, a copy of all of which that are copyrighted is to be sent to this Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether he has information that this money is to be expended for the pay of any clerk there?

Mr. WILLEY. I have no direct information how it is to be expended, or in what manner it is to be expended. I suppose that is a matter wholly under the direction and within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. As I read to the Senate just now, it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to see that these books, these maps, these charts, these copyrights are received; that they are filed; that they are indorsed; that they are preserved. The language of the law is:

"And it shall be the duty of the clerk of each district court, at least once in every year, to transmit a certified list of all such records of copyright, including the titles so recorded and the dates of record, and also all the several copies of books or other works deposited in his office according to this act to the Secretary of State, to be preserved in his office."

Now they are required to be sent to the Secretary of the Interior. Now, sir, does it require anybody to inform the Senator from Maine that it will need some person to do this? Why, sir, how many books are copyrighted within a year? How many maps; how many charts; how many of these lists are sent from the district courts that are to be filed, that are to be labeled, that are to be used afterward as matter of evidence, as matter of history? They must necessarily be put in order; they must be filed; they must be preserved. There must be an index to them. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to do this. Any person must see that it will require at least one clerk, if no more, to discharge these duties.

I did not say that this was not an appropriation, but I did say it was not an ordinary appropriation; it was not a draft to be made upon the Treasury which is raised by taxes; but it is to come out of the Patent Office fund. That, in fact, is the point of this whole amendment. It seeks to relieve the general Treasury from the burden of this duty and wishes to pay the expense of doing it out of the Patent Office fund.

I cannot imagine that the Secretary of the Interior would have taken the pains to send a letter here to the committee, asking them to incorporate in the bill the ordinary appropriation, which, it seems; has been appropriated in the appropriation acts for many years past, without any question or objection—I cannot imagine that he would desire an appropriation to be made, to be placed under his control, unless it was for an honest and fair and necessary purpose. Therefore I did not think it necessary to go and inquire whether these duties were discharged by a clerk or by the Secretary of the Interior himself, or by whom they were discharged. Most unquestionably they must be discharged by some subordinate employé in the Department. Whether he is a clerk, or what you may call him, I do not know.

It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether this amendment is inserted or not. At the request of the Secretary of the Interior

I have laid the facts, as he submitted them to me, before the Senate, and the Senate can vote the amendment in or not; it is all alike to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 6; no quorum voting.

Mr. RAMSEY. If the Chair will divide the Senate again I think it will disclose the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators will vote, the question can be disposed of.

The question being again put, the amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 20, noes 9.

Mr. WILLEY. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Patents be authorized to rent such rooms as may be necessary for the speedy and convenient transaction of the business of the office, and to pay for the same out of the patent fund.

I will send to the desk a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and also a letter from the acting Commissioner of Patents, to be read. I will send the printed copy of the same letters that were sent to the House of Representatives; it will be more easily read. I have the originals here.

The Chief Clerk read the following letters:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1868.

SIR: The acting Commissioner of Patents, in a letter dated the 15th instant, has brought to my notice the present state of the business pending before his office, and the absolute necessity which exists for increased accommodation for the examining and clerical force under his control.

Applications for patents have been and are rapidly increasing; the number received during a given time at the present being quadruple the number received during a like period a few years ago, necessitating increased clerical force and corresponding room.

The business of the Patent Office cannot be properly and successfully transacted without increased accommodations in room, and that cannot be had without renting a building contiguous, if possible, to the Department for the use of the Pension Bureau.

I inclose herewith a copy of the acting Commissioner's letter, from which it is obvious that without increased facilities it will be impossible for his office to meet the just expectations of a class of people whose claims are entitled to exemption from the tedious delays to which such an increasing accumulation of business will inevitably and unavoidably subject them.

I earnestly commend the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress, and respectfully request that authority be given to rent a suitable building for the purposes above indicated, and that adequate appropriation may be made therefor.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BROWNING, Secretary.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

PATENT OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 15, 1868.

SIR: Allow me to earnestly invite your attention to the great necessity which now exists for more rooms for the use of this office, and to invoke your assistance in the premises.

It is a fact that while the business of the office has increased gradually since 1861, until it is now nearly fourfold as great as it was then, the number of rooms has been scarcely increased at all. We have now twenty principal examiners, as many first assistant examiners, and a like number of second assistant examiners; and each principal examiner, with his two assistants, with the addition of one and sometimes two clerks, occupies but one room. In this one room the principal examiner conducts his examination of applications for patents, while both his assistants are engaged upon other applications under his supervision.

The models, drawings, and papers of these applications have to be exposed to view in the same room, while the agents, attorneys, and parties are admitted to make their inquiries, explanations, and arguments. Of course, while an argument is being made by a party or attorney before the principal examiner, both his assistants engaged in other work are more or less disturbed by it. They may be in fact engaged in hearing other arguments at the same time. Confusion and loss of time and efficiency must be the consequence.

Still another flagrant evil is the result of the crowded condition of these rooms, which is, that attorneys and parties do see and hear things which do not concern them, and which therefore they ought not to see or hear, and some of them do and will take a dishonorable advantage of the knowledge thus obtained. Thus innocent parties may be injured and scandal entailed upon the office.

From this showing it would follow that at least two rooms ought to be allowed each principal examiner, his assistants and clerks, their models, drawings, and papers.

But two of our examiners at this time have each a room of only half the ordinary size.

The business of this office is constantly and rapidly increasing, and there is a pressing necessity now that the number of examiners should be increased to at least twenty-five of each grade. This increase has been so enormous that examiners are gradually falling in arrears with their work in spite of the most determined efforts to keep it up. This state of things is greatly injurious to inventors and embarrassing to the office.

To give you an idea of this increase I will state that the reports for January, February, and March, 1868, show that the number of applications received during these months averages over two thousand per month. The number in March alone was two thousand three hundred and fifty-two. If we had a few more rooms now I could, by detailing first assistants to act as principal examiners, arrest the increase of arrears until such time as Congress would pass an act to increase the number of examiners.

Other branches of the service in this office are suffering likewise for the want of space. From ten to fifteen more rooms are needed for them. A single room has been occupied for months by ten clerks.

A large fire-proof building has been erected just across G street from the Patent Office building for the especial object, as I am informed, of letting it to this Department or some of its bureaus.

I am informed that some one or other of the bureaus in this department might be removed wholly or in part to such a building as that above mentioned without injury to the public service, and that all that is wanting to effect an arrangement is the money wherewithal to pay the rent.

Now, if this be the state of the case, I hope you will urge upon Congress the expediency of making an appropriation to pay the rent.

Very respectfully,
A. M. STOUT,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. O. H. BROWNING, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILLEY. These papers were referred to the Committee on Patents, and a sub-committee was appointed to confer personally with the Secretary of the Interior and also to make personal examination of the convenience of the Patent Office and to see whether the representations made by the acting Commissioner there were as stated. Accordingly the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] and myself made a personal visit to that establishment, had a conference with the acting Commissioner, and visited several of the rooms. We found in some rooms as many as eight and ten clerks in a room of ordinary size, all working together. We found that it was necessary for two sets of examiners to be going on at the same time in the same room as stated by the acting Commissioner. On conferring with the Secretary of the Interior he said that the business of the Patent Office could not be conveniently carried on without more room; that there were too many clerks for health and comfort and convenience and the expeditious performance of duty in many of the rooms; and that the secrecy that ought to be preserved on the part of the examiners could not be maintained; and it was his decided opinion that authority should be granted to some one to rent additional rooms. An effort was made to see if in some of the other bureaus rooms could not be procured, and we found that it could not be. We supposed that perhaps when the Agricultural Bureau was removed that would make sufficient room; but we found on examination that such would not be the fact. The Secretary of the Interior said it would not be; the acting Commissioner said it would not be; and to show you what efforts were being made among the different bureaus to see if accommodations could be procured, I will send to the desk a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 18, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference of communications from Hon. A. M. Stout, acting Commissioner of Patents, in which he makes application for rooms, No. 56, 58, and 60, in this office, for the exclusive use of the draughtmen's division of the Patent Office.

In reply I have to state that those rooms have been for several years past, and are now used and occupied by this office for the division of public lands; and ten clerks engaged in important correspondence, posting returns from district land offices, &c., have their desks, books, files, and papers therein, amounting to more than sixteen hundred volumes of tract-books and abstracts, and twenty thousand homestead cases with accompanying papers.

Book and file cases surround the walls of the rooms occupying every available space, and the records therein are hourly consulted and referred to by the twenty-nine gentlemen composing the division of public lands.

There are no other rooms in this office in which the records and papers mentioned can be placed, and no other place to which the desks of the clerks engaged therein can be transferred.

This office has need of additional room. In the year 1861 the Patent Office took possession of three rooms, and subsequently the Pension Office has taken two rooms which belonged to this office, making it necessary to remove our clerks, files, and cases to inconvenient and inappropriate quarters, notwithstanding the several acts of Congress relating to the homestead, agricultural college, mining, and other landed interests made it necessary that we should greatly increase the capacity of our file-room, as well as to add to our clerical force.

I have, therefore, the honor to report that it will be impossible to comply in this respect with the request of the honorable acting Commissioner of Patents.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JOS. S. WILSON,
Commissioner.

Hon. O. H. BROWNING, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILLEY. I learn that there are thirty or forty clerks now in the Pension Office who are working outside the building and cannot be provided with room in it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will suggest an amendment. I see that there is no limitation whatever on the power of the Commissioner as to the number of rooms to be hired, or the amount to be paid. The Senator obviously has examined into this matter with his committee, so that he understands the necessities of the Department; and I suggest that the hirings should be by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Committees on Patents of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

I want to say a word further. I am a little surprised—I have no doubt of the accuracy of the information, and it is only because I was not aware of it that I am surprised—at the condition in which the public work seems to be in the office of the Interior Department. I suppose the building was originally designed for the Patent Office; I understand it was. The Interior Department has the possession of it now, and the Patent Office proper is very much crowded; I have no doubt. I understand that a large number of the clerks of that office are now actually in buildings entirely independent of the Patent Office proper; but I had supposed that when the new building was erected for the accommodation of the Commissioner of Agriculture there would be abundant accommodations for the Interior Office proper and the Patent Office.

Now, on this amendment we have this general proposition to consider: how long it will be found to be for the interests of the Government to hire rooms independent of the Government buildings, and at such rates and under such circumstances and charges as may be imposed upon us; or how soon we shall be obliged to encounter the general proposition of making a building for the Interior Department proper. I desire that this amendment shall be made that for the time being whatever is done in the way of renting rooms shall be subject to the approbation of the joint Committee on Patents. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. POMEROY. Why not say "the approval of the Committee of the Senate?" Why say "joint committee?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suppose it should be the joint committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I have had my attention called to the fact that more rooms are needed, and I know myself that there are more clerks in a room than can conveniently attend to their business; but whether that will continue so always I do not know. The business has very much increased the last few years. They are doing a great deal more now than they were during the war; but if the Indian department should move out of the Patent Office building; if the Indian department should be put into the hands of the Freedmen's Bureau, there would then be vacant rooms. If the Freedmen's Bureau of the War Department should have charge of Indian matters, as I contemplate that perhaps they may, that would do away with the necessity of occupying the rooms that the Indian department now occupies, and they might be used for the accommodation of the clerks of the Patent Office. The Committee on Indian Affairs, however, withhold that measure, and I do not know what disposition may be made of it. If the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, now organized in the War Department, will take charge of the Indian department there might be room enough for all the officers of the Patent Office in the present building. I do not object to this amendment; but I do not see the necessity of joining two committees to say how much rent shall be paid. I should suppose that one committee in connection with the Commissioner of Patents might decide that; but if the Senator thinks it needs two committees to decide that question, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine proposes to amend the amendment so as to read:

That the Commissioner of Patents be authorized to rent, under the direction of the Committees on Patents of the Senate and House of Representatives, such rooms as may be necessary for the speedy and convenient transaction of the business of the office, and to pay for the same out of the patent fund.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I believe I have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment to aid in the erection of school-houses in the District, outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; it is to come in after line four hundred and eighty-nine:

For the purchase of suitable sites for the erection of additional school-houses and for the maintenance of schools in the county of Washington, outside of the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $10,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the levy court of the county of Washington, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would like to ask the Senator whether the Committee on the District of Columbia have considered that question, and what is the necessity of this appropriation?

Mr. HARLAN. It has been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia and unanimously approved.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will recollect probably that within the last five years a similar sum has been appropriated to this object.

Mr. HARLAN. I will state to the Senate the necessity for this. It grows out of the destruction of property outside of the limits of the city during the progress of the war. While property inside of the cities was preserved by the presence of the Army it is known to all of us that they overran the plantations outside; fences were destroyed; orchards were destroyed; buildings were torn down. Although the levy court now levy the ultimate tax which they can levy under the law, it does not enable them to erect enough school-houses to accommodate the children.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not change the law and make them levy more?

Mr. HARLAN. We intend to do that; but they now need a little help in order to bring them up. The valuation of property has greatly decreased, and the number of poor people living in that part of the District has been greatly augmented. Very many laborers and people engaged in humble employments have settled outside of the corporate limits of Georgetown and Washington in order to find homes at a cheap rent, who are unable to pay any tax. I do not think any Senator, if he were familiar with the condition of the District, would object to furnishing this slight aid. I believe it is the only bounty we have asked for the District for this session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I offer this as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the city of Georgetown, the city of Washington, and the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, be, and they are hereby, authorized to levy and collect a special tax on the taxable property within their respective jurisdictions, for the erection of school-houses and the support of public schools, not exceeding fifty cents on each $100 for any one year, to be assessed and collected as other taxes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To what does that apply?

Mr. HARLAN. It increases the maximum amount of tax that may be assessed and collected by the proper authorities, in pursuance of the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont. In the District outside the cities the maximum is now twenty-five cents on the $100 of assessable property.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To be consistent, I suppose I ought to suggest that this does not seem to be exactly germane to this bill.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope the Senator will not make that objection. I am very anxious that this provision should go through, and I think it is important for the welfare of the citizens of the District that it should be passed. It might fail in any other form.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer in behalf of my colleague, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] who has been called away by pressing business, an amendment which has the sanction of the Committee on Commerce, and which the Committee on Appropriations, I believe, have agreed to, to come in on page 9, after line one hundred and eighty-nine:

For a life-boat to be stationed at the south end of Narragansett beach, Rhode Island, $2,000.

It is important for the safety of human life.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Committee on Commerce recommend it?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am also requested by my colleague to offer an amendment of which he gave notice to the Committee on Appropriations, and which has the sanction, I believe, of the Committee on Manufactures. Some time ago I had the honor to offer a proposition, which was accepted by the Senate, raising a commission to make some experiments in regard to the cultivation and cottonization of flax. The result of those experiments, although they did not lead to any process by which flax could be manufactured upon cotton machinery, has been exceedingly satisfactory. Flax has been used for a great many purposes for which it was not used before. It is used for admixture with wool in place of cotton to very great advantage, making a better fabric and a better mixture and better colors. The appropriation for that purpose, which was $20,000, was not exhausted. Only $9,500 were used, and the balance has lapsed into the Treasury under the general law. The amendment which I now offer provides that the balance of that appropriation, $10,500, may be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture to test the cultivation and preparation of madder-root in this country. We have the climate, we have the soil, we have every facility for the preparation of this important commodity, which now takes a great deal of money out of the country, except that labor is too high here, and we only require some labor-saving invention, such as American ingenuity has applied to almost every other process of manufacture, and it will enable us to save a large amount of money that we now lose. The amendment is to add to the appropriations in the bill:

For experiments in the cultivation and preparation of the madder-root, $10,500, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. COLE. I would like to know, in the first place, if this has the indorsement of any committee; and if so, what committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. The sanction of the Committee on Manufactures, and has been before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COLE. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Manufactures, and there has been no meeting of that committee this session. This is a proposition to experiment in reference to an agricultural product. I do not know any good reason why there should be an appropriation by the General Government for the purpose of carrying on a mere experiment of this sort.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will correct myself; it was the Committee on Agriculture. I thought it was the Committee on Manufactures. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is here.

Mr. COLE. Then, as to the merits of the measure, I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say that his particular part of the Union is very well adapted to this product. It seems to me, if that is the case, it should be carried on without any appropriation from the General Government. I do not see that it has any more merit than any other proposition for a mere experiment. I do not think, indeed, it has half as much merit as an experiment as some propositions that have been offered to this bill and have not been received.

Mr. CAMERON. Perhaps I can make an explanation that will meet the views of the Senator from California. Some years ago there was an appropriation made of $20,000 to make experiments in the culture of linen flax, and experiments upon machinery for using flax so as to make it more easily manufactured, to make it more easily produced into cloth, as cotton is. Experiments were made until they expended $9,500 of the $20,000, and the balance is, or ought to be, in the Treasury. There is an unexpended balance of $10,500 of that appropriation; and now it is proposed, and I think very wisely, that the balance of that appropriation shall be used, so far as it may be necessary, to bring the madder-root into proper cultivation in this country.

Madder is a production of India. For long years it was brought entirely from India into France, into Holland, and into England. It is used, as everybody knows, very largely as a dye-stuff in this country. In Holland it is produced upon the dykes and other waste lands. In France, down upon the Rhone, the river which empties into the Mediterranean at Marseilles, all the swamp lands are now occupied in the production of the madder-root; and so valuable has it been to that country that a monument costing hundreds of thousands of dollars has been erected to the laboring man who first introduced it into that country. On the dykes of Holland, where they can produce nothing else, they produce the madder-root. It is believed that in our southern country here, with a climate as favorable as the valley of the Rhone, and a soil part of it as useless and yet as productive as the dykes of Holland, this root can be produced in any quantity. I am not able to give the proper statistics, but some millions of dollars, five or six millions, I think, are expended annually in bringing this dye-stuff to our country. If we can, by an expenditure of five or ten million dollars in experiments, make this one of the products of our own country, we shall be doing a benefit to the country. It has been well said that whoever causes two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before is a public benefactor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what this experiment contemplates; whether it is an experiment under the personal supervision of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and on the public grounds?

Mr. CAMERON. No; the expenditure is to be under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture in the country.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What particular section of the country is supposed to be adapted to this?

Mr. CAMERON. All the southern States; Virginia and Maryland, and especially North Carolina. It is believed that with their climate on their soil madder can be raised without any difficulty; but some money must be expended so as to induce people to go into the cultivation. The suggestion is made by the Senator from Rhode Island, not now present, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] who is a large manufacturer as we all know, and in whose intelligence we all have confidence. If he were here he could give the statistics, which would, I am sure, satisfy the Senate of the propriety of this. I only know in general terms that it would be a great benefit to the country to make this one of our annual products, and I trust the appropriation will be made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will ask to have a letter read from the Commissioner of Agriculture on this subject, and I will say that I think my friend from California does not show his usual generosity, after we have been voting all sorts of things for his section of country, to object to this little appropriation of an unexpended balance we have saved out of previous appropriations.

Mr. COLE. There is no telling where this will end. If we make this appropriation it may result in putting upon us the necessity of sending this madder-root all over the United States. I do not know where it is to end. If it were to end with this appropriation it might probably be less obnoxious.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is an unexpended appropriation, which has lapsed into the Treasury, that was made for experiments in flax two or three years ago. This is only to apply the balance of it.

Mr. COLE. It is a balance of an appropriation which was made for another and very distinct purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. COLE. I do not see why it is different from an appropriation out and out from the Treasury. The money has gone into the Treasury, and it seems to me it is just like voting a new appropriation of $10,500.

Mr. CAMERON. Agriculture in this country has been an experiment from the first settlement of the country, and is still an experiment. We are every year going on to improve. I suppose all the men who are past forty years of age remember that sixty years ago the red clover was not in this country until it was brought from abroad, and nothing has given so much benefit to the agriculture of the country as the introduction of the red clover. Timothy, which makes the great amount of the hay of all the northern States, was brought into this country not more than seventy years ago.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask my friend if they were brought here by an appropriation made out of the Treasury by the General Government?

Mr. CAMERON. That is hardly a fair question. Certainly they were not, because seventy years ago the Government's whole revenue was not more than five or six millions a year, and its expenditures were certainly not more than that; but we have become stronger and able to protect interests which have benefited the country every year since then. I do not think the Senator from Maine will vote against this appropriation when we have been doing so much for his fisheries and forests up there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I only wanted to know whether private interests had not done some of these things?

Mr. CAMERON. Private enterprise in the State of Maine was very much stimulated by appropriations of the General Government in favor of the fisheries, and so I could tell you of other things.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter called for by the Senator from Rhode Island will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WASHINGTON, June 24, 1883.

SIR: In answer to yours of the 23d instant relative to the unexpended appropriation for cottonizing flax, and to the feasibility of madder production, I have the honor to observe that the unexpended balance, after the committee's investigations, was $10,500, which has been covered in the Treasury, and therefore cannot be reached except by an appropriation for the specific purpose.

I would respectfully suggest the importance of a practical experiment, conducted under Government auspices, for the discovery of labor-saving processes of culture, and more economical modes of preparation of the root for market, points in which are presented the only difficulties which confront the business in this country. Such test is not likely to be undertaken voluntarily by individuals, and can be accomplished by the Government at a slight expense.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HORACE CAPRON,
Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM SPRAGUE, United States Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have an amendment to offer now which does not take any money out of the Treasury. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws that regulate the price of labor in the Government Printing Office be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and it shall be the duty of the Congressional Printer to contract with the persons in that employment at such prices as are for the interest of the Government, and are just to those employed.

There are several laws and regulations that have been inserted from time to time in appropriation bills which regulate the price of labor in the Government Printing Office and create a great deal of embarrassment to the Superintendent in carrying it on. This amendment repeals those laws, and allows him to make contracts just the same as all other heads of Departments do with persons who do work for them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does this repeal the eight-hour law?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it does not affect that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do those laws do any more than provide that he shall pay the same price that is paid for the same kind of work outside?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a law compelling the Congressional Printer to pay the same prices that are paid for similar work in this city. There is a Typographical Society here, composed exclusively of those who are employed, not the employers, and they regulate the price, and a majority of the members of this society are employed in the Government Printing Office. The employment of printers by the Government is so large that they make a majority of all the printers in this city. This society, of which they form a majority, meets and regulates the price, and that becomes the price which private employers pay; and then they carry to the Superintendent a certified copy of the resolution they have passed, and he has to pay the same price under the law, the result of which is that frequently he has to pay twenty or thirty per cent. more than is paid elsewhere. And not only that, but he has to submit to the dictation of this society as to how many apprentices he shall have. The result is to place the whole Government Printing Office under the control of that society, a majority of which is composed of those who are working in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SHERMAN. I inquire whether, since the eight-hour law has passed, they have not worked under that law and yet received the same wages that they did for ten hours labor?

Mr. ANTHONY. That will be so, of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not so now?

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not know that that bill had become a law yet; but whenever it becomes a law of course they will receive the same wages for working eight hours that other printers receive for working ten hours. But, Mr. President, this does not interfere with the eight-hour law. I would not have the temerity to stand up against the just principles of political economy that regulate the hours of labor between employers and employed. I should be afraid of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] if I did. But I think the prices may be left to the parties hiring and the parties hired. I desire that all those employed in the Government Printing Office in this city should have the highest wages that are paid for similar services anywhere; but when you pay them higher wages than are paid elsewhere the result is that it becomes a favor to get into the Government Printing Office, and political influence is constantly used to put in political men instead of good printers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing a question, and that is whether the Superintendent of Public Printing has not informed him that since the passage of the eight-hour law he will be compelled to ask for twenty per cent. additional appropriation unless this measure shall pass?

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose he will have to ask for an additional appropriation anyhow, because even after this proposition passes he is compelled, under the law of Congress, to pay for eight hours' work the same that other people pay for ten hours' work.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator must be mistaken about that, because it was demonstrated the other day by Senators that they would do more work in eight hours than they possibly could do in ten, and have time for great intellectual improvement besides. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understand that the Commissioner of Agriculture, who has contracts for labor, will be compelled to ask for an addition of twenty per cent. to his appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. There was an amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] requiring that any alterations in the Capitol should be done under the direction of the architect of the Capitol extension. I have made two or three attempts since I have been here to save those beautiful works of art, the bronze doors, among the most beautiful things of the kind in existence. Those doors are now placed in the very position that would have been selected if the object had been to place them where they could be least seen, least appreciated, most injured, and to the greatest inconvenience of passers-by. They are in a narrow passage. They face inward instead of the valves being turned outward, as they should be, so as to be exhibited. They collect a crowd around there which impedes the passage from one House to the other; and the fine points of the bronze are continually abraded by persons passing through with umbrellas and canes; and a number of small pieces, such as swords and caps and things that are not very tightly fastened, have been taken off and carried away. It may be said that these doors belong to that part of the Capitol which is under the charge of the House of Representatives, but the Speaker of the House desires that what I propose shall be done; and I did at the last session have the approbation of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings to it; but a simple resolution passed by one House can hardly be passed by the other; but if the amendment which I now offer be adopted on this bill I think it will save these doors.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I beg the Senator not to put it on this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Allow the amendment to be read. It is perfectly germane to an amendment that has already been adopted. In fact, this amendment is to come in after that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert after the amendment adopted on the motion of Mr. CRAGIN—

And the architect of the Capitol extension, under the direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, is hereby authorized and directed to remove the bronze doors in the southern wing of the Capitol temporarily to some position where they will be safe from injury.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I had hoped after the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] this morning withdrew his general proposition for a funding system as an amendment to this bill, the Senate would take notice of that fact, and would not think it proper to make this an omnibus bill for all sorts of legislation. It must be an omnibus bill to some extent for all sorts of appropriations; but I submit that neither now, nor at any time hereafter, ought it to be regarded as a favorable opportunity to put on every species of legislation that can be conceived of from all the committees, to be precipitated upon the other House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will my friend allow me to remind him that he assented to an amendment to which this is precisely germane? This is only a continuation of the same amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I then made the remark with a loud voice, in the hearing and presence of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, that I thought it was not germane and ought not to be insisted upon; but I had not the slightest idea that he was going to make that a precedent for an application of this kind. I do not know that I am going to object, for I have not the slightest idea that it would be of any use; but I think hereafter I shall make a most stout resistance, if I have the honor to present another appropriation bill, to everything of this description.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will join the Senator in that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. With that pledge I will sit down.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of executing the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, concluded on the 9th day of August, 1842, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the State of Maine for ninety-one thousand one hundred and twenty-five acres of land assigned by said State to settlers under said article, a sum equal to $1.25 per acre; and to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for twenty-six thousand one hundred and fifty acres of land a sum equal to $1.25 per acre: Provided, Before said sums are paid the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall agree with the United States that the settlers upon their public lands in the late disputed territory in Maine entitled to be quieted in their possessions, as ascertained by commissions heretofore instituted by said States, shall have been or shall be quieted by a release of the title of the said States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I must ask the Senator from New Hampshire where that comes from?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. It is not a new subject before the Senate. The amendment is reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I presume that answers the question of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think this is an "old stager," and my friend from New Hampshire ought to tell us a little about it. I examined this claim some years ago, if it is the same that I suppose it to be. It is not specially my duty to object, nor am I sufficiently aware of the facts to make any opposition; but I think the Senate ought to understand that this involves between one and two hundred thousand dollars, I do not know precisely how much.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. One hundred and forty-six thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not now sufficiently familiar with the history of the case to resist the appropriation, but I know it has been often considered heretofore and been rejected.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. This is not precisely the same question which has been before the Senate on former occasions. The bills which have been introduced into the Senate heretofore involved four claims: first, a claim for lands assigned to settlers under the fourth article of the treaty of Washington; second, a claim for the loss of timber upon the territory of Maine during the suspension of State jurisdiction between 1832 and 1839; third, a claim for the correction of an error made at the Treasury in computing the interest on the expenditures made by the State of Maine in defending her territory; and, fourth, a claim for interest upon advances made by Massachusetts in the war of 1812-15. This amendment drops all these claims except the first.

Under the fourth article of the treaty of Washington it was provided that those parties who had come in from the province of New Brunswick and settled upon the territory of Maine, either by grants from the Government of New Brunswick or without any grant simply came in and squatted upon the territory, should be quieted in their possession, and this by the appropriate virtue of the treaty-making power, but the fee-simple of the territory was in Maine and Massachusetts. Maine and Massachusetts now come forward and simply claim that the United States Government, which took from those two States their territory and gave it to these private parties, shall pay them for the land thus taken from them; and the Congress of the United States has already adjudicated upon this question. There have been, I will say, seven favorable reports made to the House of Representatives and the Senate on this subject. One I remember was made by the present President of the Senate; one by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER]; one by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. JOOLITTLE].

Mr. SUMNER. I would remind my friend that the report of the Senator from Wisconsin was a very elaborate document, going into the whole subject.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. There was also one from Mr. Clark, my predecessor. All these reports were favorable. I had this matter under consideration in the House of Representatives, investigated it thoroughly, and am entirely convinced that it is an honest claim and should be allowed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to ask the Senator whether it was not provided by that treaty that Massachusetts and Maine should receive $300,000? What was that for?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that the fourth article of the treaty was not in the first draft of the treaty. It was put in at the suggestion of the commissioners of Massachusetts and Maine; but the $300,000 clause was in the fifth article of the treaty before the fourth article of the treaty was inserted, and it was simply to pay Massachusetts and Maine for three million acres of land which they lost by the treaty, and which went to New Brunswick. I will say, furthermore, that the United States did not lose that amount of $300,000, for New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, all three, received large additions to their territory by this treaty. The United States also received over four million acres of mineral territory between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods—between Pégion river on the north and Fond du Lac and St. Louis river on the south—a tract of land vastly more valuable than all that Maine lost; so that the United States was a gainer, though it paid Maine and Massachusetts $300,000 for assenting to the treaty.

I will say, also, that in 1843, the year after this treaty was ratified, Maine and Massachusetts appointed commissioners to make a survey of the lands possessed by these parties who had come in from New Brunswick, and they came to the United States Treasury and asked that those commissioners should be paid for their services, and they were so paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and thereby the United States Government acknowledged the right of Maine and Massachusetts to this indemnity.

Furthermore, there were two grants of townships, the grant of Eaton and the grant of Plymouth. The parties who held those grants came to Congress and asked that Congress should pay them for the land which individuals had taken under the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, and Congress allowed over forty thousand dollars to the holders of those grants of Eaton and Plymouth.

Again, on the 2d of February, 1802, the agents of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts conveyed to the trustees of Williams College a township of land lying on the conventional line established by the treaty of Washington as the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick. In 1832 the agent of the trustees of the college conveyed the land to one Little. On the 12th of August, 1841, George Watson obtained a grant of a portion of this land from the province of New Brunswick, and was in possession of the premises at the time the treaty was ratified. Little brought a suit in the supreme court of Maine for the recovery of his land. The court decided that as a treaty was the supreme law it overrode a title derived from the State, and that the tenant could hold his land under the fourth article of said treaty. The court closes its decision in these words: "The demandant must seek compensation for the loss of his lands from the justice of his country."

And Mr. Little came here and was paid for that land. Now, it seems to me a perfectly clear case; it seems to me that Congress has foreclosed this case; that it has already adjudicated this claim.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for information; what did Maine and Massachusetts do?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. They lost the land which was taken from them by parties who came over from New Brunswick under a grant from the government of New Brunswick, or came over and squatted without any grant whatever upon lands that belonged to Maine and Massachusetts during the time this question was in controversy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And by treaty that land was ceded.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. By force of the treaty it went to the parties who were upon the land.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can explain the whole matter just as it stands in a very few words. This was a disputed line. We were in constant collision on the border there with Great Britain as to where the true line was. The fact as to where the line was was finally pretty well understood between the parties. Great Britain, however, desired to get a portion of the territory, and her great object was to have facilities for making a railroad between her provinces. She sent over a minister plenipotentiary to settle the question. The contracting powers agreed finally, or tried to agree, that a particular line should be adopted, which was confessedly within the limits of the State of Maine. That was done. A treaty was made with Great Britain called the treaty of Washington. The result of that treaty was to cut off about three million acres belonging to the State of Maine. It also embraced the running of a new line, or rather an agreement that the line claimed by New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, as their northern boundary, which had always been disputed by Great Britain, should be conceded to be the true line. By that means the Government got an important military position in New York, Rouse's Point, which was unquestionably on British territory; and a little strip of territory, which was also in dispute, was added to New Hampshire and Vermont. On the other hand Great Britain got from Maine about three million acres. For that we received $300,000, specified I think in the fifth article.

Mr. CONNESS. That is as much as the Indians get for their lands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We do not trouble ourselves about the price, that was settled; but another article was that by which it was agreed between the high contracting parties, Great Britain and the United States, that the settlers on the public lands in the State of Maine should be quieted in their titles. Lands had been settled by parties from New Brunswick. The result was to take a very considerable number of acres in addition—I suppose it is correctly specified in the amendment—out of the lands belonging to the State of Maine; and they were very fine lands, too, up there in that section of country, perhaps some of the richest lands in Maine, and transfer them to these settlers, who had no title whatever under anybody. They were taken by the agreement between the parties, and our supreme court held that that being a treaty was properly binding upon us. As that was taken from Maine by the Government of the United States, the claim is that it shall be paid for at the rate of $1 25 an acre, which is the rate paid for public lands. Lands have been sold in that region within a very short period for from two to eight dollars an acre, never less than two dollars. Upon this claim of the State of Maine there have been seven distinct reports by committees of Congress, four in the Senate and three in the House of Representatives, all favorable, all saying that it was property taken from Maine for the benefit of the Government of the United States, which the United States should pay for. That is the simple case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise an objection to this amendment, on the ground that it provides for a private claim within the meaning of the thirtieth rule. It is the same point that has been made before, and on which, according to my recollection, this claim has been previously excluded. The latter clause of the thirtieth rule says:

"No amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation."

There are two answers that have been heretofore made to this point: first, that a claim by a State is not a private claim; but that has never been held. It has been held in many cases that a claim by a State as well as by an individual, is a private claim. A private claim is where money is claimed to be due to an individual or a State or a corporation, for past services or for past debts. The second answer has been that it is to carry out a treaty stipulation; but it cannot be saved under that clause, because the fourth article of the treaty referred to expressly, on its face, shows that there was no stipulation for the payment of the money. The Chair will have to look at the treaty in order to determine the question. There was no stipulation in the treaty to pay any sum of money for these lands, or anything of the kind.

The general question arising on the Ashburton treaty I suppose is known. We made a new boundary line, settled a long dispute in which it is claimed that the Government of the United States surrendered up a large amount of land to New Brunswick, but we got compensation in other parts of the country. At any rate it was a settlement by the nation of a disputed boundary line, Great Britain claiming for New Brunswick considerably more than we surrendered, according to my recollection; but I cannot speak positively on that point. The question now is whether this is a claim provided for by a treaty. I say it is not, and therefore it does not come within the rule. The fourth article of the treaty referred to reads:

"All grants of land made by either party, within the limits of the territory which by this treaty falls within the dominions of the other party, shall be held valid, ratified, and confirmed, to the persons in possession under such grants, to the same extent as if such territory had by this treaty fallen within the dominions of the party by whom such grants were made."

It seems the State of Maine had granted land beyond the prescribed boundary to its citizens in New Brunswick, and those grants in New Brunswick were confirmed by Great Britain, while Great Britain had granted lands within the conceded boundary which Maine also confirmed. The two parties confirmed the grants made by each other; and the article further provided:

"And all equitable possessory claims, arising from a possession and improvement of any lot or parcel of land by the person actually in possession, or by those under whom such person claims, for more than six years before the date of this treaty, shall, in like manner, be deemed valid, and be confirmed and quieted by a release to the person entitled thereto, of the title to such lot or parcel of land so described, as best to include the improvements made thereon; and in all other respects the two contracting parties agree to deal upon the most liberal principles of equity with the settlers actually dwelling upon the territory falling to them, respectively, which has heretofore been in dispute between them."

It is manifest that upon this language no claim could be made by any one. If grants had been made in the State of Maine by Great Britain, and the settlers had actually taken possession of the lands granted and occupied them for six years, the grants were approved, ratified, and confirmed, and the Government of the United States guaranteed to treat those settlers under British grants in good faith as it would citizens of the State of Maine; and so vice versa grants had been made by the State of Maine in New Brunswick, citizens of Maine had settled in New Brunswick, and Great Britain guaranteed and recognized and made valid their possessory rights if they had been in possession six years; but no claim, either by the State of Maine or by the State of Massachusetts, or by any individual, could be made against the Government of the United States under this article. Consequently this claim of $146,000 does not arise out of the execution of a treaty. There is no treaty stipulation in this article that the United States shall pay either to Great Britain or to the State of Maine, or to the settlers upon these lands, or to anybody else, any sum of money, or make any compensation to them directly or indirectly. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the equity of this claim to know much about it, but I know very well that it is a claim which has been here many years. I have a distinct recollection of it myself since 1860. I think it ought to be sent to the Court of Claims, or to the Committee on Claims, and if they shall report in favor of it I shall not have the slightest objection to providing for it in the regular way; but it seems to me it is not right to put a disputed private claim on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a question of a good deal of importance, and the Chair will submit the decision of it to the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The point taken is rather a narrow one; and a similar amendment has been decided several times by the Chair to be in order. It was repeatedly so decided in regard to the claim that was made by individuals under the same clause of the treaty. There is no specific provision in the treaty itself that these lands shall be paid for by the Government; but the language of the rule is general, "to carry out a treaty stipulation." The treaty stipulation provides for taking lands by the Government of the United States belonging to the State of Maine, and conveying them to somebody else without the assent of the State of Maine, and valuable lands. That is done by treaty. The United States take them and convey them to others. Now, is it to be understood that when that was the treaty stipulation, the Government meant to take lands to which they had no title themselves from the owners and transfer those lands to somebody else without paying for them? because that is the idea of the Senator. Because it is not specifically said in this article of the treaty that these lands shall be paid for by the United States, he argues that it is to be presumed that they were not to be paid for, but were to be taken by the United States without the assent of the owners and transferred to somebody else.

As I stated, it has been repeatedly ruled by the Chair that this did specifically come within the provision of the rule, the language "to carry out a treaty stipulation;" and it has been also so ruled by the Senate within my recollection. Once it was ruled the other way, and I think properly ruled the other way on the reason given for it; and that was that it was brought up after twelve o'clock at night and offered on an appropriation bill on the last night of the session, when no explanation whatever could be given of it and there was no time for debate. That was the point made, and on that occasion the Senate refused to hear it on the point of order made. Congress never has decided this claim, but it has decided the principle in two other specific cases. In the case of Mr. Little, where I presented the petition myself, and in the case of the owners of the Eaton and Plymouth grants, so called, Congress gave indemnity to individuals for land taken precisely in the same way. Then comes the question whether they will make the same indemnity to the State, being the owners of the land, that they made to the individual; and it stands precisely upon the same principle. There is not the slightest difference in the world.

Now, we bring ourselves within the first branch of the rule; we have the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Relations which has settled this question, I believe, three times, and to which it was referred at this very session. It has always gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Senate and to the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House of Representatives. It was deemed proper to go to that committee because it was under the provisions of a treaty, and all the reports have been made from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. Now, shall it be said that this is not to carry out the provisions of a treaty simply because the treaty does not say in so many words that this land shall be paid for, and merely says that it shall be taken and appropriated? That is hanging on a very slender thread and making a point so nice that nobody, it seems to me, except my very astute friend from Ohio could possibly see it. I am perfectly willing to leave the question to the Senate, and I hope they will not get rid of the equity of the claim by ruling it out on a point of order. If they say we are not to be paid for the land thus taken it is another question.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Ohio, as I understood his argument, did not make any serious objection to the equity of this case. I understood him to found his objection, so far as he ventured upon any, upon a technicality, upon a mere point of form. He says that the proposition as now moved is not in order. Very well; the Senator from Maine who has just taken his seat has answered him completely on one point. He has shown that this is a case arising under a treaty. Who can doubt it? You cannot adopt the contrary conclusion without going into a technicality which it seems to me is entirely out of place on this occasion. Clearly this case does arise under a treaty. But for the treaty it never would arise; but for the treaty it could not have occurred; but for the treaty it could not find a place before Congress. It therefore is ultra technical to say that it does not arise under the provisions of a treaty simply because the terms of that treaty have not in so many words specifically anticipated this precise case. I say that it does arise under the provision of a treaty.

But then there is another objection of the Senator from Ohio which I wish to meet. The Senator from Ohio treats this as a private claim. I object to that point. It is the claim of a State, and I insist that the claim of a State cannot be treated as a private claim. Why, sir, according to the most familiar usage of this body resolutions from the Legislature of a State are treated very differently from those of a public body or from the petition of individuals, however important or eminent the individuals may be. A State in this Chamber has a distinctive character; a State is part of the Government of this Republic; and the claim of a State cannot be excluded from an appropriation bill on any mere technicality as a private claim. It is not a private claim; it is the claim of a State, to be recognized as such, having a distinctive character, and entitled always to respect in this Chamber. I object, therefore, to the point of the Senator from Ohio. I say that this, in the first place, is not a private claim; and in the next place, assuming that it is a private claim, I say that it comes under the provisions of a treaty; and here I stop. I will not go into the equity.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. The Senator from Ohio says that the British Government quieted the titles of those who had gone over from Maine and settled in the territory of New Brunswick, and that the United States agreed to quiet the claims of those who had come over from New Brunswick and settled upon the territory of Maine. That is not quite correct. It will be remembered by Senators that the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick and Canada was the old boundary of Quebec settled in 1763. After the revolutionary war we simply affirmed in 1783 the boundary of Quebec. There was no dispute as to the boundary until after the war of 1812, when England found it necessary to push her troops up from Halifax to Quebec. English statesmen saw then the advantage of a military road over this line, which belonged to the State of Maine, and when our commissioners were negotiating the treaty of Ghent the British Government made an application to those commissioners for the purchase of this territory; that is, for "such a variation of the line of frontier as may secure a direct communication between Quebec and Halifax." The commissioners replied "that they have no authority to cede any part of the State of Massachusetts even for what the British Government might consider a fair equivalent."

So the matter went on. In all the negotiations it was assumed by the officers of the United States Government, as well as by the diplomats of Great Britain, that neither party had the right to consummate a treaty without the assent of Massachusetts and Maine; and Mr. Webster was the first man who ever intimated that the United States Government by the treaty-making power could cede away any portion of the territory of a State without the assent of that State; and even he thought it so doubtful a case that he asked to have commissioners appointed by Massachusetts and Maine in order to secure their assent to the treaty; and it was only after those commissioners had given their assent to the treaty that the treaty was consummated.

There were seven million acres of land at issue between Great Britain and the United States. The State of Maine lost three million acres, which were given over to New Brunswick, which she did not possess before, so that if people from Maine had gone over and settled on that territory New Brunswick did not lose anything, but she gained three million acres of land, and settlers, too. On the other hand, the State of Maine lost the land which these squatters from New Brunswick had taken away from the States of Maine and Massachusetts without one cent of remuneration. So the cases are not parallel at all.

Furthermore, the commissioners from Massachusetts and Maine, who were the leading men of that day in those two States, never would give their assent to the treaty until this fourth article had been put into the treaty; and I can give you their opinion as to whether Massachusetts and Maine should be indemnified for this lost land. First, I will give you the opinion of Governor Kent, one of the leading men of Maine. He says:

"In reference to the stipulation in the fifth article for the payment to Maine and Massachusetts of the sum of $300,000, I say, as one of the commissioners of Maine, that I considered that sum as paid for the surrender on the part of the two States of their claim to the land which, by the treaty, fell within the British dominion; and I never regarded it or thought of it as being a compensation for the land, the title to which was to be confirmed or granted under the fourth article."

"I feel impelled to say that I thought at the time, and still think, that Maine is entitled to great consideration on the part of the Union and her sister States for her readiness to sacrifice so much of what she rightly deemed her own for the sake of settling a long-vexed question. It is difficult for any one who was not familiar with the controversy, and with the sensitive and outraged feelings of her citizens, and the deep convictions of their rights, to appreciate the extent of those sacrifices of feelings and property, but having determined to yield that assent, she has faithfully and promptly performed her part of the contract, and assisted the United States to fulfill its obligations."

"It will be observed that the fourth article does not provide that these grants and confirmations shall be made by the States of Maine and Massachusetts, but simply that the United States shall cause them to be confirmed, &c. Now, it was well known that all the land would belong to Maine under the general law of eminent domain, or to Maine and Massachusetts under their special compact. If it had been understood that these States were to make the grants at their own expense, and without any claim for remuneration, it would have been so expressed; and the assent which was given by the commissioners of the two States would have bound them to such a distinct provision."

"Again, the States named could at any time grant or confirm titles to this land without consulting the United States. Why, then, was such a provision inserted in the treaty, so far as the States were concerned, if no obligation was assumed by the United States? They could have made the sacrifice of all this land if they had thought fit without compensation, without any treaty stipulation."

And Mr. Abbott Lawrence, who is well known to members of the Senate, our former minister to the Court of St. James, also gave his assent to this opinion of Governor Kent. In 1844 the Legislature of Maine authorized its Governor, only two years after the treaty was consummated, to come here and claim indemnity for this land, and the Legislature of Maine in 1845 passed this resolve:

"Resolved, That Maine has a just and equitable claim upon the Government of the United States for full remuneration for her proportion of all lands set off to claimants under the provisions of article four of the treaty of Washington, and the Governor is hereby authorized and requested to present the same to the General Government for adjustment and allowance."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to say simply that in this same fourth article there is a provision that releases shall be given. The United States Government stipulates in this fourth article that releases shall be given for these lands. The Government of the United States could not do it; the only persons who could execute releases were the owners. The State of Maine is the owner, and she wishes remuneration before executing the release.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. And let me say that there are over a thousand persons to-day waiting for these releases. They cannot sell those lands because they have no good title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire how this claim comes to be before the Committee on Foreign Relations; whether it was referred to the committee by the Senate?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Yes, sir; referred to that committee in the Senate and House of Representatives both. It is under a treaty; the treaty of Washington.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In what form was it referred? How did it come to be referred at this session of Congress?

Mr. FESSENDEN. At this session of Congress it was not referred; it was taken before the committee at my request, having been referred there before.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is a private claim, and should have been considered with a view to a separate bill, if it has merits, by the Committee on Claims. I do not think the Committee on Foreign Relations can ex officio take jurisdiction over a particular amendment to a bill because it is a committee taking charge of a piece of business not referred to it specially, and it is out of its jurisdiction and offering an amendment to a bill where it is not at all germane.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator that the Committee on Foreign Relations is the only committee in the House of Representatives and the Senate who ever have had charge of this claim. They have always had charge of it by reason of its arising under a treaty. Here is a report made by Mr. DOOLITTLE in the Thirty-Seventh Congress:

"The Committee on Foreign Relations having been instructed by the Senate to inquire what further legislation, if any, is required to carry into effect the fourth article of the treaty with Great Britain of August 9, 1842, submitted the following report."

He submitted a report with a much larger bill than this. It has been always before that committee, and none other.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I have one by Senator WADE, one by Senator Clark, one by Mr. Rice, of the House of Representatives, and one by myself, all from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. The question before the Senate, as I understand, is a point of order, which is about to be decided by Senators, very few of whom, I judge, have read for themselves the rule. I supposed I remembered generally the rule until I heard the argument of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and then I supposed that it must be quite different from my recollection in order to bear out the argument which he based upon it. I understood him to reason this question as if it were to be decided upon the test of whether it arises under a treaty or not. That was quite contrary to my remembrance of the rule, and I have referred to it. I have it here, and I beg to call the attention of Senators to the fact that if it does arise under a treaty, that clothes it with no admissibility under this rule, as I conceive:

"And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

I take it there is no doubt in the minds of a majority of the Senate that this is a private claim. I do not understand the honorable Senator from Maine to deny that. I do not think it can be denied legally, although I understood the Senator from Massachusetts in a certain sense to make a distinction between this and a claim due to an individual. The question, then, is whether it is to carry out the provisions of a treaty stipulation. I should like to know what treaty stipulation there is to be carried out by this appropriation. The argument is that the Government of the United States having made a treaty with Great Britain settling boundaries and other considerations, one effect of that treaty was to divest the State of Maine, or constructively divest it, of its title to certain lands, and that therefore, upon considerations ethical, upon considerations dehors the treaty, in a certain sense a claim arises over against the Government of the United States by the State of Maine. That presupposes at once that it is not to carry out a treaty stipulation. The very essence and gravamen of it is that in carrying out a treaty certain hardship is occurred to the State of Maine for which that State asks recompense of the General Government. If there was any treaty stipulation on this subject, certainly no legislation of this sort would be necessary. Therefore I humbly submit that although it arises under a treaty, manifestly it is not "to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend from New York will allow me, I will state that my recollection was that this claim has been heretofore excluded from the appropriation bills upon a point of order; and I am informed now by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] that that is the case. I have not been able to find it in the Journal, but my recollection is so.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Kansas stated to me that while he occupied the chair last year he did exclude this very claim on the point now made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. One word in reply. The language of this clause will satisfy everybody that the amendment is to carry out a treaty stipulation in so many words. What does the Government of the United States agree to do?

"And all equitable possessory claims arising from a possession and improvement of any lot or parcel of land by the person actually in possession or by those under whom such person claims, for more than six years before the date of this treaty, shall in like manner be deemed valid and be confirmed and quieted by a release to the person entitled thereto."

The Government of the United States stipulate that there shall be a quieting of title by a release. That is the treaty stipulation.

Mr. CONKLING. That has been done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; that has not been done, because there is nobody that can grant the release but the State of Maine, the owner of the land; and the State of Maine comes here and says, "Pay us the value of this land, which is estimated at $1 25 an acre, and we will grant these releases," and they cannot be granted without. The treaty cannot be carried out, this stipulation cannot be performed, unless the State of Maine—the owner of the land—executes these releases. They have never been executed, and, as my friend from New Hampshire suggests, to this day these men cannot sell their lands for anything like a good price, because this is a cloud upon their title. This very amendment says that so much money shall be paid to the State of Maine for these lands, but that it shall not be paid until she has executed releases according to the terms of the treaty. The stipulation of the treaty is directly that a release shall be given. Who is to give it? Of necessity the owners give it, and the United States must oblige the owners or prevail on the owners to do it. The amendment is therefore to carry out a treaty stipulation directly and properly, and for no other purpose, and that brings it directly within the exception of the rule.

Mr. CONKLING. It is very difficult even for the Senator from Maine, with his skill in discussion, to discuss this point of order without referring to the merits of the proposition, and it is difficult to meet what he suggests without referring to the merits of the proposition, which I did not mean to do; but I beg to suggest to him my view of the point which he now presents. The treaty stipulations were between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain. The provision was that releases should be executed quieting these titles, as the Senator says. Now admit, if you please, for the sake of the argument, that nobody could do that except the State of Maine, though that is a question which will be debated when we come to the merits of this proposition. It has been debated by those who have made minority reports on the subject, one of which I hold in my hand. But admitting that the State of Maine was the proper grantor in these quit-claims to be given, I ask the Senator where is the provision in this treaty that the Government of the United States should pay to the State of Maine the sums which are now proposed?

The Senator may say that if Maine was to release this land she ought to have a remedy over against the General Government. Granted; but the treaty is silent on that point, and Mr. ORTH, and three other gentlemen concurring with him in the minority report which I hold in my hand find, as I should fear if I were a friend of the proposition the Senate would find, that article five of the Ashburton treaty gave to the State of Maine her recompense, that a specific $300,000 was intended, as these four gentlemen find, to pay and liquidate this very equity now asserted. I do not mean to go into that, however. Suffice it to say, for the sake of my point, that the treaty stipulation is that these parties shall be quieted in their titles. That was done in 1842. Now, I ask, where is the treaty stipulation pursuant to which $1 25 per acre is to be paid by the General Government to the State of Maine for this debatable territory. I do not see any such provision as that, and I do not think the argument of the Senator goes to the purpose.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Allow me to ask a question. There is a somewhat parallel case to this which has lately come up in the House. We made a treaty with Russia last year by which we agreed to pay $7,200,000 for Alaska. The question came up in the House whether an appropriation for that should be put upon an appropriation bill or not. The Committee on Appropriations claimed that it belonged properly on that bill. I believe the Committee on Foreign Affairs contested that, because they wanted to manipulate the $7,200,000, thinking the appropriation might not get through if it went to the Committee on Appropriations; but the Committee on Appropriations claimed that it belonged to them under the rule, and that it should go on the appropriation bill. I want to know if that is not a parallel case to this?

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend will allow me now to turn his illustration upon him, it seems to me it points the precise moral which I seek to enforce here. There was a stipulation between the Government of the United States and the emperor of Russia that a specified sum of money should be paid by the one to the other for a particular purpose. That was of the very essence of the treaty stipulation; and when the House Committee on Appropriations said that it belonged to them they laid their hands upon a rule which declared that a sum of money to be paid under the requirements of a treaty stipulation came within their province.

Let me, however, to illustrate, put an additional question, growing out of that instance, to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. Suppose in that treaty Russia had said that she would quiet all titles, as in a certain sense she did say, which her citizens might have, or rights in the fisheries, and suppose interchangeably the United States had said that if any American, squatter or otherwise, asserted any claim there, that should be extinguished, would the honorable Senator say that because that treaty had been consummated, if some citizen came here with a grievance saying, "I am one of those cut off by this treaty stipulation; I am one of those deprived of what I otherwise might have had; and therefore I ask recompense from my superior, from my Government, which has over-slaughed my rights," would the honorable Senator say that an appropriation to ratify such a claim would be in pursuance of a treaty stipulation, controlled and provided for by it, so as to fall within this rule? Certainly he would not say that. What would he say? He would say, "Upon general principles of ethics, upon general principles of good faith between the Government and the citizen, here is a question of recompense arising which ought to be investigated; and if it is true that the Government, in its march toward this treaty, has trodden down the rights of a citizen, the Government will pause and stoop and repair those rights which she has incidentally injured or destroyed." That is what he would say; but he would not say that it was subject to a treaty stipulation, controlled and provided for by it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. The Senator asks me a question. I would say that the treaty could not be carried out in full until the party by whose authority these grants were to be made good had purchased the right of the party possessing it previously.

Mr. CONKLING. If it is put upon that ground, that runs into a discussion of the merits of this case; and when we come to them I think the Senator will need all his ability and ingenuity to vindicate the propositions, first, that the State of Maine owned this disputed territory, the object of the treaty being to determine whether she did or not; and, second, that the State of Maine as a State, or the people of Maine as a community, had a right to interpose and say, "We arrest the execution of this treaty; it is not completely executed until we release our citizens." I think both of these propositions will need as able a defense as my friend can give.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. And to dispute them successfully will need all the genius my friend from New York possesses. I think the treaty cannot be successfully carried out until the Government pays the State of Maine for private property it took from her for the purpose of consummating the treaty, and it could not have consummated the treaty, could not have secured the assent of the commissioners of Maine and Massachusetts until it had agreed to do that. It is of the very essence of the treaty and of justice itself that this Government should come up and meet the obligation which it laid itself under when it made the treaty.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the view taken of this matter by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine is obviously right. I take it to be a plain proposition whether a treaty stipulation on the part of the United States shall be executed or not; and I think that this appropriation of money is certainly plainly and unquestionably in the course of the execution of the stipulation in the Ashburton treaty. This matter has been up before the Senate repeatedly, and the only doubt upon my mind heretofore was on a very different point. I had no doubt that the territory ceded from the State of Maine to the United States was from 1783 within the limits of the State of Massachusetts; and the doubt in my mind was whether a treaty could be formed at all between the United States Government and a foreign Government that would deprive a State of any portion of its territory. But when the United States stipulates to make good the title to the ceded country to Great Britain—and this can only be done by procuring the consent of the State of Maine and the consent of the citizens of the State of Maine who owned the land that was ceded—I cannot conceive the least difficulty in assuming the position that an appropriation to pay for that land is an appropriation in execution of a treaty. I do not think there is any room for doubt at all.

I think it is in two senses a proper proposition for appropriation. In the first place, the treaty is the supreme law of the land, and is made so by the Constitution itself. In that sense the treaty is the law of the land; and this being in the course of the execution of the treaty is necessarily in the course of the execution of the law. I do not think there can be any reasonable doubt about the proposition that this is a plain proposition to appropriate money in the execution of a law of the United States, and is not proscribed by the rule of the Senate which is relied upon to have that effect.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to make one other brief observation. It seems to me that the rule of the Senate should not be extended beyond its natural import and signification. It is a rule in restriction of the business of the Senate and in restriction of the rights of Senators. It should, therefore, be construed literally, so as to restrict as little as possible. Now, I insist, that in the absence of any specific phrase in this rule applicable to a State, the rule cannot be applied to the claim of a State. I insist that the claim of a State, in the view of Congress and of its rules, can be in no sense a private claim. I may be wrong in that; but I cannot see the point otherwise. But, sir, I will say nothing more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the amendment under the thirtieth rule of the Senate in order?

The question being submitted, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes twenty-five, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to speak on the amendment, and I wish to have a short executive session, I will submit the motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 910) for the relief of the grantees of Ann D. Durning;

A bill (H. R. No. 1131) regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases for the protection of officers and agents of the Government, and for the better defense of the Treasury against unlawful claims;

A bill (H. R. No. 1344) to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 1343) to confirm the title to certain land to the Pueblo of Santa Ana, in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 166) for the relief of the owners of the land within the United States survey No. 3217, in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. No. 469) confirming the title to a tract of land in Burlington, Iowa.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 584) relating to the finding of indictments in the courts of the United States in the late rebel States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FOWLER and Mr. HARLAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened at five o'clock, and the Senate took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asking an appropriation for the purpose of paying the extra and temporary clerks that are absolutely necessary to carry on the business of the Indian Bureau for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the disbursing clerk of that Department, relative to certain reductions from the amounts estimated for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, now pending before Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 1343) to confirm the title to certain land to the Pueblo of Santa Ana in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 1344) to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (H. R. No. 910) for the relief of the grantees of Ann D. Durning.

The bill (H. R. No. 1131) regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases for the protection of officers and agents of the Government and for the better defense of the Treasury against unlawful claims was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is a resolution from the House of Representatives which, on my motion, was laid on the table a few days ago, in regard to the Assistant Librarian of the House. I am desired to ask for the present consideration of it, and I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relative to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that for the present Congress, commencing therewith, the Clerk is directed to pay from the contingent fund of the House, to the Assistant Librarian in charge of the Hall Library, the difference between his present pay and the pay of the file, printing, and engrossing clerks.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL JAMES A. MULLIGAN.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1129.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble to the bill recites that James A. Mulligan, on the 15th of June, 1861, was mustered into the service of the United States as colonel of the twenty-third Illinois infantry, known as the Irish Brigade, marched to the front in July, 1861, and from that time, excepting two months when a prisoner of war, was actively engaged in the military service of the Republic against armed rebels until he fell on the battle-field of Winchester, on the 26th day of July, 1864; that during two years of that military service he was assigned to the command of brigades and divisions, and performed the duties of brigadier and major general, but only received the pay of a colonel; that his widow and children are justly entitled to, and need for their support, the amount of pay which he would have received if he had been commissioned according to his respective commands in the field. In consideration of the premises the bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Marian Mulligan, widow of Colonel James A. Mulligan, the sum of $5,000, out of the money appropriated for the pay of the Army.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, there is a report accompanying this bill which I do not know that it is necessary to read. I will, however, make a statement in reference to the case.

The report briefly sets forth the facts of the case, and closes without any recommendation, leaving it to the judgment of the Senate whether the bill shall pass. The Committee on Claims took this course, not because they doubted the propriety of the bill, but because they feared that those having other cases might not discriminate them although radically distinguishable from this, and that this might thus be held as a precedent.

The circumstances of the claim are these: Colonel Mulligan was a promising young lawyer of Chicago, of Irish descent. Early in the rebellion he enlisted in the cause of the country and succeeded in raising a regiment, principally of Irishmen, eight hundred strong, and with the colors of the Union and the Irish flag floating together in his ranks he marched out of Chicago. He was given the command of Lexington, in Missouri; and there, with a force of twenty-five hundred men, resisted for a number of days an army of ten thousand rebels commanded by General Price; and he only surrendered when his men were fainting for the want of water and after he had fired his last cartridge. His skill and bravery on that occasion attracted the notice and admiration of the country, and Congress passed a vote of thanks to him and directed "Lexington" to be inscribed on his colors.

Three years after this, in 1864, he fell at Winchester, mortally wounded. His brother-in-law, the brother of his widow, a youth of about twenty years, came to his rescue, and he was shot down. There is an incident connected with General Mulligan's death which is worth recording. As his aids gathered around him to carry him from the field he used these words, "Lay me down and save the flag;" and those words have entered into the melodies of the country.

But in all this I do not know that the case is distinguishable from that of many other officers and soldiers who have bravely fallen before the flaming line of battle and left nothing but a legacy of sorrow and penury to their families. Colonel Mulligan's case is distinguishable from others, however, in this, that early in the rebellion by his enthusiastic adoption of the cause of the country at a most critical period he gave direction to the sentiment of the foreign element of this country, and thereby secured for us many valuable soldiers; and to-day the fact that those of foreign birth will fight the battles of this country has no insignificant influence on our relations with foreign countries; and I think it is eminently proper and wise that we should pay a tribute to that sentiment by conferring a benefit upon the widow and children of him who is a representative man.

Besides all this, Colonel Mulligan did not perform the duties of a colonel, but for three years he discharged the duties of a brigadier general and of a major general; and the difference between his pay as a colonel and that of brigadier general during the period is $6,700; and all that is asked is $5,000. And he stands, too, upon the roll during this whole period as a brigadier general, that commission having been conferred upon him at his death; and I may also observe that he was offered a commission as brigadier general and refused it because of his honorary obligations to his regiment to remain their colonel. Now, sir, that case may safely be made a precedent. If any officer of the Army has discharged the duties of a brigadier general through his whole course, if he stands upon the roll commissioned as a brigadier general, no matter when the commission was given him, and if he was actually tendered such a commission and refused it, let him receive the pay of a brigadier general. There is now and then a case where it is wise to act from our first generous impulses rather than from cold economical calculations; and this is one of those cases. I might go on and say that Colonel Mulligan expended all his property for his country; but as we are only asking the pay of a soldier and not charity, I do not think it necessary to enter into these considerations.

We cannot now by our action reach him; he has nobly done his work and gone to his rest; but we can benefit those who were dearer to him than self by performing an act of generous justice.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, I do not propose to add anything to what has been so well and so eloquently said by the Senator from New Jersey, but I rise simply to say that General Grant has recommended that this appropriation be made, and to state another fact connected with the biography of Colonel Mulligan. He presented himself at the office of the Governor of Illinois with his regiment, but so many troops offered themselves there that many had to be declined. So anxious, so persistent was he in his desire to enter the service, that he procured letters from Mr. Douglas, he came on to Washington, and got the consent of the President, Mr. Lincoln, to raise his regiment. All that I have to say is that he is one of the noblest men in the memory of the people of Illinois. He was one of the first to enter the service at the head of his Irish regiment, and he afterward commanded a brigade, and then commanded as major general. At the siege of Lexington he rendered service which, as the Senator from New Jersey well remarks, the country remembers with joy and gratitude. I sincerely hope that this bill will pass by a unanimous vote.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA M. JONES.

Mr. THAYER. I move to take up House bill No. 780, for the relief of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones.

Mr. WILLEY. That is a bill which comes from the Committee on Patents, and it involves questions of a great deal of interest to the community. I understand from the Senator from Nebraska that he proposes to object to the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Patents, and to insist on the passage of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. The report was prepared by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY.] The papers connected with it have been in his hands ever since the report was made. It is a case in which he has expressed to me a good deal of interest. It is a case which he has examined very thoroughly. Certain facts obtained by myself from the Patent Office since the report was made to the Senate, bearing very materially, as I conceive, on the merits of the case, were placed by me in his hands. He is not here to-night. I understand that he has probably gone home. That is the best information I can get in respect to him. The matter was acted upon in the committee two or three months ago, and I have partially forgotten the facts. I only recollect the case from a very distinct conviction that I had that the report of the committee recommending the amendment proposed was right, and that the bill ought not to pass as it came from the House of Representatives.

I submit to the Senate whether, under these circumstances, when the Senator from Connecticut, having charge of the bill, who has the evidence in his possession, is not here, the bill should be taken up. I can say that the bill involves very considerable interests, either belonging to the persons desiring this action on the part of Congress or to the community at large, for investments have been made in the manufacture of the article patented, and it seems to me but just to the community that the matter should be thoroughly investigated and thoroughly heard before the Senate. This investigation has been particularly made by the Senator from Connecticut. He has the facts in his hands, and the evidence in his possession, and I know not where to procure them. He is not here now, and I submit to the Senate whether, under the circumstances, it is proper to take up for consideration the case in his absence.

Mr. CONNESS. I happened, sir, yesterday, as I do every day, to be seated by the side of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, now absent. He had this bill upon his desk and was very anxious to get it up. I chatted with him in regard to it, and I said to him, "We will take it up, Mr. FERRY, and act upon it while you are absent, just as well as when you are here." He did not develop any feeling, I believe, or any disposition particularly in regard to it, and I hope we shall take up the bill and act on it.

Mr. THAYER. There has been an understanding between the Senator from Connecticut and myself that he would bring up this bill at the very first opportunity. We have spoken daily about it for several days past, and I tried to get the floor yesterday and the day before yesterday for the purpose of bringing up this bill, but failed to do so. To-day was the first time when I succeeded. I had no knowledge of the absence of the Senator from Connecticut to-day when I made the motion for an evening session for the purpose of acting on this bill. I do not know now that he has left the city, but I have observed, my attention being called to it by the chairman of the Committee on Patents, the Senator from West Virginia, or by his asking me if I knew where Mr. FERRY was, that he is not in his seat. If he was about to leave the city for a number of days it certainly was due to myself and to the Senate that he should have notified me if he wanted the bill to be delayed until his return.

Mr. POMEROY. It is so near the close of the session that I think the absence of a Senator is not sufficient reason for delaying the consideration of a bill.

Mr. WILLEY. Whether the Senate take up the bill or not I believe it my duty to submit the case to them, having a distinct and unequivocal conviction that this bill ought not to pass as it came from the House of Representatives. Having submitted the whole matter to the Senator from Connecticut, it being understood that he was to take it in charge, and having placed all the evidence in his possession, I am not prepared in his absence to take it up. After the Committee on Patents, upon investigation, have reported an amendment and suggested their opinion to the Senate, that the bill as it came from the other House ought not to pass, I submit whether it is fair to the Senator from Connecticut, and fair to the country, that the matter should be investigated here, when it cannot be fully heard.

I know, sir, that I have not merely to encounter the Senate; I could get along well enough with that, humble as I am; but there is a lady in the case, and a very highly intelligent and accomplished lady, too, as every Senator on this floor can, from his personal knowledge, testify, I have no doubt.

I have stated the case to the Senate; I have stated that I am not prepared to investigate the subject at this time. I stand here only with my conviction distinct and unequivocal that when the committee did investigate it I came to the conclusion that the bill as it came from the House of Representatives ought to be amended. The Senator from Connecticut had the papers placed in his hands, and made the report; and after it was made I furnished him with additional evidence which I procured from the Patent Office. Where it is now I know not. With this statement made to the Senate, if they see proper to take up the case in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut, and in the absence of evidence which I tell the Senate I do know has a material bearing on the case, they can do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, to take up the bill for consideration.

Mr. WILLEY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, Vickers, Williams, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Harlan, Morgan, Wade, and Willey—4.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Osborn, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wilson—25.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 780) for the relief of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble to the bill recites that the Commissioner of Patents did, on the 23d of February, 1866, upon the petition of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of the estate of Samuel T. Jones, deceased, extend for the period of seven years, from the 24th of February, 1866, the letters-patent of the United States granted to Samuel T. Jones on the 24th of February, 1852, for an invention in the manufacture of the white oxide of zinc, for which invention letters-patent had been granted unto him by the Government of Great Britain on the 23d day of July, 1850; and that doubts exist as to the power of the Commissioner to grant the extension after the expiration of fourteen years from the date of the foreign letters-patent. And the bill proceeds to the extension of the letters-patent of the United States for the term of seven years from and after the expiration of fourteen years from the date of the foreign letters-patent to be valid and binding, and the power of the Commissioner to make it is in all respects confirmed, and the letters-patent are hereby declared to be, and to have been, by force of the certificate of extension thereon indorsed, duly extended for the period of seven years from the 23d of July, 1864; but this act is not to operate during the period between the date of the English patent and the date of the original American patent.

The Committee on Patents and the Patent Office proposed to amend the bill by striking out the following words, in lines thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen, "that this act shall not operate during the period between the date of the English patent and the date of the original American patent," and in lieu thereof to insert:

That all persons who enjoyed the lawful use of the invention secured by said patent during the original term thereof may continue to use the same without liability therefor, as if this act had not been passed; and no person shall be held liable for using said invention after the expiration of the original term of the patent and before the approval of this act.

Mr. WILLEY. Now, sir, I shall have to do the best I can. There is a report in the case which I should be glad to have read. It may refresh my recollection.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, made by Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office:

The Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Martha M. Jones, praying for confirmation of a certain patent for an invention in the manufacture of white oxide of zinc, respectfully report:

That the petitioner is the widow and administratrix of Samuel T. Jones, deceased, who was the inventor of a certain process for the manufacture of white oxide of zinc. That the said Samuel T. Jones, in his lifetime, on the 23d day of July, 1850, obtained letters-patent in England for said invention, and afterward, on the 24th day of February, 1852, obtained also letters-patent for the same in the United States, both which patents, according to the laws of the United States, expired on the 23d day of July, 1864. That said Samuel T. Jones died in the year 1853, and no effort was made to obtain an extension of said patent by his administratrix till 1866, when the Commissioner of Patents no longer had jurisdiction of the case, and when the right to use the said invention had fully vested in the public, and was extensively enjoyed by manufacturers and others in different parts of the Union. The reason of the omission of the administratrix to apply for an extension at an earlier period was her ignorance of the existence of the English patent, but the committee are of opinion that her misfortune in this respect does not entitle her to defeat the rights lawfully acquired by those engaged in the manufacture and use of this article after her patent had ceased to exist. The Commissioner of Patents, in 1866, being also in ignorance of the existence of the English patent, granted an extension of the American patent, which extension is utterly void from want of jurisdiction in the Commissioner at the date thereof. Your committee are willing, however, to give validity to the said extension from the expiration of the original patents in such a manner as not to defeat the lawfully acquired right of other parties, and therefore recommend the passage of the House bill, amended by striking out the proviso at the end thereof and inserting in lieu of the same the following:

Provided, That all persons who enjoyed the lawful use of the invention secured by said patent during the original term thereof may continue to use the same without liability therefor as if this act had not been passed, and no persons shall be held liable for using said invention after the expiration of the original term of the patent and before the approval of this act.

Mr. WILLEY. If the Senate have paid attention to the report, if they have been able to divest themselves of the fascination that surrounds them, to cut themselves loose from all female influence, they will see that the original bill proposes to render valid and binding that which was invalid and not binding; and not merely to do that. The committee, under the circumstances and under the influence brought to bear upon them, were willing that that should be done, provided that in doing so we did not violate the vested rights of capitalists who had invested their capital in the manufacture of this article between the expiration of the English patent, and the extension of the American patent. Senators, by referring to the law, will find that where a patent is issued abroad, where there is a foreign patent, and there is an American patent taken for the same invention at home, the American patent, it is provided, shall relate back to the date of the issue of the foreign patent, and shall run fourteen years from the date of the foreign patent and not from the date of the American patent. It seems that in this instance, as the report alleges, but as subsequent evidence filed with the Senator from Connecticut goes very far to show cannot by any possibility be the case, this administratrix was ignorant of the fact that there was a foreign patent at the time she applied for an extension of the American patent; and hence the American patent expiring nearly two years after fourteen years from the time of the issue of the foreign patent, the application for the extension was not made by the administratrix until time enough, as provided by law, had elapsed to make the invention public property. The extension was void at the time this extension was made. She got the extension of the American patent two years after the expiration of fourteen years from the date of the foreign patent.

She brought suit to recover a royalty, or applied for an injunction to prevent the infringement of her patent. Meantime it was discovered that there had been a foreign patent issued, and her counsel became apprehensive that the extension of the American patent was void, and that she must wholly fail; and hence you will see the language of the original bill is to make that valid which in point of fact was supposed to be invalid, the extension having been from the expiration of the American patent instead of from fourteen years after the date of the English patent. To remedy this defect this bill was passed by the House of Representatives; but it comes to the knowledge of the committee of the Senate that capitalists in New Jersey and in other sections of the country who appeared by their counsel before the committee had in the mean time invested largely their capital in the manufacture of this article, and that if this bill passed as it came from the House the result would be that the administratrix of Mr. Jones, under the ratification of this extension, would be coming back on these innocent men for her royalty and for damages for the infringement of the patent. We thought it unjust under the circumstances that she should be allowed to do so, but that men who in this interregnum between the end of fourteen years from the expiration of the foreign patent and the time of the extension of the American patent should be allowed to carry on their business without detriment, and that all manufacture of the article by any person whatsoever during this time should not be held responsible.

Why, sir, what is the result? There was no valid patent; they could not be held responsible without this action of Congress; there was no patent to infringe. But here Congress is applied to to pass a law that relates back behind the time of these supposed infringements and renders men guilty for doing that which was innocent at the time they did it, renders that illegal against which there was no law, declares that they shall be held liable for the infringement of a patent which at the time they invested their capital in the manufacture of this article did not exist, for there was no such valid patent; and it is to remedy that defect that the bill comes from the House of Representatives, and it is to prevent this injustice that the Senate committee recommend the adoption of the amendment.

Now, let us look at this thing. The Senate has got something to decide here; the Senate stands upon its obligations not only to this lady, but upon its obligations to the country. The public interests are involved in this matter. Here is an important article entering largely into the convenience of the country, largely into the manufactures of the country. It enters into the welfare of the people at large. Every man's house, more or less, derives the benefit of it as it enters into the various kinds of paint that are manufactured in the land. The policy of all just Government is against monopolies; but to encourage inventions Congress has seen fit in its wisdom in time past to say that a party, to indemnify himself for the expenses of an invention, to repay himself, shall have a monopoly of it for fourteen years, and Congress by the law heretofore existing has also said that if the inventor shall not by due diligence have realized sufficient out of his improvement to indemnify himself for the value of it and for his expenses in putting it into operation, he may, by showing those facts before the Commissioner of Patents, have an extension for seven years longer.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLEY. Yes, sir; as many as you please.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does it appear from the evidence that the investments were made by the manufacturers whom the committee seek to protect by the amendment after the expiration of the British patent, with a knowledge of that fact, and with a knowledge of the fact that no renewal could be had?

Mr. WILLEY. My recollection, I will say candidly, is that the knowledge of the existence of the British patent never came to the parties who have invested their capital in the manufacture of this article until since suit was brought.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I wish to ask the Senator if it does not appear that they made their investments at a time when they supposed the American patent had not expired, and when they knew that, according to law, if that were the case, she would have a right to a renewal?

Mr. WILLEY. Some of them, I suppose, did so. The difficulty is that I cannot pretend to state the evidence precisely; as I stated to the Senate, the conviction on my mind is distinct and unequivocal, but I have not a memory of the distinct, naked facts as they exist, only of the conclusion to which an examination of the facts at that time brought my mind. During this interval, as I understand, there are some persons who commenced the manufacture of this article; and those most largely engaged in it have, since the expiration of fourteen years from the date of the British patent, very much enlarged their operations and increased their capital, which is tantamount to having commenced the business within that time, to that extent at any rate; but that is aside from the remarks which I proposed to make. I know that anything that I can say here has no effect; but I believe I owe it to the country, as chairman of the Committee on Patents, however hopeless and thankless a task it is, to discharge my duty; and I am going to do it, and I want the facts to go to the country.

Now, sir, what are the facts? It was the duty of the Commissioner under the law, when application was made for the extension of this patent, to inquire first, is it a novel invention; second, is it a useful invention? Granting these two facts—for I suppose it is true that the invention was both novel and useful—then comes the material consideration; in the third place, did the patentee derive from his monopoly, during the fourteen years, adequate compensation to indemnify him for his time and trouble and expense? How could there be any fair investigation of that fact before the Commissioner of Patents, when the party applying for the extension either did not know, or, if she did know, sedulously concealed from the Commissioner, the fact that pari passu with the American patent she had a patent existing in Great Britain, and not a cent of account is given for anything realized out of the foreign patent, in order to ascertain whether the party had been indemnified for the invention or not? I went to the records—I wanted to see that fact—and I recollect distinctly that the papers show that not a whisper was made at the time this party was making her application before the Commissioner for the extension of the patent of the existence of the foreign patent, and it is the material inquiry—it is the most material inquiry in all investigations of this character—to see whether the party has had an adequate compensation for the invention, and whether a useful invention may not be enjoyed by the country at large and not by monopolists, who, after having received ample and adequate compensation for a useful invention, may still lay a charge and a royalty on the business of the country at large. Sir, the policy of this country is opposed to it, and so distinctly has this impression been made on the mind of Congress and the country that a few years ago the authority to extend a patent was utterly repealed, and the law now stands that the patentee may enjoy his monopoly for seventeen years, and there shall be no further application for an extension; it shall stop then unless he comes to Congress and shows some grounds, or the estate happens to fall into the hands of an accomplished and fascinating lady.

Now, Mr. President, can Senators say here that this party has not had an adequate compensation for this improvement? Can they tell me what the compensation was at all? Sir, I cannot tell what the compensation was for the American patent, because the Senate has excluded me from access to the evidence by considering the case now while the evidence is shut up in the desk of an absent Senator, and the Senate is here about to decide on the question and say that this party has not had adequate compensation even at home, when it has not one jot or tittle of evidence on which to base its conclusions, and it is to say that the Commissioner, too, was justified in coming to his conclusion when he had no evidence and no knowledge of the fact that at the time or shortly before this application for extension in this country the party had had, for I do not know how many years, a patent in Great Britain, from which, for aught any Senator can say, for aught I can say, the patentee may have realized hundreds of thousands of dollars, amply sufficient to compensate him. And now, sir, under the fascinating influence of an accomplished lady, the Senate cannot wait a few days until we can get the evidence to see how that fact is; and if it were to wait a month no evidence would come in regard to how much compensation was received from the foreign patent. And after Congress has given the country to understand that it would protect the public interests from monopolies hereafter, to the extent of providing that they shall not run twenty-one years, as heretofore, but only seventeen years, and without any knowledge of how much compensation this estate has received even in this country, to say nothing of the foreign compensation, we are in such hot haste to fasten this monopoly upon the industries and interests of the country that we cannot wait a few days until we can get the evidence and have a fair hearing of the case.

Now, sir, I have said more perhaps than I ought to have said after the indications given by the Senate. Perhaps, under the circumstances, it may have been somewhat presumptuous in me to say what I have said, but I considered it my duty. The Senate considered this matter worthy to be referred to the Committee on Patents, one of its own committees, created by itself, designated for the examination of these questions. The committee have reported; they have, as I think, made a very liberal report; they have agreed to validate that which is acknowledged by the party to be invalid, to extend that which is a nonentity in law at present, and will be so declared by the courts, in all probability, or at least the counsel for the party apprehend that; and all the committee ask is that those who have invested their capital during this interregnum, while this thing was invalid and up to this time, shall not be made responsible in vexatious suits and royalties for the enjoyment of a right which did not belong to the party.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question? As I have not had an opportunity to investigate the case, I wish to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether the question he has just discussed, the question as to the receipt by the patentee of an adequate compensation for his invention, has not been investigated by the Commissioner of Patents and decided upon by him; and whether, also, the Committee on Patents, in reporting favorably to the bill with the amendment, has not conceded that there is a right to a renewal because of the want of a sufficient compensation?

Mr. WILLEY. I will say to the Senator that the committee were somewhat under the same influence that the Senator himself is, [laughter;] and while we were willing to concede to this lady every possible right, while we were willing to give her privileges that did not run directly against and injure other vested rights, I have to say, in answer to the Senator, that his question is well put in regard to the Commissioner of Patents having so decided; but the Senator cannot have forgotten that I stated that when this investigation was made before the Commissioner of Patents there was not a whisper to him, not a word in evidence, not an intimation that this party had also enjoyed a monopoly for the very same invention in Great Britain; and there is not a particle of evidence to show how much compensation the party received from the monopoly abroad. Now I will ask the Senator this question: whether he can say, if the receipts of the foreign patent had been brought into the account it might not have appeared that the inventor had received an ample compensation? Can he say that it would not appear?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, of course not being upon the committee I cannot answer any question of the sort; but I would suggest to the Senator whether the right to the use of the invention in this country ought not to be continued for the benefit of the patentee, provided its use and enjoyment in this country had not resulted in a profit, although the citizens of a foreign country may have used the patent to an extent that made it valuable there?

Mr. WILLEY. I say no, sir. The object, and the only object, in granting this monopoly is to grant indemnity to the party for his invention, to give him an opportunity of using it so long as shall be necessary to enable him to repay himself. It is a contest between the individual monopoly of the inventor and the people at large; and the policy of the law is that when the party has been sufficiently indemnified for the value of his invention and his trouble in putting it into use and operation, then his monopoly ought to cease, and then the country ought to get the benefit of it. That is all that any inventor could ask; and this party comes into the Senate here in the questionable shape of saying that she has not received a due compensation for the invention of her husband, when she gives no account of the compensation that she received abroad, and when there is no intimation that there was an invention abroad. Why, sir, if I had the evidence here I should like to go into the inquiry whether in point of fact there has not been some sharp practice in this matter. My short experience in regard to these applications for the extension of patents and maneuvers of management that have come to my knowledge in relation to them, has made me very suspicious, and has inspired me with a determination to be very careful, so far as I can, to the extent of my humble abilities, that the Senate and the country shall never be imposed upon; but hereafter whenever a lady comes here for an extension of a patent I shall not consider it worthy of examination, and just whatever she asks I will submit to the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I want to finish the remark I commenced to make a while ago. I said that the Senate had considered it necessary to organize a committee to examine into these questions. This matter was deemed worthy to be referred to the committee. They have examined it, and examined it carefully. On the value of my own examination I place no weight whatever, of course; but Senators know that there are gentlemen on that committee whose opinions are entitled to consideration, especially my colleague on that committee, the Senator from Connecticut, who is an experienced patent lawyer, and who knows more about mechanics, perhaps, than any other member on this floor, and from whom I have received great advantage in the investigations which have come before our committee. This matter has been submitted to that committee. That Senator has made the report. It is a matter of interest to him. If after all this the Senate is to pay no attention whatever to the report of the committee, to give it no weight whatever, and without a jot or tittle of evidence before it, without looking into the record, when it is not possible to produce the evidence before it, if, under all these circumstances, it is disposed to vote down this amendment and pass the bill as it was, I cannot help it; and that is all I have got to say.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, as some parties in interest reside in my State I desire to say a word in justification of my vote for this bill. The amendment which the committee have reported, so far as I understand it, is tantamount, if adopted, to a rejection of the bill; no beneficial interest will be taken under it by the patentee or enjoyed by her. We may as well, therefore, accept the amendment of the committee as a substitute for a direct vote rejecting the bill itself. This being its character it is only worth its value as an argument following the report which has been submitted. I understand the committee differed in opinion; it was not a unanimous report.

Now, Mr. President, what is this bill? It is simply to remove from this case a technical difficulty which has been discovered by lawyers in the course of some judicial investigation. Called to account by the patentee for the use of a valuable—I might say an almost invaluable—invention, they were disposed to resist the claim or to resist it in part, and their counsel in pursuing investigation into the case discovered, unearthed, a foreign patent, which it is supposed interposes a technical legal difficulty, if it be pressed in the courts of law, to the enjoyment of any interest whatever under the renewal of the patent. Now, what is this bill? It is simply to remove that difficulty. It does not seem that the patentee when this renewal was made understood that there was a foreign patent, or that the manufacturers who have used this patent understood it. In fact, I believe the truth is that the foreign patent never was extensively used; no extensive fruits, if any at all, were ever received from it. I understand it was never used in fact abroad.

Now, the Senate of the United States, instead of passing a bill such as it is described to be by the Senator from West Virginia, are just removing out of the hands of the manufacturers who are using this patent a plea in court which is partly technical, has no merit in it, which reaches no substantial point of equity involved between them and the patentee.

That is the whole of this bill. It may be that some consideration should be given to those manufacturers that may have used the patent in ignorance or innocently; and if there was some amendment of that sort—I do not know how it could be drawn—there might be an argument in favor of it.

Mr. CONKLING. That very thing is in the House bill, that it is not to attach to the interval between one date and the other.

Mr. BUCKALEW. But so far as regards the use of the patent hereafter, until 1871, when it will expire by its own limitation, there can be no argument at all, and no appeal to the justice of the Senate—

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me before he takes his seat, so as to do it in this connection, to make a statement on one important point?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. And that is the profits resulting to the patentee from the use of the patent in this country. They are within six thousand dollars. Fifty-one or fifty-two hundred dollars is the total amount received, as proven upon the application for an extension.

Mr. WILLEY. Did you get that from the evidence, or from a pamphlet on your table?

Mr. CONNESS. It is taken from the sworn testimony; and the chairman of the committee could have had access to it, and ought to have known it.

Mr. WILLEY. I desire to say to that that I put the whole evidence in the hands of the Senator from Connecticut, and I wanted the Senate to wait till I could get it.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I have to say, with the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania again, that the Senator from West Virginia, being in ignorance of the fact, ought not to have called my statement in question.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Well, Mr. President, I have endeavored to state what I understand to be the true character of this bill and to show that it is not open to the objections which have been made by the Senator from West Virginia. Now, one word in conclusion, and I shall leave the subject.

We may take for granted, for all the purposes of a vote upon this bill, that the Commissioner of Patents acted properly in extending this patent. There is nothing before us to show that he acted corruptly, from motives of favoritism or of enmity to any human being. The presumption is that he as a public officer acted in a proper, reasonable, and just manner in extending this patent for a period of seven years; that he had before him the necessary evidence to bring this case within the requirements of the general patent laws. We are by passing this bill, as I said before, doing nothing except removing the legal obstacle which this lady encounters to the enjoyment of her rights under our laws by the unearthing of an unused, valueless foreign patent which was taken out but never followed up by the patentee.

Mr. CORBETT. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of the amendment reported by the committee. It seems to me that extending the patent with that provision in the bill would probably amount to nothing, because it would place this business entirely in the hands of those companies that are already established, and have large capital, and have been extending their works. Consequently they would have the advantage, and no new concern would enter into the manufacture of this article, and hence the country at large would have to pay more for the article if manufactured by these few establishments. No one being allowed to come in competition without paying a royalty, the result would be to deter any one else from entering into the market in competition with these manufacturers who do not have to pay any royalty.

Mr. THAYER. As the Senator says the amendment will constitute the existing companies monstrous monopolies against the whole world. This is all there is of it; that is all the speech I will make. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to ask a question for information. Now that this amendment has been rejected, I wish to know whether, if the bill should pass in its present form, the parties entitled to this patent would be able to collect a royalty, as I believe they call it, from the date of the expiration of the first fourteen years up to the present period?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; the bill says the contrary. The last clause is:

Provided, That this act shall not operate between the period of the date of the English patent and the date of the original American patent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 159) relating to the Western Pacific railroad.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not a private bill.

Mr. CONNESS. What is it, pray?

Mr. FESSENDEN. This evening was set apart for private claims.

Mr. CONNESS. I was not aware of that fact. I did not know that this evening had been set apart for private claims. ["Certainly."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was so set apart.

Mr. CONNESS. I am the last man to interfere with any such order of the Senate, and I withdraw the motion. The Senate will gratify me at some other time.

PRIZE CASES IN FLORIDA.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 486, to facilitate the settlement of certain prize cases in the southern district of Florida.

Mr. HOWE. I think that is not one of the bills the Senate has met to consider this evening.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir; it is to settle the rights of certain parties who claim prize money, and to secure it to them. It comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 486) to facilitate the settlement of certain prize cases in the southern district of Florida was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the execution and delivery to him by the administratrix of the estate of James C. Clapp, deceased, late United States marshal for the southern district of Florida, of a proper written release of all claims and demands for, or on account of, all costs, charges, fees, and expenses due, or claimed to be due, to him as marshal or to his estate, in any prize or other cases in that district, to accept from the administratrix the sum of $50,000 in full satisfaction of all claims and demands of the United States against the estate of James C. Clapp, and against the sureties in his official bond, and that this sum of $50,000, when paid, together with the sums now on deposit with the Assistant Treasurer in New York to the credit of Clapp and to the credit of the United States district court for the southern district of Florida, shall be deposited with the Assistant United States Treasurer at Washington, subject to the order of the United States district court for the southern district of Florida, for the purpose of meeting decrees of distribution or restitution in the following prize causes pending in that district: Schooner Lucy No. 1, the cargo of the steamer Adela, schooner Alicia and cargo, schooner Isabel and cargo, the steamer James Battle, schooner Diana and cargo, schooner Sea Lion and cargo, the cargo of the steamer Nita, steamer Pearl and cargo, schooner Teresa No. 2, steamer Union, steamer Victor and cargo, and schooner John Williams.

The Secretary of the Navy is to deposit with the Assistant United States Treasurer at Washington, the appraised values of the prize steamers Adela and Nita, condemned in the district court for the southern district of Florida, and taken into the naval service, and, after deducting all proper charges and expenses, a moiety of the same is to be distributed under the decree of the court, according to law, among the captors entitled to share in these prizes, and the remaining moiety is to be subject to the order of the district court.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not exactly understand the bill. I suppose there is a much larger sum due by the marshal than the amount to be paid by the widow, and the amount is to be taken by way of compromise under the impression that the whole cannot be collected. I hope the honorable member from Indiana will give us some information on the subject.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The printed report which I made to the Senate states the facts. The report is No. 128. The marshal was a defaulter. The sum realized from the sale of these vessels was about two hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars. The money that is still on deposit to his credit is some fifty-odd thousand dollars, and there is another sum of $19,000 which can be obtained, and there is $50,000 which the widow is willing to pay out of her own estate, provided her husband's estate can be released, and the bondsman, whose bond is $20,000, can also be released. These sums will make about one hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars. That is about the amount which can be realized by the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the value of the estate left by the husband?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The estate is worth nothing but what is on deposit. Great efforts have been made to realize, but nothing more can be had. This is the largest sum that can be realized.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the sum that ought to be realized?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Two hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars. To make up the sum of $124,000 the widow pays $50,000 out of her own estate in order to relieve her husband's estate and the bondsman.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the amount of the bond?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Twenty thousand dollars. This is to enable these cases to be adjusted in court; they cannot be otherwise.

Some of the money has to be refunded in two cases where the condemnation by the district court has not been sustained. The sale took place, but the condemnation is not sustained in two cases in the Supreme Court, and there has to be a restitution. The residue of the money will be paid to the captors under the provisions of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER J. ATOCHA.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 488.

Mr. HOWE. I really thought the Committee on Claims was going to have some chance this evening.

Mr. STEWART. This bill will take but a minute or two. It is a private bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 488) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Alexander J. Atocha," approved February 14, 1865, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes Alexander J. Atocha, in the prosecution of his claim referred to the Court of Claims by the act of February 14, 1865, to use such portions of the evidence taken in pursuance of the rules and regulations of the commission established under the fifteenth section of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and laid before the commission as consists: first, of the evidence of persons since deceased; second, of the evidence of persons whose testimony cannot with due diligence be obtained; and also the official letters of the authorities of Mexico on the subject of this claim. And such evidence is to be received by the court, and the court is to give it such weight as in their judgment under all the circumstances it ought to have.

Mr. STEWART. If any explanation is desired I can give it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator from Nevada tell us what this case is, and upon what principles of law or justice it proceeds. I remember the investigation that was had about it in the Judiciary Committee, and in which it was my misfortune to differ in opinion from the Senator from Nevada, and, I believe, from the majority of the committee, as to the propriety of entering upon this species of legislation, to declare that evidence which is not legal evidence shall be used in trying to assert a very old claim growing out of the Mexican war, that has been passed upon frequently by the Senate, or once at least, and adversely again by the Court of Claims; and I should be glad to have the Senator from Nevada tell us a little about the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to occupy much time; but the Senate will understand this case in a few moments. This bill proposes to amend an act passed February 14, 1865. In order that Senators may understand what that act is, as it is very short I will read it:

"That the Court of Claims be, and the said court is hereby, directed to examine into the claims of Alexander J. Atocha against the Government of Mexico for losses sustained by him by reason of his expulsion from that republic in 1845; and if they shall be of opinion that the said claim was a just one against Mexico, when the treaty of 1848 was ratified, and was embraced by said treaty, they shall then fix and determine the amount of the same; and that the loss or damage so sustained being adjudicated and determined by said court, the same shall be paid to the said Alexander J. Atocha out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That the amount so to be paid shall in no event exceed the balance of the $3,250,000 provided by the fifteenth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo for the payment of claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Mexico, which still remains unapplied to that object."

This act was passed after a very careful consideration and a report by Mr. Foster, which explains the whole case. I will not go into the merits of that case, or review the action of the Senate in passing this act in 1865. If that should become necessary I shall have to call for the reading of the report made by Mr. Foster, which is a very able and thorough one, reviewing the whole case on its merits. This amendatory act simply provides for using certain evidence before the Court of Claims. The case has not yet been tried before the Court of Claims; and on examination it is ascertained that a large number of the witnesses have died since their testimony was taken before the Mexican commission.

Mr. POMEROY. I want to ask what the claim consists of. What is the claim?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Atocha was a citizen of the United States, and the Mexican Government expelled him from that country, whereby he lost his property, and in making the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the Government of the United States provided that they would reserve $3,250,000 for the payment of claims that American citizens had against Mexico.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Nevada be good enough to read that clause of the treaty?

Mr. STEWART. I do not understand that the United States agreed to indemnify beyond a certain amount.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator will allow me to say this: the Committee on the Judiciary did not go back to the merits of that. The committee simply stood upon the law of 1865, which said Mr. Atocha might prosecute his case in the Court of Claims. Now, in support of that case, the committee say that he may use the evidence which has accumulated before the commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that any reason for not reading the treaty? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. The United States, to the extent of $3,250,000, agreed to indemnify those of its citizens who had been injured by Mexico, driven out of that country.

Mr. POMEROY. How does the account stand now? Is there any of that money left?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; there is a balance remaining. The law provides that the amount allowed in the settlement of this claim shall not exceed the amount that was thus provided, the amount of the guarantee in that treaty. This matter was thoroughly investigated at the time of the passage of the bill in 1865. The additional relief now proposed is only to enable the case to be tried at all. Several of the witnesses have since died; some of them are beyond the jurisdiction of the court; and the evidence proposed to be used was taken in pursuance of the rules and regulations of the Department providing for the commission. The evidence was taken with great particularity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is claimed?

Mr. STEWART. The law provides that the amount allowed shall not exceed a certain sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is claimed by the claimant?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know. I did not investigate that. I do not know anything about the amount of the claim. I understand it is much larger than the amount that can possibly be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Precisely; you are right about that.

Mr. STEWART. But I do not propose to interfere with that. Congress has already passed on that question. The only question now is whether the testimony of witnesses since deceased and those who cannot be procured shall be used to carry out the objects of the act of 1865.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I feel it to be my duty, as one of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, although I believe there is a lady or two in the case, and I trust the Senator from West Virginia will therefore sympathize with me—

Mr. WILLEY. I have no sympathy with you now—none at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. To state what this case is. This gentleman, Mr. Atocha, I believe, was a naturalized American citizen. He chose to cast his lot in Mexico. During the internal troubles in Mexico preceding the Mexican war of 1846-47 he chose to enlist his fortunes on the side of Santa Anna and his faction. The Government in possession of the country expelled Santa Anna and his adherents for resistance to law, as they claimed, and as in point of fact it was. They were the Government de facto. They expelled them as belligerents, insurrectionists, disturbers of the peace; for what we should call, if we were not a little tender now-a-days, treason. This gentleman, undoubtedly, in the course of that expulsion suffered injury. Most people who fail in treasonable attempts do. He was expelled.

Then came on the Mexican war with the United States, which resulted in a victory to our arms, as I hope all other wars will. In the treaty of peace we received a certain strip of Mexican territory, and agreed to pay to Mexico a certain sum of money that we did pay. We also agreed that we would indemnify Mexico against the just claims of citizens of the United States existing prior to the conclusion of this treaty of peace, with a proviso that in no event should the amount we should be obliged to pay to the citizens of the United States exceed a certain sum—seven or eight or nine or ten millions; I do not remember the amount. The treaty also provided that in order to ascertain what citizens of the United States had these just claims against Mexico which we had thus assumed a commission should be formed, a special tribunal, to hear, try, and determine upon the merits of these respective claims. That commission was formed. Notice was given and the claimants appeared. Among others appeared this gentleman with his claim.

Mr. POMEROY. What do I understand the Senator to say his name is?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Atocha. This same gentleman.

Mr. POMEROY. He is no American, judging from his name.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He claims to be a naturalized American. This gentleman appeared with his claim. The commission decided, upon the evidence that he presented, that he was not one of the persons embraced within the provision of the treaty or entitled to share in this guaranty payment that the United States had assumed on account of the facts and the circumstances under which he rested in the course of his operations in Mexico. They therefore declined to go into an investigation of the detail, the quantum, or the intrinsic merit of his claim, because they decided against him upon this preliminary and jurisdictional fact; and so he went his ways.

He afterward appealed to Congress, his claim being, as my friend from Nevada properly states, to come out of the balance of the $3,250,000 that is left unexpended of this guarantee that we gave. He appealed to Congress. Congress sent him to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims, upon a hearing of his case, decided it against him upon the ground that the decision of this tribunal, to whom the matter was committed, was conclusive, and therefore the Court of Claims declined again to enter into the detailed merits in the abstract.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; the Court of Claims has never decided against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Bring on the decision and let us see whether it has or not. The decision of the Court of Claims was read in committee when we were considering the case.

Mr. STEWART. You are speaking of another case, the Chorpeneun case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all. I remember the matter distinctly, unless I am much mistaken, in which the Court of Claims declined—

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; you are entirely mistaken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can settle that question of fact to-morrow when I get the report, in which the Court of Claims declined to entertain his case upon the ground that it had already been determined, and he claimed, therefore, that he was injured by the Court of Claims not reaching its merits. Then he applied to Congress again; and, as my friend from Nevada states, the then Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Foster, reported a bill which directed the Court of Claims to proceed to consider the case upon its merits, to retry that which the commission had once tried, waiving this question of jurisdiction for the time being, or rather waiving this estoppel from the previous decision, and to retry it upon its merits; to again consider the question as to his relations to the reigning powers in Mexico; and if it turned out that he was one of the persons embraced within the provisions of the treaty upon this retrial to proceed to administer to him that equity which the merits of his case might entitle him to, not exceeding the balance of the $3,250,000. I am not mistaken about the fact, I venture to assert with a good deal of confidence.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it is Meade's case.
Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; it is not Meade's case. [To Mr. STEWART.] Have you got Mr. Foster's report?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me see it, if you please. [After an examination of the report.] It does not appear from this report whether the case has been submitted to the Court of Claims or not; but this does appear:

"After the board of commissioners had closed their labors, many citizens of the United States whose claims had been rejected petitioned Congress to review the decision of that board, and the Senate of the United States appointed a special committee to sit during the recess of Congress, with the power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to examine each case and report such as, in their judgment, were entitled to relief.

"That committee, in discharge of the duty assigned them, did investigate every claim which had been presented to the Senate for relief, and in every case, except this of Mr. Atocha, reported definitively. In his case no report was made because of an equal division of that committee upon his title to relief, so that this is the only case which has not received the supervision of the Senate, and it therefore appears to your committee that for this reason, also, the memorialist is entitled to have his claim now investigated and affirmatively decided upon by the Government."

This report does not show; but as I said before, I shall turn out, in my own estimation, to be very much mistaken if I cannot produce to-morrow, or whenever this claim comes up again, if it is not disposed of now, a decision of the Court of Claims on this question in which they have decided what I need not repeat. But it is immaterial to my present purpose to consider whether that is correct or not, because if the Court of Claims decided upon it, it was merely upon the ground that the case having once been decided by the commission they did not feel authorized to reopen it.

When the act passed upon which my friend rests this case it was supposed by Congress, I take it, that they had passed all the relief to which the claimant was entitled; that is to say, they permitted him upon the same principle that they permit other suitors against the Government to appeal to the Court of Claims, and try his case upon the same rules of law, upon the same rules of evidence as to what should be admissible and what not, that other claimants against the Government are required to conform to. Now, it turns out, two years or three, whatever the length of time may be, after this case has been sent to the Court of Claims, that the claimant comes back here for further and additional legislation which is not implied in, or which does not follow as a consequence from that which the Senate did three years ago. They only decided then that he had a sufficient case to entitle him upon the ordinary principles of proof, to try his cause in the ordinary way in the Court of Claims. Now he asks us to provide that the Court of Claims shall decide it upon a new and different principle of evidence, upon different proofs from those which other claimants are obliged to produce; and what is the fact upon which he claims that equity over and above everybody else? He says some of his witnesses are dead. That is a misfortune of the claimant. Who knows but what some of the witnesses on the other side are dead? The course of nature, I take it, operates upon all witnesses alike; and if some of the claimant's witnesses have died, there is a fair presumption that some of those witnesses whose testimony would countervail that of the claimant are dead, too. Others, it is said, are absent. So may be some of the witnesses on the other side.

Now, it is proposed to supply witnesses to this claimant in order to aid him take $3,250,000 out of the Treasury, and that upon proof which the bill says may have been filed with this commission. What is the nature of that proof? Who are the witnesses? Who knows their character and credibility now? Who attended to their cross-examination? Who produced them before the commission in order that they might be cross-examined and reexamined in the furtherance of truth? We know not; we are in the dark about all that. It does seem to me, Mr. President, that when this is a question of $3,250,000 in these times it is worth while to be a little careful how we go out of the ordinary and universal rules of evidence and undertake to supply the absence of proof to a claimant upon the ground that we had before provided that he might go to the Court of Claims, and therefore upon the ground, as his abettors say, that we had agreed to furnish him with all the evidence that would enable him to carry his case through. That does not follow.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Vermont should find it necessary in opposing this bill to make these wild statements, to tell the Senate that there are $3,250,000 involved in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what you read.

Mr. STEWART. Three and a quarter millions involved in it!

Mr. EDMUNDS. You say that is the sum left.

Mr. STEWART. No; I do not say anything of the kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood you to read it so.

Mr. STEWART. I read the act of 1865, the proviso to which is:

"Provided, however, That the amount so to be paid shall not exceed the balance of the $3,250,000 provided by the fifteenth article of the treaty." &c.

I understand there is only about two hundred thousand dollars, or a little less, left. Three million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was the whole amount. This claim never has been passed upon by the Court of Claims. I have investigated this claim and know something about it. There is no such sum as $3,250,000 involved in it. The Congress of the United States gave this matter a very thorough consideration three years ago, and after the speech of the Senator from Vermont I do not know but it might be well to have the former report read. I call for the reading of the report that was made by Mr. Foster, as this is really an important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. STEWART. After that is read I shall have some other testimony to present. I think I am abundantly able to show that this is a very meritorious case. Mr. Atocha is now old and poor and helpless.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has that to do with this case?

Mr. STEWART. The fact that he has been hardly treated by the Government of the United States has something to do with this case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The fact that he is helpless, if he is, does not help it.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the reading of the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. Foster on the 19th of May, 1864, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Alexander J. Atocha, praying that his claims, against Mexico, disallowed by the commissioners under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, may be investigated, and, if found just, paid by the United States, have considered the subject, and now report:

That said claim has been pending before this body for some ten years past, and has always been regarded with favor by the committees who have acted upon it. Your committee consider the claim to have substantial merits, and they adopt as their own, with slight alterations, the report of a former committee of this body.

The memorialist was a citizen of the United States residing in Mexico. On the 24th of February, 1845, he received from that Government an order "to leave the city of Mexico within the period of eight days for Vera Cruz, in order to depart from the republic."

It appears that the memorialist at the time protested, through Mr. Shannon, the American minister, against this order as a violation of the treaty of April 5, 1841, between the United States and Mexico, and notifying the latter Government that he would hold it responsible for the losses he might sustain by reason thereof.

Forced by this order to retire from the Mexican territory within the period of eight days, the memorialist alleges that he sustained great pecuniary loss; and that he filed his claim specifying such loss, with the vouchers sustaining the same, before the board of commissioners appointed under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which he alleges was unjustly rejected by that board, and he therefore petitions Congress for redress.

Believing that it would be dangerous to go behind the decision of the commissioners, unless it should appear that they had erred in the law applied to the case, your committee have examined with care the grounds assigned for an adverse decision in this case, and are satisfied that the commissioners erred in the law upon which they predicated their decision.

The commissioners assume, in their opinion, that the loss of the memorialist, by reason of his expulsion from Mexico, is established by the proofs filed by him, and decide against the validity of his claim exclusively upon the assumption that the order of expulsion was legal and proper, because, as they assume, of the complicity of the memorialist with Santa Anna in his resistance to the Government de facto in their efforts to depose him as the president of the republic.

The commissioners assume that the connection of the memorialist with the political movements of Santa Anna is established—first, by the fact that he remained there with Santa Anna until he was forced to abandon the Government and leave the Mexican territory; and secondly, because Mr. Shannon, the American minister, did not reply to a communication of the secretary for foreign affairs of Mexico, in which that officer, in acknowledging the receipt of the protest of the memorialist against the order of expulsion, says that Mr. Atocha "was one of the principal agents who wrought against the Government, as is notorious, and as its excellency, Mr. Shannon himself, well knows."

The error of the first of these assumptions of fact by the commissioners is now established by the certificate of the officer having charge of the archives of the Mexican Government, which states that Mr. Atocha does not appear to have had any connection with the movements of Santa Anna; and by the letter of Santa Anna himself, who, on the part of Mexico, made the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, stating emphatically that Mr. Atocha never had any political connection with him, and that he remained with him by his invitation, because "in those times of disorder and insubordination, he could not separate himself from him without imminent risk."

The error of the second assumption of fact by the commissioners is established by the letter of our minister, Mr. Shannon, in which he expresses the conviction that the memorialist was not in any manner connected with the political movements of Santa Anna, and that he did not reply to the communication of the Mexican minister for foreign affairs, not because he knew the correctness of his charge against Mr. Atocha, but because the memorialist had left the country before the receipt of that communication, &c.

But, for the purpose of the argument, assume, contrary to the fact, that the commissioners were right in saying that Mr. Atocha was connected with the political movements of Santa Anna, will it follow that the Government of Mexico was authorized to issue the order of expulsion against Atocha? The solution of this question will depend upon the construction of the treaty of 1831 between the United States and Mexico.

The twenty-sixth article of that treaty was intended to provide for the protection of the citizens of the two nations in the event of war between them, and the stipulation is: "That if war should break out between the two contracting parties there should be allowed the term of six months to the merchants residing on the coast, and one year to those residing in the interior of the States and Territories of each other, respectively, to arrange their business, dispose of their effects, or transport them wheresoever they may please, giving them a safe conduct to protect them to the port they may designate. Those citizens who may be established in the States and territories aforesaid, exercising any other occupation or trade, shall be permitted to remain in the uninterrupted enjoyment of their liberty and property so long as they conduct themselves peaceably, and do not commit any offense against the laws; and their goods and effects, of whatever class and condition they may be, shall not be subject to any embargo or sequestration whatever, nor to any charge nor tax other than may be established upon similar goods and effects belonging to the citizens of the State in which they reside, respectively; nor shall the debts between individuals, nor moneys in the public funds, or in public or private banks, nor shares in companies be confiscated, embargoed, or detained."

During the late war with Mexico many citizens of the United States, who were residing as merchants in the territory of that republic at the time war was declared to exist between the two countries, were summarily expelled in disregard of this stipulation of the treaty of 1831, and most of the claims presented to and allowed by the board of commissioners, appointed under the treaty of 1848, were for damages consequent upon such violation of the treaty of 1831.

The fourteenth article of the treaty of 1831 was designed to secure to the citizens of the two republics, respectively, protection to their persons and property in time of peace; and, after stipulating for such protection, the two Governments contract and agree "that the citizens of either party shall enjoy, in every respect, the same rights and privileges, either in prosecuting or defending their rights of person or of property, as the citizens of the country where the cause of action may be tried."

At the date of the order of expulsion of Mr. Atocha, Mexico and the United States were at peace with each other, and it necessarily follows, in the opinion of your committee, that for any offense with which he may have been charged, Mr. Atocha was entitled, under this article of the treaty, to be tried, and to have afforded to him all the means of a fair trial which are provided for in that article.

It seems to your committee to be also very clear that the Mexican Government, under this treaty stipulation, possessed no other or greater power to punish a citizen of the United States domiciled within her territory than she possessed to punish one of her own citizens for a similar offense; and they are advised that the Mexican Government did not possess, under the constitution and laws of that republic, the power to expel a Mexican citizen without trial for any offense. Indeed, the minister for foreign affairs who issued the order of expulsion against Mr. Atocha, in response to the letter of the American minister which had inclosed the protest of Mr. Atocha against the legality of the order, and his notice of intention to claim damages for the losses which it would occasion him, says, "that his Government is authorized by the laws and constitution of the republic to expel from its limits non-naturalized foreigners pernicious to the country."

For the reasons assigned, your committee are of opinion that the expulsion of Mr. Atocha from the Mexican territory was a violation of the stipulations of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1831, and consequently that he should have been awarded by the board of the commissioners organized under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo such damages as he could show were sustained by him in consequence of that expulsion.

Your committee are advised that of the $250,000 stipulated by the fifteenth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo to be appropriated to the payment of claims of citizens of the United States against Mexico, the sum of about a quarter of a million dollars still remains in the Treasury, and consequently to that extent the fund set apart for that purpose still exists to indemnify Mr. Atocha, if he can establish his claim by satisfactory proof.

Your committee have not deemed it their duty to investigate the quantum of indemnity to which Mr. Atocha may be entitled. And it being conceded that he was and is a citizen of the United States, they have confined themselves to the inquiry whether his claim was intended to be provided for by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and the affirmative of this question is, in their opinion, clearly demonstrated by the papers and proofs in the case.

Among the papers filed by Mr. Atocha your committee find the instructions of Santa Anna, then the president of the republic of Mexico, to the minister of his Government, charged with the negotiation of the treaty, directing him to have the name of Mr. Atocha inserted in the treaty as one whose claim was to be paid under its provisions, and they find other and repeated recognitions of its justice as against Mexico, from the obligations of which that Government claims to be released, solely because of the release by the United States, in that treaty, of all claims of its citizens against Mexico. We find that Mr. Almonte, the accredited minister of that republic to this Government, was instructed to see that this claim, "the most just of any which had been presented," should be paid from the fund which Mexico had provided by the sale of a part of her territory for the liquidation of claims of citizens of the United States against her.

With the presentation of another view of this subject, your committee will close this report.

After the board of commissioners had closed their labors, many citizens of the United States whose claims had been rejected petitioned Congress to review the decision of that board, and the Senate of the United States appointed a special committee to sit during the recess of Congress, with the power to send for persons and papers, and with instructions to examine each case and report such as, in their judgment, were entitled to relief.

That committee, in discharge of the duty assigned them, did investigate every claim which had been presented to the Senate for relief, and in every case, except this of Mr. Atocha, reported definitively. In his case no report was made because of an equal division of that committee upon his title to relief, so that this is the only case which has not received the supervision of the Senate, and it therefore appears to your committee that for this reason, also, the memorialist is entitled to have his claim now investigated, and affirmatively decided upon by the Government.

Your committee, in accordance with these views, have prepared, and submit herewith, a bill for the relief of the memorialist, which directs that his claim shall be investigated by the Court of Claims, and providing for the payment of such amount as shall be found due him, provided that the amount so paid shall not exceed the balance of the fund provided by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo which remains unapplied to the objects of that treaty.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to have the printed letters which I send to the desk read. I have the originals here.

Mr. HOWE. I appeal to the Senator to allow this case to go over.

Mr. STEWART. Let us hear something about the case first.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us adjourn.

Mr. STEWART. I will not give way to an adjournment until those letters are read. I ask to have them read as a part of my speech.

Mr. HOWE. I really supposed that this evening session was voted for the purpose of passing upon some claims from the Committee on Claims, and my table is covered with them; cases which will lead to no debate and afford a great deal of relief; but this case will evidently occupy the evening, and not be settled then. I wish the Senator would allow it to go over.

Mr. STEWART. Let us have a few minutes longer. Let us have those letters read. I ask Senators to listen to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. This paper is headed:

"Connection of Mr. A. J. Atocha with the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, by which California and New Mexico were acquired. Letters of Hon. Thomas H. Benton, James Buchanan, and Robert J. Walker."

Several SENATORS. We do not want those letters read.

Mr. STEWART. If we can have a vote on the bill I do not wish to debate it any further.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have something to say upon it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to propose an amendment. I move to strike out the second division. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of the bill after the word "deceased," in line ten, in the following words:

Second. Of the evidence of persons whose testimony cannot with due diligence be obtained, and also the official letters of the authorities of Mexico on the subject of this claim. And such evidence shall be received by the court, and the court shall give it such weight as in their judgment, under all the circumstances, it ought to have.

Mr. BUCKALEW. What I desire is to so amend the bill as to permit the use of this evidence where the witnesses are dead, and in the next place to permit the official documents before that commission to be used; but as to living witnesses I would not break down the rules of evidence, and in this case I think there is a particular reason. I do not know how the fact may be, but I suspect that those papers were ex parte; they were mere affidavits not taken with cross-examination; no representative of the Government of the United States or of the Government of Mexico being there.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, they were. They were taken under the rules which I hold in my hand, which requires the American consul to act for the United States, and they were to be taken before him, and he was to require evidence of the character and standing of the parties. They were taken in pursuance of the rules of the Department.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not know how that fact may be. They may have been taken before the American consul, and yet there may have been no cross-examination, no legal examination of witnesses; but, at all events, in a claim of such magnitude as this I think we ought to require the claimant, where witnesses are not living, to examine them as all other parties in courts of justice are required to examine witnesses, whether in our own or foreign countries.

Mr. NYE. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether, after all, when this evidence is submitted, the court is not the proper judge of its proper weight? I do not understand this bill as authorizing it to be evidence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly it does.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If you remove all the rules of evidence and allow the court to admit the parties to go before them and make their own statements, they might judge what they were worth.

Mr. NYE. Not at all. I understand the scope of this bill to be very different.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This bill is to relax the laws of evidence.

Mr. NYE. I do not so understand.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire by my amendment to relax them only in cases of witnesses who are now dead and who cannot be called, and in case of official documents having sanction by having been before that commission; but I think it is a shocking proposition to allow a party to read papers informally taken before a consul or before any other authority where the witnesses are now living.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I want to strike out the second clause, and ending before the reference to the public documents.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have it reported, so that I can understand what the amendment is.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by striking out the word "first" in line nine, and also by striking out in lines ten and eleven the words "second, of the evidence of persons whose testimony cannot, with due diligence, be obtained;" so that the bill will read:

That Alexander J. Atocha shall be, and is hereby, authorized, in the prosecution of his claim referred to the Court of Claims by the act to which this is an amendment, to use such portions of the evidence taken in pursuance of the rules and regulations of the commission established under the fifteenth section of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and laid before said commission as consists of the evidence of persons since deceased, and also the official letters of the authorities of Mexico on the subject of this claim, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend further by inserting after the word "Mexico," in the twelfth line, the words "which shall have been obtained pursuant to the said treaty and the rules and regulations of said commission;" so that it will read:

And also the official letters of the authorities of Mexico which shall have been obtained pursuant to the said treaty and the rules and regulations of said commission on the subject of this claim.

The treaty provides that application may be made to the Mexican Government for these official documents first. Then comes a proviso:

"Provided, That no such application shall be made by or at the instance of any claimant unless the facts which it is expected to prove by such books, records, or documents shall have been stated under oath or affirmation."

The object of that was, as the Senate will at once perceive, to enable the commission and the authorities of the United States who had got to pay this money to know the class of documentary evidence that was to be obtained, so that they could send out and get corresponding documentary evidence which might rebut it, or explain it, and so have notice of the nature of the evidence that was to be obtained. Now, then, if this man has obtained any official letters from Santa Anna, who made this very treaty, you understand, and was his friend—he was expelled with Santa Anna—which were not obtained upon notice such as the treaty provided, he ought not to be permitted to use them; but if he wants them now he should give notice in some way, so that the solicitor of the United States could send out and see that a full copy was obtained, and copies of any other documents which would throw light on it. I am sure my friend from Nevada will not object to that.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know about that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I wish to say a word or two more on the subject of the merits of this case. I want to ask Senators to reflect for a moment upon this, whether they believe that if what is contained in this present bill had been attached to the bill that was reported in 1865 it would have passed then. It appeared that previous committees of the Senate had been divided about it; and the ground upon which the bill of 1865 passed at all was that the very tribunal that all parties had agreed upon to try this cause had merely made an error of law, and had decided the cause wrong, because the law was different from what they supposed it to be. Would the Senate, if the language of this bill had been used, have revived this cause twenty years after the commissioners, fairly selected, having no interest, hearing this party upon his own proof, ex parte papers and arguments, had decided that he did not come within the treaty? I wish to ask this Senate if they would have passed this bill of 1865 with such an amendment as this, or declaring that he might try that question over again and every other question, and that they would permit him to use such testimony as he had taken ex parte before that commission who had decided against him, when no such privilege was extended to the United States?

I understand my friend from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] to agree with me that in his judgment the decision of the commission, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and that the committee of 1865 were wrong in deciding that that commission made a mistake; but he holds himself bound by the act of 1865 as foreclosing that question, so that by the law of 1865 it is to be taken that the decision of that commission was wrong. The act of 1865 does not declare that the decision of that commission was wrong by any means. It merely sends the case to the Court of Claims, after twenty years, to try it over again. Evidently, the act of 1865 passed as strong as it could be made for the benefit of this claimant consistent with the sense of Congress; and the same facts existed two years ago that exist now. Having therefore got this relief, so to speak, piecemeal, having got Congress to consent that upon the regular provision of proof he might go to the Court of Claims, he then turns around two years afterward, after that is partly forgotten, and says, "Now permit me to use the proof that the law does not permit any claimant in any court in the world to use," upon a claim, I beg Senators to understand that in the judgment of my friend from Indiana, and with proper modesty I may say my own, and I do not know but all the members of the committee agreed as to that—

Mr. STEWART. No!

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the judgment of my honorable friend from Indiana and of myself, the decision made twenty years ago was rightly made. If we are to review all the decisions which have been made against claimants by commissions that the Government has appointed to decide their cases, after twenty years, upon the ground that you can get a majority one day upon a hasty argument in the evening to decide that they had made a mistake in law, when the same persons might the next day decide otherwise, and then, in addition to that, declare that evidence which no court in the world receives shall be sufficient proof for him, it seems to me it is making a raid upon the Treasury that is a little too strong.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Vermont asks whether the Senate would have passed the bill in the form now suggested at the time they passed the original bill. I suppose the Senate intended at that time that the case should be heard before the court. I suppose they expected that this claimant would be heard; and if they had known that there was a technical obstacle in the way to prevent the case being heard I suppose they would have removed it at that time.

The Senator talks about legal proof. The testimony proposed to be admitted was taken according to the rules of the commission and with great particularity. The American consul in Mexico appeared for the United States. The parties were required to furnish evidence of their character and standing before him; but the testimony was not taken in a litigated case. If it had been taken in a litigated case under the rules of evidence, if the parties have since deceased, the evidence might be used. It has been taken in this case by depositions, and where the parties have died it might be used. It has been taken with about equal particularity. It is following the principle by which you use the testimony of witnesses since deceased in legal proceedings in many instances where you would not use it if they were living. It is following the well-known analogies of the law, and it is carrying out the idea of the act of 1865. That act is worth nothing without this. Several of the important witnesses, whose depositions have been carefully taken, are dead; and I think, as the bill is now amended, the chances are ninety-nine in a hundred that it will be impossible, in the revolutions in Mexico, to find the other witnesses who are living in order to obtain their testimony. Mr. Atocha is a cripple. He is sick and poor, and very likely it will be out of his power at this time to get the testimony of the witnesses whose testimony has been once taken. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania has probably placed it out of his power, if the bill passes; but certainly allowing the testimony of witnesses since deceased to be used is following nothing but the analogies of the law. It is perfectly in harmony with the spirit of the act of 1865 when it was passed.

Mr. DRAKE. So far as the remarks of the honorable Senator from Vermont would influence the mind of the Senate, when he declares that this evidence which it is sought to be allowed to be used is such as no court would allow to be used, perfectly ex parte in its character, I beg leave very respectfully to correct him. The law of the United States as it has stood on the statute-book, I think ever since 1789, authorizes depositions in every civil case pending in any United States court to be taken without notice to the opposite party where the place at which the depositions are to be taken is more than one hundred miles distant from the place where he resides.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this evidence is admissible now, what is the use of this bill?

Mr. DRAKE. The simple ground of its inadmissibility is, that it was not taken in the pending case. But, sir, in a United States court to-day, if the United States sues an individual, that individual may go to the furthest end of the nation and take the deposition of a witness there, without giving notice to the United States at all, and have that deposition, taken ex parte, and having no higher character than a mere affidavit, read on the trial of the case in virtue of the law of the United States regulating the matter; and that is just the character of the testimony which it is sought to give this man the benefit of in the case of witnesses who have died or whose testimony cannot now be procured; and yet the honorable Senator from Vermont says that that is to let in testimony in this case such as no court in the land would let in in any case. I beg leave to state that the Senator is mistaken in his facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Missouri confesses that this testimony would not be admissible in any court. He admits that; and yet he turns with the air of Paul to one of the youngest of the disciples, and tells me that I am mistaken in saying that no court in the world would admit this testimony. It is the very fact that no court in the world will admit it that makes it necessary for this claimant not only to carry a law through that gives this court jurisdiction, but to require it to decide without evidence, or upon such evidence as the claimant pleases to produce. That is the fact about it; while it does not give any such privilege to the United States. The United States is to find its evidence the best way it can. If the United States has taken any testimony that is on file anywhere, the Judiciary Committee, in its supreme wisdom, inasmuch as this man is a cripple, I suppose, as it is said, concluded it was best to debar the United States from having the same privilege that the claimant had. They only provided that this "new wrinkle" of law that my friend from Missouri is so fond of should be used for the benefit of the claimant and nobody else. If that is the kind of legislation to pay away the people's money, then I am opposed to it; that is all.

My friend from Nevada says that this gentleman is poor. I do not know but that he is; I take it for granted. He says he is a cripple. I dare say he is. There are many poor men and many cripples in the country, Mr. President, who have to pay taxes, and whose hard-earned dollars have got to pay just such claims as this. I am in favor of leaving the money, until a case is made out on the ordinary proofs, in the hands of the poor men whose sweat has to produce it, rather than to have them pay it out for the benefit of this claim.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On investigation of this case before the Committee on the Judiciary I agreed with the Senator from Vermont that the report of the committee in 1865 did not establish a case. I was not satisfied that there was a claim due this man Atocha; but I think that question was settled by Congress in 1865, that it was such a claim as ought to be heard in the Court of Claims.

The only question now presented to Congress is, whether we will allow some evidence already produced to be read which cannot be read under the existing law. This evidence, as it is now guarded in the bill, it seems to me will not endanger the interests and rights of the Government. I am willing to vote for the bill as it is now framed, although I think, as the case now stands, the Court of Claims will decide against the claim unless a different case is made out from that which was made before the committee when Senator Foster made his report.

I do not exactly feel as the Senator from Vermont does on this subject. I do not feel that this is paying money out by the Government of the United States. We agreed with Mexico in the treaty for the payment of certain moneys and reserved three million dollars and more to pay the claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Mexico. We retained the money in our own hands. The question is whether we will pay this claim, if the Court of Claims should so find, not out of money due the United States exactly, but out of moneys retained by the Government according to the terms of the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you contend that if we do not pay this to the claimant we shall have to pay it to Mexico?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a question that need not be settled now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my friend for his opinion, because we considered that in the committee, I remember, in connection with the treaty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It stands just thus: the Government of the United States agreed to pay Mexico $10,000,000, as I now recollect, for certain considerations; but in the treaty the Government of the United States retained $3,250,000, and became herself the paymaster to her own citizens of claims against the Government of Mexico. The money she retained was not her own, but money that she had agreed in other provisions of the treaty to pay to Mexico. She was the trustee to both Governments for the payment of the claimants who were citizens of the United States against the Government of Mexico. Suppose there had been no claims presented against the Government of Mexico at all, and no portion of that $3,250,000 had been paid out by the United States upon claims against Mexico, I ask the Senator from Vermont would we have retained that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; we should have retained it, clearly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not sure that we ought.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me read the treaty, and you will agree with me.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In a moment. I do not care much if Atocha gets something out of that money. I think it is really a question between him and Mexico, whether we, as trustee under that treaty, shall pay this claim to Atocha for a wrong which he claims the Government of Mexico did him, he being a citizen of the United States. I do not care if the Court of Claims shall take a liberal view of the case. If Santa Anna, in the exercise of powers as a dictator, banished Atocha from the City of Mexico upon charges not tried by any court, but heard by himself, and thus destroyed his estate and his interests, I do not care if Atocha does get some advantage, so far as the law will give it to him, and does get some portion of this money. I do not think the United States are so much interested in it. He was banished; banished without the decision of a court; banished under the command of a dictator. He was a citizen of the United States when he was banished. He said he had done no wrong. Still, I do not think that the report of the committee made out a case under the treaty. It did not at the time I investigated it.

Mr. COLE. Will the Senator from Indiana give way for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, no; my speech is not of that sort.

Mr. COLE. We cannot get through with this bill to-night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am just through.

Mr. CORBETT. I should like to know how long was this man a citizen of the United States?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not care if he was only a citizen for five minutes and a quarter. He was as much a citizen as it was possible for him to be.

Mr. CORBETT. I should like to know whether there is any evidence to substantiate that he was a citizen of the United States, and whether after he left the United States he did not become a citizen of Mexico?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand that all the evidence the Committee on the Judiciary had on the subject was the report made by Mr. Foster to the Senate in 1865, which goes upon the ground that Atocha being a citizen of the United States, but transacting commercial business in the city of Mexico, according to the comity between the two countries and according to treaty stipulations, he was banished by the decree of the dictator and his estates destroyed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, shall I read the treaty?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will read that part of the treaty just to show whether this $3,250,000 is money retained which otherwise would be due to Mexico, or whether it is money of the United States:

"ART. XII. In consideration of the extension acquired by the boundaries of the United States, as defined in the fifth article of the present treaty, the Government of the United States engages to pay to that of the Mexican republic the sum of $15,000,000."

"ART. XIV. The United States do further more discharge the Mexican republic from all claims of citizens of the United States not heretofore decided against the Mexican Government which may have arisen previously to the date of the signature of this treaty: which discharge shall be final and perpetual, whether the said claims be rejected or be allowed by the board of commissioners provided for in the following article, and whatever shall be the total amount of those allowed."

"ART. XV. The United States, exonerating Mexico from all demands on account of the claims of their citizens mentioned in the preceding article, and considering them entirely and forever canceled, whatever their amount may be, undertake to make satisfaction for the same, to an amount not exceeding $3,250,000. To ascertain the validity and amount of those claims a board of commissioners shall be established by the Government of the United States, whose awards shall be final and conclusive."

Then it goes on further as to what principles the board shall be guided by.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think there is some other provision of the treaty which bears on this subject, which I do not at present recollect?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; here is the treaty.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We held this money for that purpose.

Mr. DRAKE. Will the honorable Senator from Indiana allow me a word?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, my friend from Indiana was rather quicker in getting the floor after the close of the remarks of the Senator from Vermont than I was, and, by his courtesy, I am permitted to say a few words in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont seemed to think that he had settled that matter very conclusively; but I take leave to differ from him on that point. It seems that the United States is here a mere trustee, and when the evidence was taken before that commission the United States was represented, and the depositions were taken there with a representative of the United States present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the evidence of that?

Mr. DRAKE. You stated it, or the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You misunderstood him.

Mr. DRAKE. I understood that the consul there represented the Government of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; he was the magistrate before whom depositions were to be taken.

Mr. STEWART. By the rules established by the United States, the United State required the evidence to be taken before its consul.

Mr. DRAKE. Very well. Now the matter stands just in this way: under this treaty the evidence was taken in the manner stated. The presentation of that claim before that commission was in effect a suit against this trust fund in the hands of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was no trust fund.

Mr. DRAKE. If it was not a trust fund, I think it was a suit against the United States for claims against Mexico.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. DRAKE. Now, sir, what is the claim of Atocha in the Court of Claims but just a reproduction of that same suit against the United States in the Court of Claims after it had been before another forum? So that it is in effect just exactly what the Senator from Vermont specified as if it were in this suit, for it is about the same subject-matter, though it is in a different forum and the parties are different. It is Atocha against the United States. In the other it was Atocha against this money that the Mexican Government put there to have paid to citizens of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DRAKE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish he would tell the Senate what he thinks of that clause of the treaty under which this man filed his claim which declares that the decision of that tribunal shall be final and conclusive upon him.

Mr. DRAKE. That is a totally different question from that upon which I am at issue with the Senator from Vermont. I am not going into the merits of the case. The Senator from Vermont affirmed before the Senate squarely that we were going to let in by this bill such evidence as no court in the country would let in. I take issue with him. I say that it is a litigation here about the same subject-matter concerning which the depositions were taken before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then what is the use of this bill?

Mr. DRAKE. Because, under the rules of evidence that they have, it cannot be admitted without legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then by law it is not admissible.

Mr. DRAKE. By the present law it is not admissible; but we want to make a law by which it shall be admissible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is not admissible by law, would a court admit it; and if a court would not admit it, is not my assertion correct?

Mr. DRAKE. It is an extremely ingenious resort which the Senator from Vermont makes. My position is that the evidence was taken about the subject-matter, and in a case in effect, not in form, against the same parties; and that being the case, why should we not let the man have the benefit of the evidence he has taken in the former phase of the case, when the witnesses are now dead and their testimony cannot be obtained?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not let the United States have the same privilege?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the United States acquired a vast mineral country from Mexico. It has resulted in almost untold millions of dollars to our country. A part of the consideration, indeed most of the consideration of that vast purchase, was $15,000,000. Citizens of the United States had claims against the Government of Mexico, and it was stipulated in one of the articles of the treaty that of that $15,000,000, $3,250,000 should be reserved in the hands of the United States to satisfy the claims which the citizens of the United States had against Mexico. Those claims might have amounted to five or ten millions, or any sum above $3,250,000; but the effect of that treaty was that those claims, whatever they amounted to, should be satisfied by $3,250,000. Many of the claims had been presented against the Mexican Government and liquidated and paid. It has left a balance yet unappropriated of about five hundred thousand dollars. It is said that this claim of Atocha amounts to two or three million dollars. If it should amount to the whole of that sum, $3,000,000, by the terms of the treaty, he cannot receive more than the residue of the $3,250,000 that is now in the possession of the Government of the United States for the satisfaction of such claims.

The Government of the United States presents itself in this position to its own citizens and to Mexico: whatever be the amount of the valid claims which the people of the United States have against Mexico they are to be satisfied, so far as Mexico is bound to pay them, by $3,250,000. This claim, it is said, amounts to two or three millions. If it does amount to that, the uttermost cent that Atocha can have of claim against the Treasury of the United States or Mexico is the residue of that fund of $3,250,000, after deducting the amount that has been paid to other claimants; and that is stated to be about $500,000.

I was on the Committee on Foreign Relations, three or four years ago, when this subject was considered. I examined the claim twice, and I came deliberately to the conclusion that it was a claim founded in justice. Mr. Atocha was a Spaniard by birth. He came to the United States and resided a while in New Orleans, and was there naturalized. He then went to Mexico for the purposes of trade and commerce. While he was there he was charged with being complicated with some faction, and was banished by the ruling authorities of Mexico summarily and immediately from the territory of Mexico. The Committee on Foreign Relations, of which Mr. Foster was then a member, examined the subject, and I examined the case twice afterward as carefully as I could, and concurred with him in all of his conclusions in the report that he made as to the facts and the law. The committee became thoroughly satisfied that Mr. Atocha had not been complicated in the political intrigues for which he was banished, but was entirely innocent of such a charge. The committee also examined the treaty of 1831 between Mexico and the United States, which stipulated mutually that the citizens of the respective countries should not be banished from the other until they were allowed six months for the purpose of prosecuting and winding up their business and leaving the country without loss. I am satisfied that this claim is one of merit, that Atocha, a citizen of the United States, whom I saw here repeatedly for three or four years, was not implicated in any political intrigue in Mexico, and that the pretext upon which he was banished was assumed and had no foundation in fact. I am perfectly satisfied, as was Mr. Foster, who was one of the most accurate lawyers and one of the most careful committee-men that I ever served with in this body, that he was banished by the ruling authorities of Mexico in flagrant violation of the express articles of the treaty of 1831.

The committee did not pretend to ascertain the amount of his claim. They referred the ascertainment of its amount to the Treasury officers. They merely decided, in each case, that he had a just claim for some amount against Mexico, which the United States, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and by the reservation of $3,250,000, was responsible to pay to the extent of that $3,250,000 so far as it had not been appropriated; and they merely reported a bill to have it settled upon proper principles, and I think with the guards thrown about the present bill it ought unquestionably to pass.

Mr. CONKLING. Trusting in the sense of justice of the Senate, I move that we now adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I had not yielded the floor, and I want to make a single remark before I do. The Senator from Missouri asked me to yield to him for a moment, and I did so, and then I yielded to the Senator from Kentucky. I wish merely to say—

Mr. CONKLING. I think a Senator who becomes so prodigal with the floor, and squanders it as the Senator from Indiana has, should not be allowed to retain it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot resist an appeal of that sort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that when a Senator yields the floor he yields it for good.

Mr. HENDRICKS. At this time of night that is a good rule; but I want to make a personal remark before the Senator from New York submits his motion.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I stated in response to the Senator from Vermont that I thought this $3,250,000 was reserved, under the terms of the treaty, from the ten or fifteen millions that were to be paid. I think I was mistaken in that. I must have had my memory impressed with the reading of some other treaty. I find that this obligation of the Government of the United States to our own citizens to the extent of $3,250,000 was in addition to the $15,000,000.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, Mr. President, the Senator having apologized for his position in this matter, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 1, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

On motion of Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, the reading of yesterday's Journal was dispensed with.

CLERKS' EXTRA COMPENSATION.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I present the petition of fifteen hundred and fifty-six clerks for extra compensation for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Cannot that be referred under the rules?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Then let it take that course.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I will refer it under the rules.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be directed to inquire into the expediency of reporting, without unnecessary delay, a funding bill providing for the consolidation of all the bonded indebtedness of the United States into five per cent. bonds, payable at the option of the Government after ten years; or four and a half per cent., payable at the option of the Government after thirty years; or into four per cent. bonds, in the form of interminable annuities, the holders of outstanding bonds to have their choice of these three forms of securities.

Mr. POMEROY. I object.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM FLORIDA.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am directed by the Committee of Elections to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That Charles M. Hamilton is entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative from the State of Florida.

The committee finds his credentials are in due form, and we have a certificate that the State has adopted the fourteenth constitutional amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. Has there been any question of his personal fitness and qualification?

Mr. SCOFIELD. None. It is all right.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of House bill No. 1131, regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases, for the protection of officers and agents of the Government, and for the better defense of the Treasury against unlawful claims, reported back yesterday from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] with amendments.

First amendment of the committee:

Add to the second section the following proviso: Provided, That this section shall not be construed so as to deprive aliens who are citizens or subjects of any Government which accords to citizens of the United States the right to prosecute claims against such Government in its courts, of the privilege of prosecuting claims against the United States in the Court of Claims as now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Second and third amendments:

Insert after the word "allegation," in sections two and three, the words "if the fact be sustained by the proof."

The amendments were severally agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ORTH, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported adversely on the following cases, and the same were laid on the table:

The memorial of Thomas H. Dowling;
The claim of heirs of Philip Revantho;
The petition of the New York Central College to have a certain tract of land confirmed to it for the education of colored youths;
A bill (H. R. No. 399) for the relief of David A. Miller; and
A bill (H. R. No. 433) for the relief of the heirs of Simeon Castro and their assignees.

LAND IN BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. ORTH, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 469) confirming the title to a tract of land in Burlington, Iowa, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill provides that the title of the United States to a certain tract of land in the city of Burlington, Iowa, which was reserved from sale by the United States and dedicated to public burial purposes, be confirmed and vested in the independent school district of said city, to be forever dedicated and used for public school purposes, and for no other use or purpose whatever.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUEBLO OF SANTA ANNA.

Mr. ORTH, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1343) to confirm the title to certain land to the pueblo of Santa Anna, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

The bill confirms the title of certain lands lying upon the Jernez or Santa Anna rivers, not exceeding four square leagues in extent, provided that the confirmation shall only be construed as a relinquishment on the part of the United States, and shall not affect any adverse right, should any such exist.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ORTH, the report of the committee accompanying the above bill was ordered to be printed.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

CHARLES M. HAMILTON, a member-elect from the State of Florida, appeared and was duly qualified as a member of the House of Representatives by taking the oath prescribed by law.

LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. ORTH, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1344) to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

The bill confirms the claim to certain private lands, numbered 41, 42, 44, 46, and 47, in the Territory of New Mexico, provided that such confirmation shall only be construed as a quit-claim or relinquishment of all title or claim on the part of the United States to the same, and shall not affect the adverse rights of any person or persons to the same, or any part or parcel thereof. Sections two and three provide for the survey of the lands and the issue of patents therefor.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES MAY.

Mr. BAILEY, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1109) for the relief of Charles May, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred House bill No. 1109, for the relief of Charles May, and the memorial accompanying the same, may defer their report thereon until the next session of this Congress, and in the mean time that the said bill and memorial be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with directions to ascertain the facts upon which the claim of said May is based, and any other facts properly connected therewith, and that he report the same at the next session of said Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

The bill was then recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LAND CLAIM IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BAILEY, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 166) for the relief of the owners of the land within United States survey No. 3217, in the State of Missouri.

The bill was read. By its terms the United States release, grant, relinquish, convey, and confirm in fee-simple and in full property to the legal representatives of Ann O. Camp and Antoine Reihle all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of the land within United States survey No. 3217, in townships forty-four and forty-five, north of the base line in ranges six and seven, east of the principal meridian line in the State of Missouri, being the same land that was surveyed by the United States for Madame Camp and Antoine Reihle's representatives, containing two thousand nine hundred and five arpents, fifty-six perches and forty feet, which is equal to two thousand four hundred and seventy-one acres and seventy-six hundredths of an acre; provided that nothing in the bill shall abridge, divest, impair, injure, or prejudice any adverse right, title, or interest of any person or persons in or to any portion or part of the land.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAILEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANN D. DURING.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 910) for the relief of the grantees of Ann D. Durning.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1348) to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. DUNN.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1846) for the relief of William A. Dunn, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

LUCINDA PANGLE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1347) for the relief of Lucinda Pangle; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

COLONEL S. K. N. PATTON.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1848) for the relief of S. K. N. Patton, late colonel of the eighth Tennessee cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GABRIEL CERRE AND SOPHIA BOLAYE.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 1204, to confirm certain private land claims in the State of Missouri.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, provides that the claims of the legal representatives of Gabriel Cerre and Sophia Bolaye, falling within the exterior boundaries of the commons of Carondelet, the former entered as No. 60 for four hundred arpents, and the latter as No. 279 for one hundred and fifty arpents, in the first class of decisions of the board of land commissioners under the acts of Congress of 9th July, 1832, and 2d March, 1833, for the adjustment of private land claims in Missouri, which claims were confirmed by act of Congress July 4, 1836, subject to location elsewhere than in place in case of conflict, are hereby confirmed in place subject to any valid adverse rights, if such exist, and patents for said claims shall be issued accordingly.

Mr. NEWCOMB. This bill involves the title to land in the State of Missouri to the value of several hundred thousand dollars. It was introduced and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims without my knowledge, and I was not aware that any such bill was before the House until the committee was prepared to report upon it. I am not prepared to say, however, that the passage of this bill would work any wrong or injury to any party. But inasmuch as this land lies in my district and is very valuable, and the title is in dispute and has been for a great many years, I would ask that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the first Tuesday in December next, after the morning hour, so that we may have an opportunity to examine the facts in the case and be able to act more intelligently than we can now.

Mr. PILE. I desire to state only that this bill was brought to me by General Bent during the morning hour call for bills and joint resolutions. Not seeing in his seat my colleague who represents that district, [Mr. NEWCOMB,] I introduced the bill and had it referred. I have no knowledge of the facts in the case. I omitted, as I ought not to have done, to inform my colleague of the nature of the bill. I hope it will be postponed at his request until it can be examined.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The Committee on Private Land Claims examined this bill very carefully, and were satisfied that it was correct; but if the gentleman who introduced it here desires it to be postponed, of course the committee will not object.

Mr. NEWCOMB. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the first Tuesday in December next, after the morning hour.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with a substitute, House bill No. 1206, to restore to certain parties their rights under the laws and treaties of the United States.

The substitute, which was read, provides that each and every person claiming land in California by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican authorities, and whose claim has not been adjudicated by the commission created by act of Congress approved March 3, 1851, and record evidence of which claim is found in the Spanish or Mexican archives now in the custody of the United States surveyor general for the State of California, shall within one year after the date of this act present his petition in writing for the same to the United States district court for the district in which the land claimed is situated, with such documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses as the said claimant relies upon in support of such claim; and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had in said district court, in relation to the hearing and decision of said claim in all respects, as though it had been presented to and decided adversely to said claim by the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851, except that no transcript of the report or proceedings of said commission shall be presented to the said district court, and the survey of any grant which may be confirmed under this act shall be subject to the provisions of the act of June 14, 1860; provided, however, that from the decision therein, both on the title and on the survey and location, appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States within six months after such decision has been rendered, and that the same proceedings for the hearing and decision thereof shall be had, and the judgment of the district court shall have the same effect as is provided by the act hereinbefore referred to; and provided further that such confirmation shall not affect the rights of third parties, but shall establish simply the title of the claimant as between him and the United States.

Mr. STONE. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred House bill No. 1206, have had the same under consideration, and find the facts to be these:

That the United States solemnly promised by their treaty with Mexico to protect the rights of private property; that no man's land should be taken from him if he had a title which the Mexican laws held to be good.

This provision of the treaty merely embodied in the form of an express stipulation what had always been recognized as international law.

In 1851, a commission was created by act of Congress to investigate these Mexican land titles, with power to confirm the genuine and reject the spurious claims, and reserving both to the claimant and to the Government the right to appeal, first to the district court, and thence to the Supreme Court of the United States. All claims were to be presented within two years after the date of the act; and by subsequent acts this time was extended two years more.

This law operated with some severity upon the owners of sound and honest titles, but it was made necessary by the enormous number of false and fraudulent claims which were set up to the most valuable lands in California.

When the commission began their labors the records of the former Government were not known to exist in any completeness, had not been collected or examined, and were not resorted to or relied upon as evidence. Whoever could produce a title-paper, and prove its proper execution by parole evidence, had his claim confirmed. Record evidence was not required.

This rule opened wide the door to forgery and perjury. Title-papers were antedated or forged, and men found to swear them genuine.

At length the Attorney General, alarmed at the number of alleged frauds, caused the archives of the former Government to be collected and carefully examined, and, to the surprise of everybody, these were found to be entire and reliable. The means of testing the validity of any claim was now at hand, and from that day to this the courts have subjected all claims coming before them to this test.

As late as 1864 the Supreme Court said: "It has been held by this court, in a long and unbroken line of adjudications, that where there is no archive evidence, and its absence is unaccounted for, and there has been no such possession as raises an equity in behalf of the party," * * * "the claim must be rejected. We feel no disposition to relax the rule."

Such is now the law. But all this was settled after the time had gone by when claims could be presented or heard, and after meritorious and just claims had been rejected or withdrawn on account of the enforcement of the title-paper rule.

The limitation clause of the statute cut these claimants off and denied them a hearing under the new and true rule of evidence established by the Supreme Court consequent upon the discovery of the archives.

This bill extends the limitation-clause of the statute one year, and gives claimants who have archive evidence of title a hearing; and it is all that it gives them. This they ask; and it is all they ask.

The facts in a single case will make this whole matter plain.

In 1837, Juan Miranda, a Mexican soldier, accepted a provisional grant of a then outlying ranch in California, and on this ranch lived with his large family until 1845, when he died. The year before his death he perfected his title to the ranch, and all the papers were duly recorded in the archives of the Mexican Government, and there they are to-day. His title to the land was as good as the laws of that country could give to any man.

His family continued to live upon the ranch till after the conquest of the country. Meanwhile Miranda's title-paper was lost.

A certain Ortega, son-in-law of Miranda, aware of this loss, procured title-papers to this same ranch in his own name, and dated them back to 1840.

The heirs of Miranda sold their title to Valentine; Ortega sold his to White; and the purchasers presented their respective claims to the land commission for confirmation.

The Ortega title was confirmed, for it had the title-paper, while the other had none.

In fact, so complete was the fraud that the adverse claimant himself was deceived, and withdrew his claim. The district court was also deceived, and confirmed the decree of the land commission in favor of Ortega.

Meanwhile new facts came to light, through the efforts of the Attorney General, and the case was carried up to the Supreme Court.

There it was broadly challenged as a cheat and a forgery. The judgment of the court below was set aside, and the record remitted for further proceedings in the district court.

Judge Hoffman took up the case ab initio, patiently examined all the facts, and, in an opinion of great ability, exposed the utter fraud of the Ortega title.

In 1864 the case came again to the Supreme Court, and the judgment of the district court was affirmed.

Thus, after twelve years of hot litigation, was this spurious title swept away.

The United States never pretended to have any title to this ranch. The Supreme Court distinctly said: "It is clear from the evidence in this case that, as against the United States, either Ortega or Miranda has a just claim to a confirmation of his title to the tract in dispute. But whether Ortega was landlord and Miranda his tenant, or which of the claimants has attempted to overreach the other, are questions in which the Government has no interest." And, again, in the same opinion the court said: * * * "The Government surely has no right to claim that the land shall be considered as part of the public domain." So it is seen that the Ortega title was a cheat, and that the United States did not even pretend to have any title. The title to this ranch was clearly in Miranda. No one will now stand up to deny it. If, therefore, Valentine, who holds it, be not protected in his possession, the default will not only shock all sense of natural justice, but break the faith pledged by our treaty with Mexico and violate the public law of the world.

Your committee think, therefore, that the relief asked for by this bill should be granted.

It is the interest of all parties that these few outstanding claims should be disposed of, and not left to cloud the possessions of those who may have settled upon any portion of the lands. If these claims, or any of them, are good, the faith of the nation is pledged by treaty to confirm them; if they are bad, it will be so shown on the hearing, and they will be rejected. The time has gone by when any but meritorious titles can be confirmed by the courts. But so long as these outstanding claims exist there is no security that legislative relief will not be given sooner or later, and a feeling of doubt and uncertainty must continue.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STONE] to yield to me.

Mr. STONE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. STONE. I yield to allow the amendment to be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment which I desire to offer is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That all persons who, previous to the passage of this act, have acquired any valid right or title to any of the lands embraced within the provisions of this act, under the preemption or homestead laws or otherwise, shall be protected in their right.

Mr. Speaker, I had no idea that this bill was coming up to-day; otherwise, I should have been prepared to discuss it. But even if I had come before the House much better prepared than I am, it would not have availed me, because I am limited to five minutes' time. I admit, Mr. Speaker, that those owning Mexican land claims in California who did not present their claims to the land commissioners should be protected in their claims, because we agreed in our treaty with Mexico that we would protect such claims. But, Mr. Speaker, while I admit the justice of allowing these gentlemen to prove their claims, I also recognize the rights of the settlers upon these lands in the State of California, which seven or eight years ago became vacant and were declared public lands by this Government, and were taken up by actual settlers, the Government of the United States extending the public surveys over these lands. Every acre or nearly every acre covered by every one of these grants has been taken up by preëmptors and settlers. Nine tenths of all the land covered by these grants have been entered by settlers, and patents have been issued by the Government of the United States. I say that these settlers have equities as well as the grant holders. And let me say right here that if Congress intends to hold out false inducements to the hard-fisted yeomanry of this country to go upon the public domain and open up farms, and then by legislation turn them out and give their homes to speculators, this Congress had better be disbanded. I say that the passage of such an act as this would be an outrage upon the rights of the people in the State of California. There are, perhaps, fifteen thousand farmers who would be turned out of house and home by the passage of this act unless my amendment is allowed to prevail. I hope that this House will never commit such an outrage upon the rights of settlers.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that if we were creating a new claim here the settler could not be interfered with, and that this amendment would be useless. But we are reestablishing an old claim, one that existed long prior to the entry and patent of these lands. I hope that the House will allow this amendment to be adopted. It is proper and just; and it is law, if there is any virtue in acts of Congress heretofore passed. Seven or eight different congressional enactments have been made to induce settlers to go upon those lands. By, I believe, eight different acts of Congress these lands have been declared to be public lands; and, in addition to this, the act of 1862 required the actual settlers to pay for the survey. The settlers whom this bill is to turn out of house and home have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in surveying the public lands covered by these grants. Is it right, after charging a man twenty-five, thirty, forty, or fifty dollars, or may be one hundred dollars, for the survey of the land because it happened to be covered by an old grant which had run out of date, is it right to make him pay this and then $1 25 per acre, and after he has got his patent and spent some twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars—I have known cases where men have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in beautifying their places—is it right, after all this, to turn him out of house and home; after, as I said before, the Government of the United States publishing that this was public land and could be taken up by actual settlers?

I appeal to the House to let the amendment be adopted for the protection of the actual settlers. While I do this, I admit the equity of this class of grant holders in the bill. If, because of the laches of parties in not presenting their claim according to the law they have lost their claims, then they should ask the liberty of taking other public land elsewhere instead of this. That would be just and proper; but it would not be just and proper, on the contrary, to turn all these settlers adrift after they have expended thirty or forty million dollars in improving their ranches.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MULLINS. I ask for a minute.

Mr. STONE. I yield to the gentleman for one minute.

Mr. MULLINS. I rise for the purpose of opposing this amendment. Taking the ground advocated by the gentleman who urges the amendment, taking his argument yesterday that treaties were solemn—and he maintained that doctrine urgently and defiantly almost, holding it over us in terrorem—the gentleman's position is untenable. Here is a treaty between the United States and Mexico, solemnly ratified, which guarantees the rights of these parties who have these grants from the Mexican Government. Now the gentleman comes in and says that because we have the power these claimants shall be denied all the rights they were guaranteed under the treaty.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's one minute has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. I only want half a minute.

Mr. HIGBY. I yield half a minute to my colleague.

Mr. JOHNSON. In regard to the treaties the gentleman speaks about I know he speaks of them because he has no knowledge of the meaning of those treaties. We agreed to protect these individuals in their rights, whatever they may be; but they are inchoate. There is a grant of land of three leagues within an exterior limit of thirty leagues; it is to be located; it is nothing; it is an inchoate title; it is an inchoate equity, to be protected and brought about by the legislation of this Government. This Government said, "Present your claim within five years, and you shall have your rights; after that, if you do not, you shall have none."

Mr. MULLINS. The report is against you.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is based upon a false state of facts.

Mr. STONE. I yield now to the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. HIGBY.]

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, as early as 1863, in the Legislature of the State of California, this question came up; Congress was taking action on the subject; the Legislature memorialized Congress to take no further action; there was an investigation there, and it turned out between Ortega and Miranda there was supposed to be a title, but by some management between them they did not procure a title, and the statute of limitation expired before Ortega, if he had any, perfected his title. I know all about this transaction. In some of the cases there were stipulations. Some of the parties on the land are not only under the title of the United States but of one of these parties by a deed. I verify what my colleague has said. There are settlements of the finest character upon these lands, which are of the best quality. There is a town of two or three thousand inhabitants upon them, a well built, substantial town; there is property to the value of millions upon this tract, the title to which this act proposes to revive in one individual. I do not speak for my constituency, for I have no constituents where this land lies, but I speak on previous knowledge of this subject. Pass this bill, and it steps in with this title of one individual and deprives men of title which they have from the United States. This is the simple state of the fact.

Mr. STONE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ORTH. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California in the shape of a proviso to this bill. That proviso seems to recognize rights acquired under the homestead or preemption laws of the United States upon the lands embraced within this Miranda grant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand this matter, it is exceedingly plain and simple, not only so far as the treaty rights of the Miranda claim are concerned, but so far as the adjudication of these rights are concerned in by the Supreme Court of the United States. By the treaty under which we acquired California we solemnly agreed with that republic to protect her citizens in the enjoyment of all rights of property which they had under the republic of Mexico. Prior to that treaty Miranda, a citizen of the republic of Mexico, in 1867 accepted a grant under the land laws of Mexico, filed his petition, had a survey made, and was placed in possession of the lands. Thus matters stood at the time of the acquisition of California by this Government. After the acquisition of California, I think in 1855, the United States Congress passed a law providing for a commission to examine all titles in California arising under that treaty. A Mr. Ortega, who, I believe, was a son-in-law of Miranda, the latter having died in the meantime, got up a forged title to the claim to this property. While Miranda's claim was pending before this commission, and before the court in California, Ortega came in as a counter claimant, and so specious was the fraud which he had perpetrated upon the interest of Miranda, that even the commission and the court were deceived, and it was not till afterward, by the vigilance of the Attorney General of the United States, the fraud was discovered, and Ortega was driven out of court with his fraudulent claim. In the mean time, however, the statute of limitations provided for in the act of 1865 expired, and Miranda was left without any right to prosecute his claim under the provisions of said act; and the claim now rests upon its original right under the treaty.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over till to-morrow in the morning hour.

DEPUTY COLLECTORS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, suggesting an amendment to the pending appropriation bill allowing deputy collectors to receive pay for actual service performed; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPENDITURES OF PEACE COMMISSIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with House resolution of the 22d ultimo, vouchers on file relative to the expenditures made by the peace commission acting under the act of July 20, 1867, relative to certain hostile Indians.

On motion of Mr. COBB, the communication was referred to the Committee of Claims.

NIOBRARA TOWNSHIP.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriations to pay demands sustained by settlers in Niobrara township, Nebraska, by reason of locating Santee Sioux Indians on their lands in 1866; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for one week was granted to Messrs. NICHOLSON, BOYER, and ARCHER; and indefinite leave of absence to Messrs. CARY, KETCHAM, and FERRISS.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. BANKS. Before moving to go into the Committee of the Whole, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORHEAD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill (H. R. No. 1345) to increase the revenue from duties on imports and tending to equalize exports and imports; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that it be made the special order for Friday next after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That motion requires unanimous consent.

Mr. MARSHALL. I object.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I then give notice that after the Alaska matter is disposed of I shall move to lay aside all other business in order to reach this bill.

Mr. KOONTZ. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MARSHALL. No, sir; I cannot.

BRIDGE IN BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. BANKS. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook.]

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall detail two competent and impartial officers of the Navy, and the Secretary of War shall detail a competent and impartial officer of the engineer corps, who shall compose a commission whose duty it shall be to make a careful examination of the harbor of Boston and shall report to Congress at its next session in what manner the commerce of said harbor and the interests of the United States in the navy-yard at Charlestown will be affected by the construction of a bridge over the water between the main land in the city of Boston and East Boston, in the manner provided in an act of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts entitled "An act to incorporate the Maverick Bridge Company," and no bridge is to be erected by the said company across the said water until the assent of Congress shall be given thereto.

Mr. COOK. I will explain the resolution in a minute or two.

Mr. BANKS. I reserve the right to claim the floor if the debate goes too far.

Mr. COOK. A bill giving the assent of Congress to the erection of a bridge across Boston harbor under the charter granted to the Maverick Bridge Company by the Legislature of Massachusetts was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals. On examining the question, the committee found that in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, the chief of the engineer corps, and the officers attached to the Coast Survey connected with the harbor of Boston, this bridge would be a very great injury to the commerce of the harbor, and also would injure the interests of the United States in the navy-yard at Charlestown. Under that charter granted by the Legislature of Massachusetts the committee believe that this bridge may be erected, unless Congress shall interfere, and the Secretary of the Navy has addressed a communication to the committee asking for this action.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of citizens of Charlestown, Massachusetts, protesting against the erection of the bridge; which were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. NEWCOMB asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence after to-day.

THE SUTRO TUNNEL.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, by unanimous consent, presented communications from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior concerning the bill (H. R. No. 1153) asking aid for the construction of the Sutro tunnel; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the Committee on Mines and Mining accompanying the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, if the Alaska bill shall not be disposed of, I shall move to postpone it for the purpose of taking up the appropriation bills.

Mr. BANKS. Till what time?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Until next week.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. Banks] does not object to that.

Mr. BANKS. With the understanding that it shall preserve its place as a special order I will not object; but I would like to have the consent of the House that the vote on the bill shall be taken on Thursday of next week, after the reading of the Journal, without debate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let that be the understanding.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Do I understand that when the bill comes up to be voted on the resolutions reported by the minority of the committee will first be voted on?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and not for the Speaker.

Mr. BANKS. There will be no objection to voting on any proposition that properly belongs to the subject.

Mr. BLAINE. Is it understood that to-morrow the House will go into Committee of the Whole on the deficiency bill?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. On the deficiency bill, and the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The understanding is that the vote will be taken on the Alaska bill and amendments in Committee of the Whole on Thursday of next week, after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope it will be the general understanding that if there are any members who desire to speak to-night the Committee of the Whole shall be authorized to take a recess from half past four to half past seven this evening, the session of to-night to be for debate only on the Alaska bill.

No objection was made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. VAN TRUMP asked and obtained leave of absence for six days.

Mr. TABER asked and obtained leave of absence from Thursday of this week until Tuesday evening of next week.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that so many members have obtained indefinite leave of absence that unless some of them return it may be difficult to obtain a working quorum after the Fourth of July.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I give notice that for the present I will object to any more indefinite leaves of absence being granted.

FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

Mr. ARNELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to communicate to this House the reports of Major General Carlin for the past six months relative to the condition of freedmen's affairs in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I now insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. GARFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. It will be recollected that when the committee rose last night I had the floor. My purpose was to address the committee on the same side upon which two gentlemen had previously addressed the committee. I prefer, however, that the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN], who represents the views of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] shall first address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the House on yesterday ordered that when the consideration of this subject was resumed by the Committee of the Whole to-day the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] should be entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. And unanimous consent was also given that I should take the floor at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand that I hold the floor from last night, and I do not know that it can be taken from me without my consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The House by unanimous consent yesterday ordered that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] should be entitled to the floor this morning, and the Chair will be compelled to carry out that order, notwithstanding the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] had the floor when the committee rose last night.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, then addressed the Committee of the Whole for two hours. [See Appendix.]

At the expiration of the second hour,

The CHAIRMAN said: The second hour of the time allowed to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ORTH. I understood the extension of time to the gentleman to be indefinite.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair construes the extension of time, under repeated decisions of the House, to be for one hour unless a shorter time is named.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I have been speaking with the understanding that my time was extended indefinitely. There are certain points in the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] that I must answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule explicitly states that an indefinite extension of time shall be construed to mean not more than one hour.

Mr. RAUM. I move that the gentleman's time be extended thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I think somebody else ought to have a chance to talk ten minutes. I object to any further extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended fifteen minutes.

Mr. HIGBY. I object. The result of this practice of extending the time of gentlemen is to crowd out many others who desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will proceed.

Mr. CULLOM. Could not the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin a few minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I only want ten minutes.

Mr. PRICE. I have already agreed to yield portions of my time to three or four gentlemen.

Mr. HIGBY. I will withdraw my objection so far as to allow the gentleman to speak ten minutes longer.

Mr. MALLORY. I renew the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to granting any more time to the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman from Iowa will accordingly proceed or surrender the floor.

Mr. PRICE. I yield to my colleague [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] to move an amendment to this bill.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move to amend this bill by inserting before the section it now contains the following preamble and section:

Whereas the President of the United States, on the 30th of March, 1867, entered into a treaty with the Emperor of Russia, by that act of which it was stipulated that in consideration of the cession by the Emperor of Russia to the United States of certain territory therein described the United States should pay to the Emperor of Russia the sum of $7,200,000 in coin; and whereas it was further stipulated in said treaty that the United States shall accept of such cession, and that certain inhabitants of said territory shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights and immunities of citizens of the United States; and whereas the subjects thus embraced in the stipulations of said treaty are among the subjects which by the Constitution of the United States are submitted to the power of Congress, and over which Congress has exclusive jurisdiction; and it being for such reason necessary that the consent of Congress should be given to the said treaty before the same can have full force and effect, having taken into consideration the said treaty, and approving of the stipulations therein, to the end that the same may be carried into effect: Therefore,

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the stipulations of said treaty.

Mr. PRICE. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] to offer an amendment.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to amend this bill by adding to it the following:

Provided, That no purchase in behalf of the United States of foreign territory shall be hereafter made until after provision by law for its payment. And it is hereby declared that all powers vested by the Constitution in the President and Senate to enter into treaties with foreign Governments do not include the power to complete the purchase of foreign territory before the necessary appropriations shall be made therefor by act of Congress.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the gentleman will not object to this provision being incorporated in the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. BANKS. I must object to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. ELIOT.] It is not germane to the bill. The bill before the committee is to carry into effect a treaty, while the proposition of my colleague is general legislation, as is also the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The treaty is not interfered with, so far as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] is concerned. That amendment is in the nature of a declaration of opinion by this House in regard to the subjects of treaties. If it went so far as to make it conditional that the treaty should not be carried out unless something else was done, then the Chair would consider it out of order.

Mr. PRICE. If there be no objection, I will now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] for five minutes; but I do not want it to come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. MALLORY. I object.

Mr. PRICE. I now yield a few minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MUNGEN.]

Mr. MUNGEN. In order to relieve the apprehensions of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN,] as well as others who may honestly, perhaps, think as he does on the subject of this appropriation, I am authorized by gentlemen abundantly able to fulfill it, to make the following proposition, provided such an arrangement can be legally effected, of which I have but little, if any, doubt. The proposal is:

That a company of gentlemen will, within twenty days from and after the date when Congress assents to the proposition, pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $10,000,000 in gold for the territory of Alaska; these gentlemen taking the fee simple therefor and leaving the right of eminent domain in the Government of the United States.

Gentlemen cannot, on pecuniary grounds, object to this proposition, for it leaves a clear net profit of $2,800,000 in gold in the Treasury of the United States, growing out of and the direct result of this treaty. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] says in proof of the worthlessness, sterility, barrenness, and humidity of Alaska, that he brings "official reports" to sustain him. Does the gentleman claim that Campbell's poem, "The Pleasures of Hope," written, beautiful as it is, by an Englishman, who never saw Alaska, nor, so far as I know, even the continent of America, except to visit the little village of Wyoming, in Pennsylvania, a poem clearly and evidently the mere creature of his imagination, is an official report? He quoted largely from that some time since against this bill. Many more of his authorities and references are of a character entitled to no more credit in a scientific or geographic point of view than is "The Pleasures of Hope," yet he says he relies on official reports. If I am not mistaken, the same authority in the same poem speaks of tigers and other tropical animals infesting the shores of Lake Erie.

Without stopping to discuss the treaty-making power from a constitutional point of view, it is enough to say that by the Constitution the treaty-making power was vested in the Executive by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Under the beautiful principle of checks and balances recognized in our system of government, where each department exists independent of the other, so far as its peculiar functions are concerned, yet all are so blended as to work in perfect harmony and accord, the treaty-making power was, by the wisdom of our forefathers, placed where it is. As one sworn to support that Constitution I recognize the right of the Senate and the Executive to make treaties with foreign Powers on all proper subjects. This Alaska matter is one of the subjects intrusted entirely by the Constitution to the Executive and the Senate as I understand the subject; as much so as the appointment of a minister or a consul to a foreign port or country. As well might we propose to withhold pay of our minister to the Court of St. Petersburg or St. James, who was appointed and sent there by the Executive and the Senate, as to withhold an appropriation to carry out a treaty so important as this one.

But my proposition completely answers nine tenths of the objections to this treaty made by the opponents of the measure.

How was it with California when our Government obtained it from Mexico? We were told by men who, like the gentleman referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr.

WASHBURN,] went up the coast last spring; they stopped in the little bays and inlets, looked at the hills and shores, and never touched land in each hundred miles of their voyage; they then said of California that it was worthless; no arable land; could not sustain a population, and all other objections similar to those now urged by the gentleman from Wisconsin against Alaska. Why, Mr. Chairman, when a vessel engaged in the Coast Survey, the Active, was in Humboldt bay in 1852, or about that time, the officers could not get to see the sun sufficiently to take an observation for two weeks. This can be proved from the records of the Coast Survey, and by the testimony of gentlemen now in this Capitol. We were told that the whole of California was worthless, barren, sterile, rocky, humid, and utterly useless, just what gentlemen now say about Alaska; and more than this, these gentlemen now use the very arguments then used by those who were opposed to California.

By accepting this treaty we cage the British lion on the Pacific coast; we cripple that great and grasping monopoly, the Hudson's Bay Company, who, as long as we have been a Government and a nation, have monopolized almost exclusively the fur trade of North America, enriching themselves and the British Government at the expense of what ought, and justly does, belong to the American people.

But it is said there are no fish in the seas off the Alaska coast. The man who makes that statement hazards a great deal as it regards his credibility. If that were so, why would New Bedford and other Atlantic towns and cities send out their whaling expeditions?

California sends out her millions of treasure in "bright and shining gold" each year; her exports of wool are enough annually to clothe her inhabitants five times. When the Active was engaged in the Coast Survey potatoes cost from fifty cents to a dollar and a half per pound; the flour was all brought from Chili, and everything else upon which men subsist was very costly. Now that same California feeds a large portion of the population of the Pacific coast and islands. The same is true of Oregon and Washington Territory, although their resources are not nearly so fully developed. So it will be with Alaska.

Some gentlemen are extremely economical on everything except negro bureaus and military despotisms over the southern States. They can establish free schools for the juvenile Africans of the South to the exclusion of the poor starving white orphans. They build a college here to educate "the colored cuss from Africa," but they cannot give a few dollars for the territory which, with its gigantic forests, its rich mineral resources, its inexhaustible fisheries, and beds of hard (not soft, as claimed by the opponents of this bill,) coal will furnish homes and occupation, competence and wealth for millions of our people for ages to come.

The climate of Great Britain is as humid as that of Alaska. In California, at times, they do not see the sun for days, yet vegetation keeps up, the cattle are fat, the grape yields its juice, the mine yields its gold or silver or quicksilver, the forest its treasures, and the coast, the rivers and lakes their finny contributions. So it will be with Alaska under the rule of the hardy and energetic people who, from our own more densely populated States, will seek its shores and valleys and make them their homes.

The Russian diplomats are far-seeing and shrewd. They know, as does every man who is a close observer of history, that the muscles of the British lion are weakening, his growl or roar is not so terrific as formerly; that the Government of that country is on the wane. Russia would be our firm ally to-day in a war with England. It cost England an immense sacrifice to retain her foothold in India, even against the Sikhs unaided by any foreign Power. What would have been the result had the Russian bear stepped in and laid his paw on India at that time? Answer is unnecessary. England's star has passed its zenith. Russia will one day, and that at no distant period, control England's Asiatic possessions. When that happens, as a natural consequence the United States will take possession of the Bahamas and all the British West India islands; and Canada will fall into our lap like a ripe apple.

In this connection it may not be improper to conjecture that Spain, and its present as well as former possessions on this continent, must be ours; and the two great Powers on earth will be Russia and the United States. Napoleon Bonaparte said that the world must all be republican or Cossack; and there may a time come when the bear and the eagle may have a conflict. I hope not soon, however.

In conclusion, let me say that the proposal to purchase the fee-simple of Alaska for $10,000,000 in gold is not a joke. Some of the wealthiest men in the United States stand ready to make good my proposition. Thanking the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] for courtesy in yielding a portion of his time to me I now take my seat, hoping that this Congress will not fail to carry out in good faith the terms of this treaty.

Mr. PRICE next addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

At the conclusion of his remarks,

Mr. PRICE said: I will yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DONNELLY,] and the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. BANKS. I desire to state that after the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] has concluded his remarks I will ask that the committee rise, in order to extend this afternoon session to five o'clock. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] desires to speak this afternoon.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, if we consider this question in a limited and narrow sense there will be found no little force in the objections made against this bill.

There was not, at the time the purchase of Alaska was made, nor is there now, any pressing necessity for it. The time was not ripe for the acquisition of the territory in question, nor was the financial condition of the country such as to justify the expenditure of any considerable sum of money for that purpose. For one, I should not have initiated any such proceeding.

The question now, however, is of a different character. It is not, "Shall we seek this purchase?" but, "Shall we reject it, having been sought and now brought before us for acceptance?"

I give no attention to the question already discussed here at considerable length as to the control possessed by this House over the treaty-making power of the President and the Senate. Practically, it is of little consequence. It is very evident that where a treaty is made involving the payment of any sum of money by the United States an appropriation will be necessary to draw that money from the Treasury; and that appropriation can only be made by the vote of this House concurring with the vote of the Senate and the approval of the President. The vote of this House must be determined by the individual judgment of its members, and there is no treaty-making power that can control or coerce that judgment. We are for ourselves the ultimate judges of the propriety of such an appropriation. Practically, therefore, the power to give or refuse is in our hands.

This result was no doubt contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. While it was known that the action of the President and Senate would necessarily have great moral weight and influence with the House, it was foreseen that a corrupt President and Senate might plunge the nation into enormous debt, under color of the treaty-making power, and that in such a contingency nothing could save the nation but the negative possessed by the House of Representatives.

I have said that in a narrow and limited sense the objections against this bill have considerable force. But there is a broader light in which the question should be viewed, and in that light I propose briefly to consider it.

I shall vote for this bill, Mr. Chairman, because I consider it one of the necessary steps in the expansion of our institutions and nationality over the entire domain of the North American continent. From both North and South the territory and the peoples of the continent gravitate inevitably toward us, drawn by our steadily increasing greatness, the benignity of our institutions, and the individual prosperity manifest everywhere through all our broad expanse.

Our form of government is adapted to civilized man everywhere. It rests upon principles of justice and humanity as broad as our race, and which receive everywhere the sanction of the human heart. We have found the vitality of our institutions powerful enough to maintain itself undiminished amid the heat of the tropics, and through all the rigors of our northern winters. There is no reason why those institutions should not extend on the one hand to that thread of land which ties together the northern and the southern continents; and on the other hand to the extremest limits of human habitation under the frozen constellations of the North.

By itself this acquisition will be comparatively not of the highest advantage to us. It is true that the influence of the gulf stream of the Pacific extends far up the western coast, modifying the climate in the same manner that the climate of a similar region upon the western coast of Europe is modified by the gulf stream of the Atlantic; and there is no reason why, in course of time, a population may not exist along the shores and among the islands of Alaska as hardy, as enterprising, as civilized, and as progressive as that which now inhabits Scotland, Norway, or Sweden.

But the great significance this purchase possesses is found in the fact that it points the way to the acquisition by the United States of that great and most valuable region, Western British America, which may be fairly esteemed the largest and finest region of agricultural lands now left unsettled on the continent. The valley of the Saskatchewan will yet sustain a population as dense as that of northern Germany. With our great nation on the south of this region, and our new acquisition of Alaska resting upon its northern boundary, British dominion will be inevitably pressed out of western British America. It will disappear between the upper and the nether mill-stones. These jaws of the nation will swallow it up.

When the traces of the great rebellion shall have passed away; when the debt incurred in its suppression shall have been extinguished, or shall have been dwarfed into insignificance compared with the vastness of our population and the magnitude of our wealth; when our institutions shall have been purified from every taint of the old and cruel past, and shall be sublimated and refined into the very perfection of human justice and Christian benevolence, and when our nationality shall have expanded until it fades out beneath the fire of the tropics on the one hand, or disappears along the margin of the eternal snows on the other, we shall present to the world the aspect of a nation greater, mightier, wiser, and happier than any ever known to man in the whole tide of time; a nation that by the mere power of its moral influence shall compel justice and destroy injustice in all the lands of the earth.

We need "ample room and verge enough" for this majestic development. Nothing less than a continent can suffice as the basis and foundation for that nation in whose destiny is involved the destiny of mankind. Let us build broad and wide those foundations; let them abut only on the everlasting seas.

I cannot but believe, as nothing exists at random in this world, and everything is controlled by the all-fashioning hand of God, that this continent was foredoomed from the creation of the earth for this mighty nation. We have shaken off the sole obstacle to our perpetuity, the institution of slavery, and it is difficult for the mind of man to conceive any reason why our Government should not endure for uncounted ages. With universal education, universal suffrage, amnesty, that shall follow swift upon the footsteps of repentance, and prosperity coequal with the justice and benevolence of our institutions, we can look forward to a future which the mind can contemplate with the highest delight.

Great as we are, we are yet in the day of small things. Our forty million people will in two years, by the construction of the Pacific railroad, be brought face to face with the four hundred millions of the Chinese empire and with the other vast populations of India and Japan. Our own ratio of growth is moving forward with accelerated rapidity. Each day adds new enlightenment to the people of our own country and of Europe. In our own land the result is increased energy, industry, and enterprise; in Europe the result is increased agitation, increased demand for popular rights, and increased migration to our own shores.

Let us, then, not put aside this acquisition. Our flag now floats over it. That flag should never recede. Let us take this territory for its present worth—its soil, its harbors, its fisheries, its forests; not overrating them and yet not underrating them; and remembering always that the natural tendency of the mind is to undervalue all unknown lands, and to view them, as did the poet, as—

"Antres vast or deserts idle, Rough quarries, rocks, or hills whose tops touch heaven."

But, beyond all the present importance of this region, let its future consequence be recognized. The entire Pacific coast of the North American continent fronting Japan, China, and India should belong to the nation whose capital is here, whose commercial centers will be found at New York and San Francisco, and whose destiny it is to grasp the commerce of all the seas and sway the sceptre of the world.

Let us, then, while perfecting our institutions, not refuse to expand our boundaries.

The Committee of the Whole rose informally.

THE SPEAKER. The Speaker has taken the chair informally, knowing the desire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to have the afternoon session extended so as to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] time to submit some remarks upon this subject.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent that the afternoon session be extended till five o'clock.

There was no objection.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. SHELLABARGER addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MAYNARD obtained the floor and said: I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I shall not attempt to make a speech on this subject, for the learned gentleman from Massachusetts has as completely exhausted the subject as if he had had it under a moral exhausted receiver.

The inquiry generally is, What is the use of this purchase, large as it is? We do not want it for the production of grain or grasses. I will say a single word as to its valuable utility.

At the early stages of our country the Atlantic coast, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, swarmed with all kinds of fish and living things that inhabit the ocean, from the whale to the herring. They furnished the food and the wealth of the hardy and adventurous people of that region. A very large proportion of all these animals have either become extinct or gone for refuge to safer seas. The whale has betaken himself to the high latitudes of the Pacific ocean between Puget's sound and Behring straits and the mouth of Amour river, and his captors must follow in order to pursue their accustomed avocations. Our hardy whalersmen are obliged to double the Cape and make their years of abode in these inhospitable regions, where their own country does not own a foot of soil beyond the forty-ninth degree of latitude. The English possessions projecting from Canada come in and make a peninsula between the United States and Russia. It cuts the continent almost to the Atlantic ocean.

Now, neither on Vancouver's Island, so shamefully surrendered, and nowhere between that and the north pole have the United States any right of possession, or any privilege of catching or curing fish. This inconvenience is so great, and still growing greater, that our people would soon find that they would willingly give the sum mentioned in the treaty for the mere license. What are the advantages of this new purchase? It extends from a short distance above the Canada line nearly to the north pole, and from sea to sea. It contains land enough to make twelve States as large as Virginia. Nor is it that bleak and barren soil which its high latitude would seem to indicate. The warm breezes from the surface of the Pacific ocean and from a thousand boiling springs so modify its climate as to make it remarkably comfortable. It possesses at least a hundred islands well covered with nutritious grass, so also is most of the fast land. To furnish food for all our fishermen it is only found necessary to turn loose a few meat-producing animals. This would save the transportation of supplies from Nantucket and New Providence. This would give us the exclusive right to take and procure fish in all that region. It is known that our whalers and other navigators are apt to have their boats and other craft stove and cast away in that distant region. Now we cannot get a stick of timber to repair them without sailing down the coast to the mouth of the Columbia river.

Now, it is known the islands of this archipelago as well as the main lands contain abundance of the toughest kind of ship timber. As to treaties for the license to fish, you know how difficult it is to produce them and how likely they are to embroil nations. We barely escaped war with England on account of one of them. Our treaty with her allowed us to take and procure fish within three leagues of the shore. England contended that the line should follow the indentations of the ocean. America contended that the line should be run from headland to headland, and give to us jurisdiction of all the interior space. That question is now happily settled, mainly by the retreat of the sea animals which gave it value. But the amount of animal life, such as whale, salmon, herring, and other fish conveyed to us by this treaty is almost incredible. It is the great storehouse whence annually descend herring and other fish to supply the South.

But the mere material advantages furnished are not all the chief benefits of this purchase. The vastness of the nation is very often the strength of the nation. What glory did Rome acquire by being able to fix her boundary beyond the ultima Thule? But the glory of a nation is the strength of the nation.

As to the treaty-making power, it struck me that the learned gentleman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs conceded more to the opponents of the bill than I am willing to do. If I understood him rightly he admitted that Congress had the right to consult and be consulted in the formation of treaties. This, it seems to me, is directly repugnant to the Constitution. It gives to the President and Senate the sole power to make treaties, and when made declares them the supreme law. If Congress had to be consulted before a treaty was complete then the provisions of the Constitution would be partly thwarted. I know that treaties had been formed which, contrary to the Constitution, had embraced subjects not within the treaty-making power, which I hold to be null and void. If the subject-matter be within the treaty-making power, then I hold when a treaty is once complete that no other department can alter it in no one particular. If the treaty provides that any other branch of the Government is to do an act which it refuses to do that does not annul the treaty. It stands as a supreme obligation like a national bond repudiated by the obligor. I know this is not precisely the theory of the Government, but I am giving my own opinion, of no value but to myself.

Mr. MAYNARD resumed the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not suppose the gentleman wishes to proceed for the few minutes that are left before five o'clock.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent that the committee now take a recess till half past seven o'clock.

No objection was made; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes, p. m.) the committee took a recess till half past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At half past seven o'clock p. m. the Speaker took the chair.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 166) for the relief of owners of the land within the United States survey No. 3217, in the State of Missouri; and

An act (S. No. 469) confirming the title to a tract of land in Burlington, Iowa.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 780) for the relief of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

The House, then, pursuant to order, resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. GARFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, Mr. MAYNARD being entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, as I was cut off in the midst of my speech this afternoon, I ask permission to publish a few additional remarks.

No objection being made, permission was granted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I also desire to speak five minutes this evening, but as what I should say relates particularly to observations that fell from the chairman of the committee, [Mr. BANKS,] who is not here, and as he probably will be present by and by, I ask my friend from New York, [Mr. FERRIS,] who is to speak this evening, to say for me what I would say myself.

Mr. MAYNARD then addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, we are about to determine a question which must have an important bearing on our future history. The treaty-making power—the President and Senate—has, so far as it can, acquired what is known as Russian America or Alaska, an empire on the American continent, yet undeveloped it is true, but immense in its resources and extent, and it remains for the House of Representatives to approve or condemn the purchase. No one doubts that our appropriation of the purchase-money is needed to perfect the agreement. With this the possession will be an accomplished fact. Without it, to say the least, there will be difficulty in the public mind, and if Russia shall withdraw and assume authority over this territory or sell it to another Power, still greater doubt as to which would have been the better course.

I will not for a moment admit that the action of the President and Senate binds us to complete any purchase of territory whatever. If the treaty-making power extended thus far we should be required to accept a country although inhabited by millions of slaves, or thousands of miles distant, though its religion were inclosed in the Koran or its people dwelt at the feet of polygamy and barbarism. If Alaska could be thus acquired, why not China or Japan? To state the proposition that the House of Representatives need not be consulted in such an event is its own best refutation. It is unnecessary to trouble the committee with precedents. The House of Representatives asserted its right in this regard, even against the protest of Washington, as early as 1794 in relation to the British treaty, and has in no instances that I am aware of surrendered this right. Nor is the objection solely that a grant of money must be made by law before the treaty can be carried to its perfect consummation. It is for the people through their Representatives to say whether from locality or for any cause an acquisition of territory is subversive in their opinion of the interests or principles of the Government.

Whether we choose to concur in and perfect this purchase is an entirely different matter. For one, I am in favor of so doing, and in committee agreed to the report of its distinguished chairman, [Mr. BANKS,] except as to this stronger assertion than his of our own power. That the treaty is with a nation which has been our constant friend, sympathizing in our struggle for the preservation of the Union is, I confess, not without its due influence; and when it is remembered that a year has passed, and months of possession since the treaty without protest on the part of this House, that adds much to the other considerations in favor of the appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, the acquisition of Alaska has encountered in this House an opposition of the bitterest description. An open one, however, which deserves to be met with like distinctness. Its coast is represented as dreary and inhospitable beyond belief; its interior is scarcely known, or where known uninviting and valueless; the purchase itself utterly uncalled for and reprehensible. Ridicule, the most powerful of weapons, is launched from able tongues to drive away the American flag which now floats above it. Finally, the demand is that Russia be requested to repossess this domain and relieve us from its incumbrance.

When, after the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, a similar measure was proposed, an able statesman who had not favored the Mexican war, Mr. Vinton, said:

"That this country (California and New Mexico) would never be surrendered to Mexico might be put down as a fixed fact. It was just as certain as that Georgia would never be given back to the King of England."

I do not believe Alaska will be given up. I will notice directly the statements on which this opposition is founded. They will be shown often incorrect, and generally insufficient to overbalance the benefits of the treaty. But for the present I choose to treat the subject in an aspect which overshadows all others. The possession of Alaska is a question of power.

The North American continent for a long time was held by England, Spain, and France. The former, which, contrary to its early instincts of aggrandizement and naval science, turned away from its shores the "world-seeking Genoese," made haste to repair the error, and in less than five years afterward the Venetian Cabots from Labrador to Florida gave her the outlines of a new empire. For three centuries three or four European Powers, with varying fortunes, acquired and divided North America. Then came the war of the Revolution and its conquest from Great Britain, and very soon the United States began to discuss territorial questions and make assertions of doctrine in regard to them. Those assertions have been constant, until the American doctrine is unmistakable. We have kept aloof from the desire for foreign territory; we have steadily refused to acquire new territory here simply by conquest; Mexico was ours by the force of arms, and we restored it; but we have just as steadily endeavored to remove the interference which monarchical institutions in North America cannot fail to produce. Thus Florida was acquired by treaty from Spain, and Texas, its nominal exchange, came to us inevitably. Thus France bade adieu to our continent in ceding Louisiana, nor could the armed legions of the third Napoleon prevail over the sentiment of North American nationality, which ended in the warning fate of Maximilian. But two European States now share with us the continent, for the Central American governments are to the manner born and republican. England has above us a vast domain from Labrador to west of the Rocky mountains, from the Arctic ocean to the foot of Canada; Russia, which, thanks to Peter the Great, discovered that Asia and America were less than fifty miles apart, holds the Northwestern Pacific slope to the Northern sea, and Behring straits, the key to the Eastern empire.

We are offered this northwestern continent for $7,200,000 in gold. Much more than the sum named has lain idle and without interest in the Treasury for years, and will no doubt for years yet to come, while such an outlay would return it to us with increase. Shall we refuse to appropriate the amount? What then? Why, I think I hear our opponents say, Russia will resume its sway and matters stand as heretofore. Perhaps so, for a little time, but more probably not. The Czar consented to this sale at our own request. Our fishing trade with these Russian possessions was so valuable that the Legislature of Washington Territory, in January, 1866, petitioned our Government to obtain from Russia the privilege "to visit the ports and harbors of its possessions to the end that fuel, water, and provisions may be easily obtained, together with the privilege of curing fish and repairing vessels" there, stating that "abundance of codfish, halibut, and salmon, of excellent quality, have been found along the shores of the Russian possessions." More than this, the charter was about to expire in June, 1867, by which Russia had ceded its rights over the territory to a Russian-American company, which had in turn ceded them to the Hudson's Bay Company. The latter was endeavoring to get a twenty-five years' renewal of the charter. But at this appropriate time our California Senators endeavored to secure this exclusive privilege for an American fur trading company. Our Pacific coast had already known the value of Alaska, its furs, fisheries, and game; its ice supplied the California market and its timber was needed for our vessels. How naturally the purchase came about. Russia had enough contiguous land and had always intrusted the government of this to others, while we wanted what to us is almost contiguous.

The learned gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] says "that country is strong which is compact," and intimates that as British Columbia, with a frontage of five degrees on the ocean, intervenes between us and Alaska it would conflict with the American doctrine to hold the latter. Just the reverse, sir. We do wish to be compact. The American sentiment is that we should have had British Columbia and Vancouver's Island. In this we failed. But next to that we hold that by no act of ours shall a foreign State have its compactness and strength increased on our continent. The gentleman will not tell me it is more difficult to sail three hundred miles from our northern boundary to Alaska than from New York to San Francisco. You need not cross British domain in the former case nor Mexican in the latter. Reject Alaska and there is scarcely a doubt that Russia, having once determined to part with it, would sell to England, and still less doubt that England to-morrow would seize the chance of taking it off our hands.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder what the American people would say to such a result! If such must come I will not be responsible for it. The British empire, covering us on the north from ocean to ocean, would develop a formidable rival on the Pacific to that commerce and trade which now can be ours alone. The British North American possessions, now almost land-locked on the west, hold out little promise to their settlers and Anglo-Saxon enterprise finds no incentive to exertion. Give it this new outlet and you build up a permanent, because prosperous, rival, which holding half the continent can never be dislodged. The people of the United States are in no haste, but they look forward surely to the day when the starry flag, which they have followed alike in storm and in sunshine, shall cover the continent. That day will come in its own good time. Let us not retard it as we did in settling the Oregon boundary. No consolidation of foreign empire must be allowed between these seas. The possessions of Russia here would have continued an equipoise to England. She has now determined to confine her dominion beyond the Pacific. England never voluntarily contracted her possessions. Rest assured Alaska, if not ours, will be transferred to Great Britain. The nation which struggled so hard for Vancouver and her present Pacific boundary, and which still insists on having the little island of San Juan, will never let such an opportunity slip. Canada, as matters now stand, might become ours some day, could her people learn to be American; but never in such an event.

Ah, says my colleague, on the Foreign Affairs Committee, from Wisconsin, [General WASHBURN,] "the place is worthless." He does not wish it at any price. The climate is frightful, the furs few, and the mineral deposits are not proved to his satisfaction. Well, my friend is not original—and he knows I do not use the word offensively—in the rôle of a croaker. We had them every time new territory was added to our domain; and the files of the Congressional Globe are very ugly reminders of the fact. When we acquired Louisiana by the treaty of Paris, a croaker of that day called it "a dreary and barren wilderness." Yet this fertile province was divided into rich States of the Union, and its noble stream which, with the tributaries, forms an outlet for the productions of the mighty West, has a value world-wide, for the possession of which the armies of freedom and slavery rededicated its very water now forever dedicated to liberty.

California was called an ill-starred purchase and bad bargain; yet this same California, laden with wealth, its cereals and fruits unsurpassed, its vines bidding fair to rival those of France and Italy, came to us in less than three years a free young State, forming the first barrier on the southwest against the extension of slavery which led us to its conquest. The $2,000,000,000 in gold it has added to the wealth of the world sinks into insignificance beside its geographical advantages and their development, of which no doubt the pursuit of that wealth was the instrument.

But, says my friend, Alaska is in a bleak and northern region. Perhaps there is no commoner error than that latitude is the controlling element of temperature. I do not pretend to be a climatologist; but it is well known that the southwest equatorial winds and thermal currents of the ocean produce on land what are known as isothermal lines; and the great hot currents which, lessened in intensity, flow against the shores of Britain and Norway, are but different directions of those which lave the coast of Alaska. Western Europe, like western America, is milder in the same latitudes than on the east. If this be not so, I hope my friend will explain why London, nearly eleven degrees latitude north of New York, is eight degrees warmer. Let me illustrate by the eastern hemisphere: Peking, on the western border of Asia, at forty degrees north latitude, has winters very nearly as severe as at St. Petersburg, in sixty degrees. My doubting colleague says facts are worth a thousand theories. So be it. It is a geographical fact that in many cold climates, like Canada, severe winters refresh the earth; and when the snow is removed the fertility of the soil is so great that vegetation is luxuriant and rapid, making their brief summers yield richer abundance than in more tropical climates.

If, however, the argument of latitude is to prevail, did it ever enter the gentleman's mind to wonder what England wanted with the barren, bleak, dismal soil of her possessions east of Alaska, or why she tried during the Crimean war to capture Sitka. Has he ever been to the beautiful city of Quebec—strange it should have been built in so inhospitable a region—eleven degrees south of Sitka, it is true, but twenty degrees colder. What barbarians to be sure!

Then go to the fashionable and elegant metropolis of Russia itself, one degree fifty-six minutes north of the parallel of Sitka, and fifteen degrees colder. Certainly one must die there of frost! And then, sir, remember that in 1845 the United States were convulsed with an insane desire. We were actually going to war with England to obtain the strip of ground between forty-nine and fifty-four degrees forty minutes. Yes, "fifty-four forty or fight" was the cry; and what for? Simply to adjoin this terrible land from which my colleague shrinks with a coldness beyond that of the climate he depicts—a territory for which we had under Van Buren and Polk twice offered five millions and been refused.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Will my colleague furnish the proof and evidence of that statement? I would be glad to see the evidence of it.

Mr. MYERS. The Congressional Library is as open to my colleague as it is to me, and if the information is not there the archives of the State Department are as open to him as to me. If the gentleman looks to the files of the State Department he will find the evidence.

Mr. BANKS. What is the fact that is denied?

Mr. MYERS. The former offers of this Government for Alaska. But whether it be so or not the gentleman will not deny that this nation were about to go to war with Great Britain to obtain the country adjoining Alaska up to 54° 40'.

Mr. BANKS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, I will say that this Government has three times contemplated the purchase of Russian-America from the Russian Government; and twice it has made the offer of $5,000,000, which has each time been refused.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Has the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. BANKS] furnished to the House and the country any evidence to this effect?

Mr. BANKS. I have not. But I understand that to be the fact, and I make the statement on my responsibility. Once during Mr. Polk's administration the matter was discussed, but terminated without any formal offer or refusal. The offer, however, was made twice, once in Mr. Van Buren's administration, and once in Mr. Buchanan's administration.

Mr. FERRISS. I suppose the committee rely upon the authority furnished by the executive department. In Executive Document No. 177, a document furnishing the evidence in answer to a resolution of the House upon this subject, it is stated that Russia had twice offered this territory to the United States. But there is not one particle of evidence in that document that I can find that the Government of the United States ever applied to the Government of Russia for this territory.

Mr. MYERS. This is a matter which has very little to do with my argument. If my good friend from New York [Mr. FERRISS] will only be persuaded by the rest of the evidence that is contained in that document I will drop this point, for it is of very little importance. I only referred to what I believed to be a fact. It will not do to quote the document for one purpose and then throw it aside. Let him take it as evidence in regard to the riches of the country, its timber, minerals, and fisheries, and I am content.

It is a fact that Britain, Norway, Sweden, Siberia, and all the Russias produce gold, even though my colleague confines that metal to the South. It is needless, therefore, to speak of other ores, or remind him that Behring and Cook saw copper and iron in Alaska, finding them in common use as knives and arrow-heads; or that his favorite voyager, La Perouse, reported copper and coal; and that Meares saw malleable lumps of copper sometimes weighing a pound. It is as useless, too, to remind him that gold is traced all the way on either side along the ranges of the Rocky mountains, as that Captain Cook, in noticing the mildness of the climates, says "cattle might exist in Oonalaska all the year round without housing." And this reminds me of my friend's partiality for poetry. Campbell never knew how cruel a thing he did for Wisconsin when, taking a poet's muse, he wrote:

"The wolf's long howl from Oonalaska's shores."

Unfortunately for my colleague (Campbell's fame is too safe to suffer) there are no wolves at Oonalaska. Captain Cook, Meares, and Cox state this most positively.

Some little idea of the value of the fur trade may be gleaned from the fact that as early as 1828 to 1833 the Hudson's Bay Company exported $1,000,000 worth a year, and the annual imports thence to England alone, from 1861 to 1865, averaged a half million skins, not to speak of the fur trade across Behring strait to Russia and China. It is strange that the falling off in the fur trade which my colleague notices is confined to Alaska, about which we know so little and he so much. As to the inhabitants, there are but seventy-five thousand all told, and were they the barbarians he represents, the number is too insignificant to prove a solid objection to the treaty.

A final word in regard to the alleged inhospitable coast. The Atlantic coast might have furnished my colleague ample statistics of storms. Labrador could have supplied him with mist, and Newfoundland with fog; but comparisons are odious—I commend him to the voyage of the Ossipee last October. When she took our flag to Sitka the air and climate were delicious as our own in the same month, and all the way from Victoria to Sitka, over eight hundred miles, except a very few resorts to the ocean, she sailed on the placid straits which, running miles inward parallel with the sea at the base of mountains whose sides were skirted with green pines, continue at slight intervals for eleven hundred miles. Their depths are like unto the sea, of which they are in fact a part, and the vista is represented both then and in November, on the return trip, as charming. It is not a marvel that our southwestern coast asked for this purchase, nor that California should send even to Kodiak, seven hundred miles above Sitka, for her ice.

With the fisheries which this acquisition will call into being and protect, a hardy trained race of seamen will fit themselves to sail the ships which soon must dot the Pacific between us and Asia, exchanging the wonders of either shore, and be ready to man our vessels of war should the emergency arise. That trade is now beyond a question. American civilization has done what olden Europe failed to accomplish. It has unlocked the seclusion of China, as it is gradually doing with Japan, until its population leaps the barrier of centuries to come to our nearest border, and even to-day China chooses America to lead her to the outer world. As the Occident thus clasps the Orient and helps it shake off the custom of ages, the world will become more luminous by the contact, even as space is forgotten in the telegraphic sympathy which thrills the old and new in the same moment. These bonds must be cemented. Alaska must be ours, and remembering that we hold our heritage in trust for posterity let no man disdain to picture the day, distant though it may be, when over the continent of North America, from ocean to ocean, from the Arctic to the Antilles, the canopy of freedom shall cover one people, one country, and one destiny.

Mr. FERRISS. Before proceeding with what I intend to say upon this subject, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to a statement which he has made, and ask him if he is positive that the Russian fleet appeared in the harbor of San Francisco or New York before Vicksburg was taken and before the battle of Gettysburg was fought? I will ask the gentleman if he is positive of that fact?

Mr. BANKS. I do not speak positively about it.

Mr. FERRISS. By referring to the Associated Press report, as printed in the Chronicle this morning, the gentleman is reported as saying:

"And I am in a great mind to say, in addition, that when the Russian Government was, by its fleet, in the harbor of San Francisco, and was, by its fleet, in the harbor of New York, even then it was never intended that General Grant should go successfully through the campaign at Vicksburg, and the officers associated with him in the defense of the country were denied promotion, and were visited with censure because they would not take from him the command of the army at Vicksburg."

Now, I am credibly informed that at that time no Russian fleet had appeared in our harbors, and that it was some months after the fall of Vicksburg before any Russian fleet appeared in American waters.

Mr. BANKS. I have not read the report of my remarks to which the gentleman refers, and cannot state whether it is accurate or not. But it was not my intention to couple the two incidents together in any way, and I do not think the remarks I really did make will bear out any such assumption. I am not able to say at what precise moment the Russian fleet appeared in the harbor of San Francisco or the harbor of New York. But I know very well the truth of the other statement I made. The only reference I intended to make to the appearance of the Russian fleet in our waters was that they appeared in our harbors in 1863, at a time when the Governments of France and England were contemplating a recognition of the independence of the southern confederacy.

Mr. FERRISS. The statement was distinctly made, as I understood, that it was not intended that Grant should capture Vicksburg when that fleet appeared in the American waters.

Mr. BANKS. I did not mean to be understood as coupling the two events together as having any dependence or connection; and I do not think my reported remarks will bear any such interpretation.

Mr. FERRISS. Mr. Chairman, at four o'clock on the morning of March 30, 1867, a treaty was signed in this city by Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, on the part of the United States, and Mr. Stoeckl, the Russian minister, on the part of Russia, by which, for a money consideration to be paid by the United States, all that part of the Russian possessions on the American continent and the islands adjacent thereto, were to be transferred to and become a part of the territory of the United States. It matters not that history does not yet inform us whether this so-called treaty was the culminating act of a social evening extended far into the night, it was a fitting hour, the darkest of the night, for such a deed. And now, the Senate having given its consent by the majority required to consummate a treaty, we are instructed that the instrument thus executed is the supreme law of the land, that possession of the territory has been formally transferred to us, and we are directed to appropriate the modest little sum of $7,200,000 in gold to pay the stipulated purchase price.

Sir, I have perused with care and much interest the array of facts and lengthy argument presented to the Senate by the learned Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] when the treaty was before that body for its consideration and action, and without regarding what might have been urged against it, I confess to very great surprise that two thirds of that learned body could be found to give their consent to the purchase, and as the question then presented was one of expediency or policy only, the probability that this House will refuse the aid necessary to carry the treaty into effect and give it in reality the force of a law is very much diminished by two considerations, which did not apply to the Senate. The one is the impression that prevails with some of the members of this House that the Executive has not exceeded the powers delegated to him by the Constitution; that the contract for the purchase of Alaska has been duly ratified and is now clothed in all the habiliments of a legal and authorized treaty, and has become, by the very letter of the Constitution, a part of the supreme law of the land; and the other is formal possession of the territory has been taken by United States officers, commissioned and authorized by the President for that purpose, and it would be acting in bad faith toward a friendly nation to repudiate the purchase at this late day.

Sir, I utterly repudiate the idea that we have no discretion in acting upon this subject; that we are mere automata impelled in but one direction by the wires of diplomacy. This House has never surrendered the right expressly given to it by the Constitution, and to it alone, to originate bills for the raising of revenue and the right to grant or refuse appropriations, and it has never assented to or acknowledged the right of any other branch of or power in the Government alone and without the concurrence of this House to make a binding contract or agreement for the payment of millions of the people's money. While on former occasions, after asserting the right to grant or refuse the aid necessary to carry into effect the money articles of certain treaties which met their approval, the people's representatives have granted such aid, it is to be hoped that in the case before us we shall not only assert that right but in such an explicit and emphatic manner refuse the required appropriation, that in the future all treaties providing for the payment of money will be made contingent upon an appropriation to be made by Congress. If there is a conflict of opinion or right between the Executive and this House let it be settled now. There cannot possibly be a more fitting occasion. The people of this country do not want these Russian possessions. If submitted to them they would reject the treaty by a majority of millions. Alaska, with the Aleutian islands, is an inhospitable, wretched, and God-forsaken region, worth nothing, but a positive injury and incumbrance as a colony of the United States.

Since the attention of the House has been called to the treaty it has several times been the subject of remarks in Committee of the Whole.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] asserted the right of the House to grant or refuse the aid necessary to carry the treaty into effect, and maintained that position by a very able argument, but at the same time expressed himself in favor of the treaty.

On the 22d of March last the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] discussed with marked ability, and at great length, the treaty-making power, and produced an array of authorities which alone ought to be decisive of the right of this House to deal with this treaty. The true construction of this power in its extent and limitation is of so much importance, that I shall venture to occupy a portion of my hour in its consideration with a view of giving to it such a construction as shall be reasonable, and at the same time reconcilable with all other provisions of the Constitution.

A portion of the second paragraph of section two, article two, of the Constitution which relates to the powers of the President is as follows:

"He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur."

Here we have the grant and the entire grant of this power. It is deeply to be regretted that its necessary limits were not expressly defined. They are not; and strangely enough the debates upon the adoption of the Constitution throw no light upon the subject. It is very easy to perceive how an Executive, anxious to wield an unlimited authority, could claim with some show of reason under this grant standing alone, rights and powers which would absorb all the powers of the Government and every department thereof. The word treaty signifies an agreement, league, or contract. This agreement, league, or contract is to be entered into by the President with the concurrence of two thirds of the Senators present. With whom it may be made, and the subject-matter of such agreement, league, or contract, are not mentioned. Where is the limit? Under this power thus conferred the President has entered into an agreement or contract for the purchase of these Russian possessions. He and those who put the same construction upon this power that he does, claim that this contract is fully executed, is binding and obligatory upon the United States Government, upon all the departments and every officer and subject thereof, notwithstanding it contains a provision in the sixth article—

"That the United States shall pay at the Treasury in Washington within ten months after the exchange of the ratifications of this convention"—a period now passed—

"to the diplomatic representative or other agent of his majesty the emperor of all the Russias duly authorized to receive the same, $7,200,000 in gold."

In 1776, when the British treaty, generally known as the Jay treaty, which required legislative aid to carry it into full effect, was under discussion, the House of Representatives, after a most learned and exhaustive debate, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution that the President shall have power, by and with the advice of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senate present shall concur, the House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties; but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress. And it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good."

This resolution was adopted by a vote of 57 to 35. This House, then, at that early day, by a very decided vote, declared that when a treaty stipulated regulations such as the money article of this Russian treaty, it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress. And now I undertake to say that this right thus claimed has never been relinquished by any subsequent Congress, but repeatedly reasserted and reaffirmed. For a long time afterward it seems to have been conceded to be the true construction of the Constitution in that regard.

Seven years afterward, when we acquired Louisiana, by far the most valuable of all our territorial acquisitions, the law-making power was called in, and it was conceded to be indispensable to carry into effect the treaty by which we obtained that territory. When that treaty was submitted to the House and a resolution requesting of the President information in relation to the cession by Spain to France and the title acquired by the United States was under discussion, Mr. Randolph, though opposing the resolution, said:

"I hold in the highest veneration the principle established in the case of the British treaty and the men by whom it was established, that in all matters requiring legislative aid it was the right and duty of this House to deliberate, and upon such deliberation to afford or refuse that aid as in their judgment the public good might require."

Mr. Smilie, another member, remarked:

"That a subject of this nature had been brought before the House in the first session of the Fourth Congress. He thought it proper to refer to the proceedings on that occasion to learn the sentiments entertained at that day. At that day it had been argued by certain gentlemen that the right of passing or not passing the necessary laws for carrying a treaty into effect did not belong to that House, but that they were under an absolute obligation to pass them, that they had no discretion on the subject. This was a doctrine which he did not believe true. He then believed that they possessed the right, and still entertained the same opinion."

Indeed, upon that occasion the doctrine, though frequently asserted, does not seem to have been seriously questioned, and the aid asked for was granted. This aid was asked in a message from Mr. Jefferson, then President of the United States, and it is well to note the language of that message, as also that of a special message on the same subject, not only to ascertain the views of Mr. Jefferson of the treaty-making power, but to learn how far away from the original land-marks of the Constitution we have drifted, and to be warned of the alarming progress already made in the centralization and consolidation of the powers of the Government.

Negotiations for the cession of the Territory of Louisiana by France to the United States had been perfected, and a treaty to that effect, so far as the President alone with the consent of the Senate could execute the same, had been entered into, as also a treaty with a friendly tribe of Indians by which territory was acquired, when Mr. Jefferson by proclamation convened Congress October 17, 1803, an earlier day than was otherwise contemplated, but for the great interests involved in those negotiations. In his message to that Congress he says:

"The enlightened Government of France saw with just discernment the importance to both nations of such liberal arrangements as might best and permanently promote the peace, interests, and friendship of both; and the property and sovereignty of all Louisiana, which had been restored to them, has, on certain conditions, been transferred to the United States by certain instruments bearing date the 30th of April last. When these shall have received the constitutional sanction of the Senate they will without delay be communicated to the Representatives for the exercise of their functions as to those conditions which are within the powers vested by the Constitution in Congress."

"With the wisdom of Congress it will rest to take those ulterior measures which may be necessary for the immediate occupation and temporary government of the country; for its incorporation into our Union; for rendering the change of government a blessing to our newly-adopted brethren; for securing to them the rights of conscience and of property; for confirming to the Indian inhabitants their occupancy and self-government; establishing friendly and commercial relations with them, and for ascertaining the geography of the country acquired. Such materials for your information relative to its affairs in general as the short space of time has permitted me to collect will be laid before you when the subject shall be in a state for your consideration."

"Another important acquisition of territory has also been made since the last session of Congress. The friendly tribe of Kaskaskia Indians, with which we have never had a difference, reduced by the wars and wants of savagelife to a few individuals, unable to defend themselves against the neighboring tribes, has transferred its country to the United States, reserving only for its members what is sufficient to maintain them in an agricultural way. The considerations stipulated are, that we shall extend to them our patronage and protection, and give them certain annual aids, in money, in implements of agriculture, and other articles of their choice. This country, among the most fertile within our limits, extending along the Mississippi from the mouth of the Illinois to and up the Ohio, though not so necessary as a barrier since the acquisition of the other bank, may yet be well worthy of being laid open to immediate settlement, as its inhabitants may descend with rapidity in support of the lower country should future circumstances expose that to foreign enterprise. As the stipulations in this treatise also involve matters within the competence of both Houses only, it will be laid before Congress as soon as the Senate shall have advised its ratification."

"Should the acquisition of Louisiana be constitutionally confirmed and carried into effect a sum of nearly thirteen million dollars will then be added to our public debt, most of which is payable after fifteen years; before which term the present existing debts will all be discharged by the established operation of the sinking fund."

Five days later Mr. Jefferson sent to the Senate and House of Representatives a brief message upon the same subject, the first paragraph of which is as follows:

"In my communication to you of the 17th instant I informed you that conventions had been entered into with the Government of France for the cession of Louisiana to the United States. These, with the advice and consent of the Senate, having now been ratified, and my ratification exchanged for that of the first consul of France in due form, they are communicated to you for consideration in your legislative capacity. You will observe that some important conditions cannot be carried into execution but with the aid of the Legislature; and that time presses a decision on them without delay."

In the acquisition of territory Mr. Jefferson not only recognizes the right of Congress to act, but avers the necessity of action. Of the Louisiana purchase he says:

"When these shall have received the constitutional action of the Senate they will without delay be communicated to the Representatives for the exercise of their functions as to those conditions which are within the powers vested by the Constitution in Congress."

Of the Indian treaty the language is still more explicit. He says:

"The stipulations in this treaty involve matters within the competence of both Houses only."

It is generally known that Mr. Jefferson doubted whether there was any power under the Constitution in any or all of the departments of the Government to acquire foreign territory. He expressed this opinion in a letter to Mr. Breckenridge, dated August 12, 1803, in which he also writes:

"This treaty [the Louisiana purchase] must of course be laid before both Houses, because both have important functions to exercise respecting it. They, I presume, will see their duty to their country in ratifying and paying for it, so as to secure a good which would otherwise probably be never again in their power."

It is impossible to conceive of a more explicit recognition of the right in Congress to grant or refuse the aid necessary to carry a treaty into effect which involves the payment of money. And this recognition is in striking contrast with the views of to-day, as evidenced in the action of the President in regard to the Alaska purchase, and his message to Congress in which it is referred to. The whole subject is disposed of in eight lines. Mr. Johnson says:

"It will hardly be necessary to call the attention of Congress to the subject of providing for the payment to Russia of the sum stipulated in the treaty for the cession of Alaska. Possession having been formally delivered to our commissioner, the territory remains for the present in care of a military force, awaiting such civil organization as shall be directed by Congress."

In the acquisition of territory Mr. Jefferson thought the concurrent action of both Houses of Congress necessary. Mr. Johnson would have us understand that the treaty was complete and in full force as a law, that Congress had no discretionary powers, but must make provision for the payment of the purchase price.

For a third time, in 1816, when the commercial treaty with Great Britain was under discussion in the House of Representatives, the right to grant or refuse such legislation as was indispensable to carry out the treaty stipulations was most emphatically asserted.

Again, in 1820, after the Spanish Government had neglected to comply with the stipulations of a treaty settling the boundary line between Louisiana and the Mexican territory, Mr. Clay, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, introduced the following resolutions in the House:

"Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States vests in Congress the power to dispose of the territory belonging to them, and that no treaty purporting to alienate any portion thereof is valid without the concurrence of Congress."

"Resolved, That the equivalent proposed to be given by Spain to the United States in the treaty concluded between them on the 22d of February, 1819, for that part of Louisiana lying west of the Sabine was inadequate; and that it would be inexpedient to make a transfer thereof to any foreign Power or to renew the aforesaid treaty."

These resolutions were discussed at length, and although no action appears to have been taken upon them beyond the debate, there is no doubt of the opinion of the House. Every speaker alleged or admitted in express language the right of this House to deliberate and act as its judgment might dictate upon all such stipulations in treaties as applied to any subject enumerated among the powers of Congress. Mr. Clay said:

"The Constitution of the United States has not defined the precise limits of that power, because, from the nature of it, they could not be prescribed. It appears to me, however, that no safe American statesman will assign to it a boundless scope. I presume, for example, that it will not be contended that in a Government which is itself limited there is a functionary without limit. The first great bound to the power in question, I apprehend, is that no treaty can constitutionally transcend the very objects and purposes of the Government itself. I think, also, wherever there are specified grants of powers to Congress, they limit and control, or, I would rather say, modify the exercise of the general grant of the treaty-making power, upon a principle which is familiar to every one."

currency of this House be not necessary in the cases asserted, if there be no restrictions upon the power I am considering it may draw to itself and absorb the whole of the powers of the Government. To contract alliances, to stipulate for raising troops to be employed in a common war about to be waged, to grant subsidies, even to introduce foreign troops within the bosom of the country, are not unfrequent instances of the exercise of this power; and if in all such cases the honor and faith of the nation are committed, by the exclusive act of the President and Senate, the melancholy duty alone might be left to Congress of recording the ruin of the Republic."

Mr. Lowndes, who followed Mr. Clay in opposition to the resolutions, said—

"He was willing to admit that, in relation to those stipulations which apply to subjects such as are among the enumerated powers of Congress, the sanction of the representative body to them was necessary."

Mr. Archer, of Virginia, said:

"In contemplating this question, the attention could not fail to be attracted to the extravagance of the pretensions of the treaty-making power. In point of extent the power claimed to cover all the objects which fall within the scope of international legislation. The claim was not only to exclude Congress from all participation of control over subjects specifically committed to its control by the Constitution, but to bind it to an undeliberating ministerial execution of the stipulations of the President and Senate in relation to these same subjects whenever they might require the intervention of Legislative details, and a resort to municipal authority for execution. The admission of the treaty-making power, therefore, in the absolute, unrestricted character it assumed to wear, would be a violation of the whole consistency of the Constitution."

Mr. Trimble said:

"It was not necessary for him to prove that this House could rightfully and properly refuse to carry into effect a treaty which, in its judgment, would be ruinous to the country. The first resolution asserts this right. He had just promised not to discuss it, but he would never yield it so long as he was a member of this body."

Mr. Anderson said:

"But while he had no doubt of the right of the House to act in this case, in which, if the treaty were made, they would be called on to make the appropriation to fulfill it, he strenuously contended that no case had been made out to justify our interference."

These are all the opinions expressed in the debate upon Mr. Clay's resolutions. I have been thus explicit in referring to them from the extraordinary statement contained in the report of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who reports the bill under discussion. In that report the honorable gentleman says:

"The Senate of the United States ratified the treaty a second time, and passed such laws as were necessary to give it effect by sweeping majorities against vigorous opposition. Representatives and Senators holding themselves bound by the act of the Government to perform the acts required for the execution of the treaty."

The conclusion arrived at by the honorable gentleman from the facts in that case is no less remarkable. He says:

"It is impossible to cite a stronger recognition of the obligation resting upon the law-making power to execute a treaty made according to the forms of the Constitution with a foreign nation than that which the treaty of 1819 with Spain presents, and no case so well illustrates the principles by which Congress has been governed in international questions of this character."

A remarkable conclusion, indeed, if it is to be regarded as a case in any manner recognizing any obligation as resting upon the law-making power to make an appropriation for the purchase of foreign territory. It is true that the next Congress, at its first session, granted such affirmative legislation as was asked for, not by reason of any imperative obligation to do so, but in pursuance of its deliberative judgment. I have examined the debates carefully, and I now undertake to say that no member of the House of Representatives on that occasion expressed any other opinion than such as I have quoted, as expressed in the debate upon Mr. Clay's resolutions, and I do not see how the honorable gentleman can justify himself in the assertion that Representatives hold themselves bound by the act of the Government to perform the acts required for the execution of the treaty.

The debates upon the Jay treaty, and again in 1816, were by far the ablest and most exhaustive. Extensive quotations from these debates have already been made by other gentlemen; I have therefore only alluded to them. It will be seen from the action taken upon all of these occasions that this House has never surrendered to the treaty-making power any of the prerogatives expressly confided to it by the Constitution; and we are not without judicial authority upon the same question. In the case of Foster vs. Milson, (2 Peters,) Chief Justice Marshall said:

"Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is consequently to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the Legislature, whenever it operates of itself, without the aid of any legislative provision, but when the terms of the stipulation import a contract; when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political not the judicial department, and the Legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court."

This covers the whole ground contended for. Indeed, I do not see how so broad a proposition as that stated by Mr. Marshall, "that when the terms of the stipulation import a contract the Legislature must execute the contract before it becomes a rule for the court," can be maintained. I understand a treaty to be a contract or agreement and nothing else. This judicial construction would subject all treaties to the action of Congress. The Constitution has conferred upon Congress certain specified powers, and unless the treaty relates to some subject enumerated among those specified powers Congress has nothing to do with it. If it does Congress must act affirmatively before the treaty is binding. This rule must prevail upon the long established and universally admitted principle that a general must yield to a special grant of power, both contained in one instrument.

Now, does it follow that a treaty which executes itself becomes per se a part of the supreme law of the land? Suppose the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, should enter into a treaty with Great Britain to cede to the latter Power the State of Maine in exchange for Upper Canada, what would become of our obligation to guaranty to the State of Maine a republican form of government, to say nothing of the many constitutional obligations we are under to the citizens of that State as citizens of the United States? Yet such a treaty would execute itself. Legislative aid would not be necessary to carry it into effect. I am sure, in such a case, my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who recently upon this floor so ably and eloquently vindicated the rights of American citizenship, would not turn his back upon the gallant sons of the pine-tree State who were being bartered away like cattle in the stock-yards.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask him a question. Suppose we should become involved in a war with Great Britain, and after carrying it on for a while with various fortune, a treaty of peace should be negotiated upon the basis of uti possidetis, including Canada on our side and Maine on the other, does the gentleman hold that such a treaty would or would not be obligatory?

Mr. FERRISS. If the gentleman will listen to my remarks as I continue them, he will find that I meet the question which he puts.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman's pardon. I did not wish to anticipate the gentleman's argument; but I was anxious to understand exactly what ground he takes on this question.

Mr. RAUM. If it will not embarrass the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERRISS,] I would like to propound to him an inquiry. Assuming that where the President and the Senate enter into a treaty which requires for its execution an appropriation of money, the House of Representatives may refuse to make the appropriation, I would like to know by what principle the House should be controlled in refusing to appropriate the money?

Mr. FERRISS. Mr. Chairman, it should be governed by the same principles by which it is governed in its deliberations upon any subject coming legitimately before it. The Constitution of the United States has expressly given to this House of Representatives the control of the purse-strings of the nation. No money can be paid out of the Treasury except in pursuance of appropriations to be made by law. When the treaty-making power transcends its functions, as I say it has done in this case, and the authorities I have cited confirm my position, the treaty is not obligatory upon this House, and we can give the necessary aid or not, just as we see fit. I will add that if in such a case as that the House grants the aid, then the contract, having received the sanction of all the departments of the Government before which it can come, would probably be a treaty.

Mr. RAUM. One further inquiry: conceding, as I have already said, that an appropriation is necessary to execute the treaty, is it not the argument of the gentleman, and has it not been the argument of other gentlemen here to-day, that the only reason which can be assigned why the House of Representatives shall not make the appropriation to execute this treaty is that the President and the Senate have made a bad trade?

Mr. FERRISS. Perhaps so.

Mr. RAUM. In other words, when we have made a bad trade the gentleman would not ratify it, and when we have made a good trade he would ratify it.

Mr. FERRISS. Certainly. I would exercise my judgment just as I would in the case of a bill passed by the Senate and sent to this House for consideration. When the Senate has passed a bill and sent it to this House, we are not bound by its action; we can pass it or reject it, as we may deem best. I would act on the same principle in this case.

It is by no means clear that the Constitution contemplated the acquisition of foreign territory. Indeed, it was held by Mr. Jefferson, as has been already stated, that there was no power under the Constitution to acquire such territory. The practice has been to make such acquisitions by treaty, Congress giving the affirmative aid necessary to carry out the treaty. And I do not question that when such aid is granted, it is to be regarded by all the nations of the earth as a valid treaty.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman understand that the Jay treaty was one that required legislation to give it effect?

Mr. FERRISS. I understand that it did require legislative aid. Precisely what that legislative aid was I am not prepared to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will allow me I will state that it did involve the assumption on the part of the United States in that way of sundry debts owing to citizens of Great Britain not recoverable in the courts, and therefore indirectly involved the appropriation of money.

Mr. MAYNARD. The point of my inquiry was whether the objection growing out of that treaty and that debate did not go to the general treaty-making power; whether it was limited, as some gentlemen wish to limit it now, to those treaties which provide for the payment of money?

Mr. FERRISS. If limited to that it is sufficiently pertinent to the present case.

Mr. CHURCHILL. I ask the gentleman whether in the case of the Webster-Ashburton treaty certain territories of his own district, upon which is Fort Montgomery, were not ceded by the Government of Great Britain to the United States, and certain other claims of territory belonging to us in the East and West were not ceded to Great Britain; and whether that treaty did not become effective without legislation?

Mr. FERRISS. I will answer the gentleman, that treaty assumed to make certain what before was uncertain. That treaty assumed the line agreed upon was the true line between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain. It was not settled upon the principle we were ceding territories, but upon the supposition that we were determining the true line between the two territories. It was settled as difficulties between farmers are settled. A line is surveyed, and one party may insist that he has lost several feet of his land, but the law steps in and decides it to the true line. It was not for the purpose of ceding the lands the treaty was made, but to determine the true line between the two nations.

Mr. CHURCHILL. Mr. Chairman, one further question. I desire to ask, in reference to his answer, whether it is not conceded now, and whether it has not always been conceded, Fort Montgomery is north of the forth-fifth parallel of north latitude, and therefore not within the territory to which we had any claim.

Mr. FERRISS. The people of the United States claimed our line was somewhere else from where it is now. I do not know myself where the old line was.

Sir, a power to alienate territory would be subversive of the objects of the Government, and might very easily effect a dissolution of the Union. It exists nowhere. While there is no express prohibition in the Constitution against it, that instrument never contemplated the transfer of a foot of our territory to any foreign Power. The provision that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States" has been generally supposed to relate to disposing of the land in fee or otherwise to individuals, dividing the territory, and forming territorial governments, and not to a transfer to a foreign sovereignty. Territory might be wrested from us in a disastrous war, and in no other way can we be deprived of a single foot of our national domain.

The treaty-making power, then, is not without limits. I would define it as follows:

1. A treaty can only be made by the President with some potentate, State, or sovereignty.
2. Its stipulations must not destroy or do violence to the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of any of the United States or any of the citizens thereof.
3. If its stipulations or conditions relate to any subject, special power or control over which is committed by the Constitution to any other department or power in the Government, then the concurrent action of such other department or power is indispensable to give validity to such treaty.

Judged by that standard let us see how this Russian treaty will appear. Among the powers specially conferred upon Congress by the Constitution is the power "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization." The third article of the treaty is as follows:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory they, with the exception of the uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes will be subject to such laws and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country."

Here is a class of persons whose qualifications for citizenship I may have occasion to notice hereafter, made citizens without the intervention of the naturalization laws. Every Irishman or German who lands upon our shores must remain five years, then, having two years previously declared his intention to become a citizen, take the oath of allegiance to the United States, abjure all allegiance to his former sovereign, and, more than that, prove by competent testimony that he is a man of good moral character and well disposed toward the institutions and Government of the United States. Nothing like this is required of the Siberian malefactors and other residents of Alaska. The wisdom of the Executive and State Department combined has discovered a convenient and easy way to set aside this little rule of naturalization contained in the Constitution, and by the "exchange of the ratifications of a convention" alone, clothe this class of persons, without regard to character or qualification, and who can neither speak our language or understand our form of Government, with all the rights of American citizenship. If there was no other objection to the treaty this article alone should condemn it, and this House ought not to commit itself to any act which recognizes citizenship created in that manner.

The Constitution further provides that "all bills for the raising of revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," and that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." How, then, can it be said that the House has no discretion in making the appropriation to pay for this territory? We are asked for money; we are a portion of the law-making power; a law must be passed before the money can be paid; and yet we have no discretion. The naked proposition exposes its absurdity. If the rule claimed by the President prevails he may, with the consent of the Senate, buy any and all the territory he chooses and overwhelm the nation with indebtedness. Whether the sum is ten millions or a thousand millions it is all the same; the nation is bound and there is no remedy. Such cannot be the true construction of the treaty-making power.

The power to refuse the appropriation being conceded, ought it to be exercised. The Emperor of Russia has no right to complain if we refuse the aid called for. He has an experienced and intelligent representative in this city—the same who negotiated this treaty, and who has resided in this country for twenty-eight years. No sovereign of Europe has a more shrewd or able diplomat in this country. He is learned in our laws and language, and it is no disparagement to the members of this House to say that he understands our Constitution as well as any member here.

It is more than probable that the possession of Alaska was surrendered to the United States for the express purpose of urging its surrender as a reason why the purchase money should be paid. Such reason cannot operate with me. While I should regret any act that would disturb our amicable relations with the Czar of Russia, who was our firmest and fastest friend during all the dark days of our recent bloody conflict, I cannot believe he would regard so plain an exercise of our discretionary power as a just cause of complaint. If he did I could only regret it. My first duty is to my own country, and that I propose to discharge without consulting the feelings of any foreign potentate, whoever he may be.

In a speech delivered before the Soldiers' and Sailors Union in January last, a Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] remarked:

"The purchase of Alaska from Russia can be justified on high political considerations and the future commercial importance of owning the northwestern part of the continent. But it is not easy to see the necessity for spending $7,500,000 in gold for the purchase of St. Thomas, a small West India island, which may be said to be the very birthplace of the yellow fever, and is frequently made desolate by earthquakes and hurricanes."

What the high political considerations are that justify this purchase the Senator does not inform us. We are left entirely to conjecture. Are we to enter upon a career of filibustering? Is that country on the one side, and Washington Territory on the other, to be the upper and nether millstones by which the British possessions are to be crushed out? Sir, that process of acquiring territory, to say nothing of the morality of the method, would prove far more expensive than negotiation and purchase, and might possibly result in disaster. We want no more wars, least of all with that nation most powerful on the ocean, and with which we have the most complicated and extensive commercial relations.

Of what possible commercial importance can this territory be to us? The islands can never be made a stopping place for vessels passing across the Pacific ocean from one continent to the other. The track of steamers to China and Japan is now a thousand miles south of them, and although it might not materially lengthen the distance to touch at Oonalaska, there are climatic reasons which prevent it. The perpetual fogs in which these regions are enveloped render regular navigation by ocean steamers highly dangerous and utterly impracticable. In an elaborate article in the New York Herald of April 29, 1867, favoring the purchase, it is spoken of as a country "far removed from the ordinary routes of commerce;" and unless there is some value and importance pertaining to the territory itself, the ordinary routes of commerce will not be changed.

The next question to consider is, has this country any intrinsic value, excepting for purposes of fortification or defense, or possessed of mineral value, and then only to a limited extent? No country on this earth has yet been found of the least possible worth or importance unless it was capable of profitable agricultural improvement. Alaska is not, nor are the Aleutian Islands. We are told the climate is far milder than in the same latitude on the Atlantic coast; that the thermal currents of the Pacific bathe its shores and soften the rigor of its Arctic locality; that its isothermal line stretched across the continent runs well down into the middle and eastern States. I am not disposed to question these statements, and will not now stop to discuss the theory deducible from such phenomena. One fact is worth a dozen theories, and we have in the documents furnished to the committee abundance of evidence as to the true character of this country. No more reliable authority can be found than that furnished by the Russian Government itself. In a memorandum descriptive of the Russian imperial system of Russian America, division of property, &c., transmitted by Mr. Clay, our minister at St. Petersburg, to Mr. Seward, I find the following passages relating to the Aleutian Islands:

"Upon these three last islands there never existed any Russian settlement; the intercourse of Russians with those tribes was wholly confined to the limits of retail trade, for which purpose vessels of the Russian-American Company were but occasionally sent thither, and, therefore, neither the imperial Government nor the company ever had any influence upon the mode of division of lands between said natives, who, to the present time, use such lands in perfect freedom, without any foreign interference or restrictions. Exactly in the same way (owing to the character of the object which was constantly pursued by the agents of the company) neither the Government nor the company had any interest to interfere with the distribution of lands between the inhabitants of the Aleutian Islands. All these islands, the boundaries of which are fixed by nature itself, are held and used by the Aleuts by right of prescription, never interrupted by any foreign violation or interference. The division of lands between the Aleutian settlements was established at a time anterior to the Russian occupation, and continues to be inviolably preserved according to usages prevalent of all antiquity among the natives. Neither the imperial Government, by the authority conferred to the Russian-American Company, nor the agents of the company, by the strength of imperial grants, ever interfered with the internal division of lands between the indigenous Aleuts, and if the local administration occasionally undertook the examination of their mutual claims it exceptionally happened in cases of misunderstanding and contests between the natives themselves, and never otherwise than upon application of the interested parties and persons, when the local Toyunns, or elders of villages, had failed to satisfy the respective claims of parties by their own authority.

"The native population of each separate island is so very insignificant that the inhabitants of any one could not meet with the slightest cause of collision of interests in the use of lands; in addition to this, the soil itself being perfectly barren, and unfit either for agricultural or grazing purposes, there was no reason why the natives should endeavor to extend the limits of their lands; if they value their grounds it is exclusively on account of streams abounding in fish, or of coast sites, designated by the local name of Liya, (Layda): for the Aleuts, being neither agriculturists nor cattle breeders, live exclusively upon fish and shell fishes thrown ashore by the tide, so that the welfare of the natives is measured by the abundance of sea fruits supplied by the tide, and the prosperity of Aleutian settlements is calculated by the richness of the Liya, exactly in the same way as the prosperity of continental settlements is chiefly calculated by the productiveness of the ground.

There was even less ground for the enactment of any particular regulations in view of immigrant settlers. Who can ever have a mind to settle in that atmosphere, where permanent fogs and dampness of atmosphere and want of solar heat and light, leaving out of the question anything like agriculture, make it impossible to provide even a sufficient supply of hay for cattle, and where man, from want of bread, salt, and meat, is forced to escape scurvy must constantly live upon fish, berries, shell-fish, sea cabbages, and other products of the sea, soaking them profusely with the grease of sea beasts. The Aleutian Islands may attract transient traders, but no permanent settlers; to inhabit them one must be an Aleute, and if it were not for the sea surrounding the islands this country, owing to its unfavorable climatic conditions and the sterility of its ground, would have never been inhabited at all; and, therefore, the American Government will have, as the Russian imperial Government had, to protect the local natives against arbitrary taking of possession and violence, not in the interior of the islands, but from sea, because unsparing foreigners, prompted by avaricious hope of easy temporary gain, will, before all, endeavor to take advantage of the local population, which, being scarce, and rather fond of strong drink, will not long resist temptation, and shall perish, together with all those branches of trade for which islanders alone are fit, and particularly the Aleutics, these ancient, permanent, and practiced inhabitants of the ocean."

In another part of the same document is the following passage relating to the main land and its inhabitants:

"Such is, in general features, the character of the Russian-American continent. From all what we said it clearly appears, that in this region no attempts were ever made, and no necessity ever occurred, to introduce any system of land-ownership; the country occupied by savages is too vast; they use to camp in certain fit places, generally marked by mountains, rivers, and streams, each having its name, but no fixed boundaries whatever, and their migrations are guided by wild instinct and unbounded will. All this region has neither past nor present, and it may be confidently said of the future that it is far and impenetrable. Every attempt of civilizing that country will stumble against unconquerable obstacles; the complete absence of local topography, the wild character of the savages, and no less wild character of nature; but, above all, the rigor and inconsistency of climate. To achieve any good results for the future of that country, by means of conquest and violence, would hardly be possible; to drive the savages further into the interior of the American continent, however difficult, would be possible; but this plan will be connected with irrecoverable money and material losses; the more so, that a civilized population will never be attracted to that country; there can be expected speculators, but no permanent settlers; there can be expected no civilized population, no permanent industry, but rather spoilers of the natives, and depredatory working out of the riches as well on the surface as in the womb of the earth. Such system can devastate, but not organize the country."

This, sir, is Russian authority, furnished at a time and under circumstances when it was to their interest to make favorable representations of the climate and character of the country. It is not only reliable, but ought to be conclusive. We are not, however, left to this authority alone. Behring, Cook, and Pelouse, all early navigators, and representing three different nationalities, use the most disparaging terms in describing the country and climate. Von Langsdorff, an intelligent Russian traveler, who visited the country in the early part of the present century, calls the few inhabitants who are not Indians, "Siberian criminals, malefactors, and adventurers," and designates the country as "this miserable part of the world." The following extracts from Executive Document No. 177 ought, some of them, relating to climate and productions, and others to the character of the inhabitants, are chiefly from the reports of the officers accompanying the expedition sent out by our Government in 1867 to explore these Russian possessions:

"We had no observations for twenty-three days."
 "Not a single tree grows upon this [Oonalaska] or the adjacent islands."
 "To remove these people, [Indians,] or to interfere with their dead, would cause an exceedingly bad feeling, particularly as they are already suspicious of us, and do not like the change of flags."
 "I hope I may be pardoned for suggesting that the greatest care should be exercised in the selection of officers for this coast with minute and special instructions for their guidance in the treatment of Indians in this and the eastern portion of our territory. They are a warlike people, possessing all the suspicion and treachery of a savage race, and are capable of destroying a free and profitable trade for many years on the coast of Sitka and our eastern possessions to the British line."

"I determined to proceed at once to Chilcote, mouth of Chilcote river, held by the most powerful tribe, and perhaps the most warlike and troublesome on the coast."

"These Indians [up Chatham sound] from the earliest navigators have been known as a treacherous and quarrelsome people."

"Next morning entered Prince Frederick's sound, and proceeded to the island of Kake, the residence of a tribe well known for their ferocity and thieving propensities. It was this tribe that murdered Mr. Eby."

"For many days and nights they watched in vain for sun, moon, and stars, which led us almost to believe that neither ever had been, or would be seen."

"Whisky, for which the natives will sell everything they possess, even wife and children, must be strictly prohibited, the possession of which will cause murders of the whites, and hence an Indian war."

"The whole coast to Sitka, and far northward, exhibits one uniform topography and similar climatic conditions, being rainy and foggy, and the growth is nearly or quite the same throughout."

"Unfortunately, this vast region of islands and continental coast is not bordered at the bases of these lofty-timbered ranges with sloping or level bottoms; but is gashed with precipitous and inaccessible gorges, the peaks for the most part being capped with snow, which, melting in summer, together with the continual rains, make every rockless footstep a sphagnum miry morass. Altitude passes for naught here: even the mountains are miry to their tops."

"No reliance can be placed on any of them [grasses] for hay, and winter feeding as in such a climate no haying is possible."

"All that is worthy of the name of timber here [Kodiak] is the Sitka spruce."

"There are no trees of any size whatever upon any of the Aleutian Islands."

The enormous amount of rainfall along a sea-board essentially cloudy throughout the year has its normal effect upon the class of vegetation that will succeed in ripening under such conditions of climate. The whole extent of country subject to these rains is covered with sphagnum from one to two feet in depth, and even on the steepest hillsides this carpet is saturated with water, and renders progress through it very slow and difficult, especially when there is a heavy growth of wood and underbrush. At Fort Simpson, the Stakene, Chilkahl, Kodiak, Oonalaska, and the islands westward, this morass exists to the summits or snow line of the mountains. In no part of the country, except on two or three mountain sides on Chatham strait, between the eastern entrance of Peril strait and the mouth of the Chilkahl, have we seen herbage or trees destroyed by fire, as is so universally resorted to in Washington and Oregon, both by the natives and by the settlers. At our different stations we attempted to obtain the temperature of the earth three feet below the surface, but never penetrated a foot before the hole was filled with water."

"Tobenkoff (1848) gives a dark picture of the appearance and climate of Prince William's sound, calling it desolate, gloomy, and deserted; surrounded by rocks and pine forests, mountains covered with eternal snow, and enveloped in perpetual fog, or invisible with drizzling rain. Rain falls sometimes for a whole month, and there are not more than sixty or ninety sunny days in the year. During the months of July and August the thermometer showed 59° on fair days and 40° on rainy days. The frost in winter is very severe but of short duration, for the south winds change it suddenly to thaw and rain."

"At Sitka, fruit trees were introduced in the Governor's garden, and special attention devoted to their culture, but they have not borne fruit except a few small specimens that never matured."

"None of the cereals are cultivated, and it is very doubtful if they would succeed."

"The great desideratum of the Pacific coast is coal, and we had been led to suppose that some of the reported deposits in Alaska were really coal; but the specimens from the Island of Unga, given to me by the Governor of the Russian colonies, are nothing more than lignite, thickly marked with iron pyrites. Moreover, at the worked out-crop in Coal Harbor it exists in veins of rarely more than a foot in thickness. This coal has been faithfully tried on the Russian steamers, and, after very many experiments, has been abandoned, and recourse had to the Nanaimo coals from Vancouver's Island. The navigators and engineers of the Russian steamers inform me that it is very light, burns with great rapidity, and leaves very much ash and clinker. The same general remarks apply to the coal obtained from English harbor, at the entrance to Cook's inlet, and first found and reported by Portlock."

"Two or three years since some of the sub-tribes, twenty or thirty miles west of the Stakene, captured the English trading schooner Royal Charlie, murdered her crew, and plundered and scuttled the vessel."

The foregoing extracts furnish some idea of the character of the country and the people we are to acquire by this Russian treaty. It is alleged that the precious metals and copper have been discovered; but there is no reliable authority that either can be found in sufficient quantity to be of any value as a production of the country. The furs of this region are reported as of great value, and the fur trade profitable. Statistics show that the whole value of the entire annual catch of furs does not now amount to two per cent. of the purchase price we pay for the country, counting the cost of capture nothing, and the extermination of the fur-bearing animals has only been prevented by the most stringent laws which a despotic Power only could enforce. In our hands the fur-bearing animals will quickly vanish. That extensive fishing banks exist in these northern seas is quite certain; but what exclusive title do we get to them? They are said to be far out at sea, and no where within three marine leagues of the islands or main shore. The products of the country are sometimes spoken of as "fine," "large," "excellent," &c., but as these are comparative terms little idea can be formed of the quality or size of the thing spoken of, and frequently when size or quality is given the product proves insignificant. For instance, potatoes are cultivated by the Aleutians at Oonalaska, after removing the sphagnum from the soil; and Bishop Veniaminoff says that "the potato yields from four to seven fold and attains 'great size,' from three to ten making a pound weight." Think of it, ye farmers of New England and the Middle States, but ten potatoes to weigh a pound! Surely, Alaska is not the country of which it is said "potatoes they grow small over there."

In latitude 55° south of Sitka, "ground ice" as it is called, is found at any time of the year six or eight feet below the surface. It is evident, therefore, that successful agriculture can never be carried on in this region. That it will never be populated by an enterprising people is equally certain. Government, for special purposes, might force into existence a few sickly settlements, but they would no more compare with the flourishing towns that are springing into existence all over the rich prairies of the West than the sickly shrubs of the Conservatory in front of this Capitol can compare with the luxuriant growth of the tropics. We have already a territory sufficiently extensive to sustain a population of hundreds of millions. Texas, no more densely populated than Massachusetts is to-day, would contain all the inhabitants of the United States. The Territories of Colorado, Dakota, Nebraska, New Mexico, Washington, and Utah would sustain one hundred and sixty millions of people, with no more to the square mile than Massachusetts now averages.

Why, then, was this territory purchased? Commercially and geographically it bears the same relation to the western shores of North America that Greenland does to the eastern. It can be of no more service, nor can it be of any more importance in the navigation of the Pacific than Greenland has been in the navigation of the Atlantic. Nobody asked for it, and nobody wanted it. With all due respect to the committee who report this bill, the mystery attending this session has not been dispelled, nor have the motives of the parties presenting it to the Government been satisfactorily explained. The New York Herald says this territory is the spontaneous offer of the emperor, and entirely unexpected and unsolicited on the part of the United States, and that it is the second time it has been tendered to us. This is quite probable. Russia has had it long enough to know its utter worthlessness. The correspondence furnished us throws no light whatever upon the subject, and gives no clue to the reasons which prompted the negotiations. It consists of three very brief notes and one telegram of nine words. The substance of this correspondence may be summed up thus:

Mr. Seward says, I will give you so much. Stoeckl says, done! Stoeckl says, emperor says done! Gortschakoff telegraphs, "Treaty ratified." The Roman general wrote, veni, vidi, vici; but it is doubtful whether this negotiation, for brevity, has ever been equaled in diplomatic or political correspondence, with one exception, which is found in a pertinent use of the sententious word "stick." That there was other correspondence is more than probable—correspondence which must be withheld for reasons of public policy. It is not easy, then, to divine the motives which prompted the purchase of Alaska, a barren, unproductive region, covered with ice and snow, or shrouded in perpetual fogs and storms, embracing an area, nearly one third of which is within the Arctic circle, of three hundred and ninety-four thousand square miles, with a coast line, including bays and islands, of more than eleven thousand miles; with a population estimated at seventy-five thousand, about ten thousand of whom are Siberian malefactors, half-breeds, Kodiaks, Aleuts, and a very few Russians, not one of whom can speak our language, who, by the terms of this treaty, are made citizens of the United States, and the balance composed entirely of Indians.

If this purchase involved only its first cost of $7,200,000 in gold, equal to about thirty thousand dollars in gold to every congressional district in the Union, it might be borne. But, sir, that is a mere bagatelle to the prospective expense which must be incurred. First of all a territorial government must be organized. The telegraphic wires were still hot with dispatches sent to the Secretary of State, (not instigated, of course, by anybody in the interest of the State Department,) congratulating him upon the making of this treaty, an achievement more successful than was his great effort at writing down the rebellion, when a memorial from the mayor and councils of Sitka, a little hamlet, chiefly of log houses or huts, containing not more than five hundred inhabitants of all ages, sexes, and nations, exclusive of Indians in the vicinity, was sent to the Senate, praying for a territorial government.

It is not likely that Robert J. Walker, for whose talents I entertain the highest respect, the venerable statesman of two generations, who, in January last, wrote a letter of nine columns in the Chronicle favoring the purchase of Alaska and St. Thomas, claiming originality of the "fifty-four forty or fight" doctrine, an absurd claim most effectually squelched in the Senate by the late Thomas H. Benton, and who characterizes the opponents of this Alaska swindle as the fossil remains of a party now nearly extinct, had anything to do with the getting up of this memorial. His business was that of a paid attorney, pursuing a legitimate calling. And the press of this city in devoting their columns to the advocacy of this swindle for the purpose of influencing this House, were pursuing the vocation of the tradesman vending his wares for a consideration had and received. It was that class of persons who hang around this Capitol waiting, Micawber like, for something to turn up; that class of persons so inimitably described by Neil in his Charcoal Sketches in the person of Peter Brush. Peter was a politician, and soliloquizing said: "I love my country and I want an office. I don't care what, so it is fat and easy. I have a genius for governing—for telling people what to do and looking at 'em do it. I want to take care of my country, and I want my country to take care of me."

These are the men who want a territorial government. Be patient, gentlemen, you will not have to wait long. The bill has already been introduced in the Senate. It provides for a Governor, secretary, judge, and marshal, several offices, all "fat and easy." These are not all the offices; more Peter Brushes are wanted. Sixty-five thousand Indians must be provided for. Indian treaties come next in order. These, of course, will be necessary to extinguish the Indian title to the Arcadian bowers and Elysian fields so eloquently described by the gentleman from Massachusetts. A few more millions for that purpose is of no account. The flag must wave

"On Behring's rocks, on Greenland's isles;"

and the eagle mingle his scream with

"The wolf's long howl from Onalaska's shore."

Then follow Indian agencies. I think I see Peter's eyes glisten at the thought of writing himself down Indian agent. These are the "fat places," which, for leeching the Treasury and defrauding the Government, are not equaled by anything outside of the whisky ring. And as these Indians are the most warlike and treacherous of any on the continent, a few soldiers, say a couple of regiments, will be wanted to keep them quiet. It will not require more than two or three millions a year to maintain the soldiers, excepting in time of war, which quite likely will be all the time. And the Navy, too, that must be represented, for, in imitating the man who bought all the land that joined his farm to keep his neighbor's pigs from annoying him, we have doubled our coast line and acquired innumerable bays, inlets, and harbors—nice places for smugglers and contraband traders. A few revenue cutters and some cruisers must be employed to look after those little matters—add a few more millions; "manifest destiny" says we must have the whole continent; never mind the expense.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman thought of the probable cost of the coast survey of that immense coast?

Mr. FERRISS. It did not occur to me, but ought not to be omitted.

The great American idea of expansion must be carried out. Custom-houses and customs officers must be created; the latter salaried, of course, for the only trade likely to be carried on will be an illicit traffic in whisky and tobacco, and even Peter Brush would not take the place and rely upon his fees. One thing more I must not omit. A country teeming with vegetation, burdened with all the agricultural products of the earth, rich in the precious ores and the baser metals, and withal glittering in diamonds, as the eloquent chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs charitably testifies, must have her rivers and harbors in suitable condition to receive the navies of the world, and a few more thousands for the Stakkeen and the Yukon must adorn the next appropriation bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. Chairman, I implore the members of this House to remember that the nation is groaning under a debt of more than two thousand five hundred million dollars; that the acquisition of these Russian possessions involves an expense of ten million dollars in currency, now called for with an enormous prospective cost and outlay for their government and protection perhaps equal to the interest on fifty millions more, that we do not need the Territory, and then determine whether they will heap this additional burden upon their constituents. It is a responsibility I do not crave and shall not take. Is there a man on this floor who for a single moment believes his constituents would vote to tax themselves $80,000 in gold to pay their share of the money?

Gentlemen talk about the honor of the nation being involved, and good faith to a friendly Power requiring the carrying out of this treaty. This is the argument that is expected to win, the sentimental argument cunningly provided and made to hand by the manipulators of the negotiations. The boldness with which this treaty was sought to be forced upon this House has no parallel in our history. For the first time possession was surrendered and taken of the possessions acquired before provision was made by legislation for carrying into effect those provisions that required legislative aid.

It was a trick of diplomacy, and I hope no one here will be deceived by any such shallow device. Over and over again this House has asserted its right to grant or refuse aid like that now called for, and when do we propose to exercise that right? Pay this money, and tomorrow a treaty for the purchase of St. Thomas and St. John's, another for St. Croix, and still another for Greenland will be thrust in our faces and money asked for. We hold the purse strings of the nation; we are the depositaries of its treasure, and responsible for its disbursement. We cannot shake off that responsibility if we would. It will not do to shrink behind the treaty-making power; the people will drag us out from our hiding-place and demand an account of our stewardship.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure the eloquent gentleman from Massachusetts drew upon his imagination when he said new and unexplored countries were always detried and disparaged. The vivid picture he drew of the mines of wealth and the unlimited productions and the genial climate of Alaska reminded me of the glowing accounts of the boundless riches of this country recorded by its discoverers. In justice, however, to the honorable gentleman, I must say the Spaniard's picture of the wealth and magnificence of the Montezumas was dimmed by the gold and silver and precious stones and diamonds of Alaska. Let us not deceive ourselves. Alaska is an inhospitable region. It adds nothing to our power, nothing to our wealth. I am not one of those who believe our country is finished and ought to be inclosed. I believe in expansion and extension, not by reaching out to the extremity of the continent and taking under our protecting care and absorbing into our body-politic the most inharmonious, and if not the weakest, the most dangerous element to be found, but in that legitimate expansion required by an increased population or demanded by the exigencies of commerce.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I shall discuss the question of a confirmation of the treaty of Alaska very briefly. I shall not pretend to bring into the discussion anything elaborate, learned, or very new; but in my own way, I wish to state a few simple and plain propositions, which have led me to the conviction that I ought to vote against this appropriation. Such was my first belief about it, and the more I have seen, heard, or read upon the subject-matter the more impressed have I been toward such a conclusion.

My starting point is that the territory is intrinsically and virtually valueless. Of course time and opportunity do not now fall to me to elucidate this proposition in all its various considerations. I know poetry can throw a charm about even frozen Alaska; that the imagination can create beauties for any land; and that the zeal and eloquence of the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. BANKS] has invested this theme on this occasion with an uncommon interest, which I fear may give the cause he advocates more favor than it honestly deserves. But to come down from all the stilts of romance, poetry, eloquence, and imagination, upon that plane where our calm judgments and common sense should guide us, I believe that all the evidence upon the subject proves the proposition of Alaska's worthlessness to be true. Of course I would not deny that her cod fisheries, if she has them, would be somewhat valuable; but it seems doubtful if fish can find sun enough to be cured on her shores, and if even that is so, my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] shows pretty conclusively that in existing treaties we had that right already. It does seem to me that the very general and indefinite manner in which the other side meet this issue is a very strong confession on their part that but little can be said or discovered to satisfy the American people that these wild regions are worth annexing to the United States.

In support of the proposition of the utter worthlessness of this territory there are several general tests of a most important and convincing character. Conclusive proof of it is that Russia would sell her territory. If she would sell it at all, she would probably have given it away. If it was not valuable to her, it will never prove of any value to us. Russia is not a Power to surrender a foothold upon earth unless it should be an actual and annoying burden to her. Her history for all time shows that she has been seeking always to aggrandize her territorial power. This very day and hour is she pushing her triumphant armies into Central Asia for the acquisition of new dominions to her widely-spread territories.

The fact of the want of population in Alaska is another conclusive argument upon the proposition maintained. She has five hundred and seventy thousand square miles of area; eleven thousand miles of coast line, including bays and harbors; and besides her Indians only about nine thousand of all other inhabitants. It has taken toward a century of the rule of Russia to have got into that country even as much as this; so that we shall pay over seven hundred dollars for our acquired sovereignty over each and every civilized and half-civilized creature in that land. Why has not Alaska a larger population? If what is said in her behalf was not founded in mere imagination, she would, instead of this little people, have had population enough to constitute her an empire.

The want of a demand for the annexation of this country in an expression of the popular will is an argument against it. The people of our country have a belief about this Arctic region which cannot be easily removed. Where are your petitions and your public demonstrations in behalf of an acceptance of Alaska? Where are any indications or movements among your mercantile classes, in your Boards of Trade, and other kindred organizations, which are always so quick and keen in all matters of population, wealth, and trade? The press of our country is against this purchase or annexation. The proposition has met with ridicule and opposition in most of the public papers except where there has been some special interest or motive for a contrary course. While our countrymen have been anxious for acquisitions of territory, and have been willing almost to declare and carry on war for such a prize, who has heard any popular voice or expression in all the length and breadth of our country in behalf of Alaska? Why does not an American population pour itself in upon her? Where are the adventurers and speculators and men of enterprise who strike for a new country to make the first fortunes and obtain the first foothold there? Where are the classes of men who build up a city in the western States and Territories almost in a day? How many of them have followed our flag to Alaska? They will never go, Mr. Chairman. Instead of an Alaskan enthusiasm and fever among the American masses the country was struck with wonder and amazement at the proposition of such an acquisition of worthless territory. The treaty was hastily confirmed, and next to no time was taken for its consideration. If it was a new question with Senators now my belief is that its fate would be a different one. It was born just ahead of a brood of births between us and Denmark and other countries, every one of which will die still-born. The sense of the country will not allow such extraordinary consummation.

Further, it is a conclusive objection to this treaty, Mr. Chairman, that Alaska is not contiguous to any portion of our domain, but is separated from us by a great region of country belonging to Great Britain; and that the population we shall get have neither language nor mode of life like any of the different inhabitants of the United States. This objection needs no more than its naked statement to be most clearly seen and forcibly felt.

But, Mr. Chairman, Alaska, if ours, will be an enormous annual care and expense to us. I have no time to dilate upon this, but as an indicia in this respect let me read what I a moment ago cut from a morning newspaper. Such reminders as this will not be uncommon:

"SAN FRANCISCO, 24th.

"United States flagship Pensacola, proceeded to Victoria, Vancouver's Island, from San Francisco, Wednesday. The admiral will confer with the commander of the United States steamer Jamestown, now lying in Esquimault harbor, on affairs of Alaska, the disposition of the Indians, and whether their attitude toward the new white population makes it necessary for the presence of war vessels on that coast, and even whether a fort or two is necessary for the safety of the traders."

Two of the canons of Jefferson's code of life might well be invoked in the consideration of the question before us: "Never spend your money before you have it." We certainly have no millions now for such an investment. "Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap; it will be dear to you." If these seven millions we pay now should be cheap even, the future millions to be expended would certainly make the purchase dear to us.

Mr. Chairman, I have very briefly given my reasons why we should not receive Alaska as a part of the United States. But have we the political, ay, moral right to refuse to make the desired appropriation? I have no doubt of it, not a particle, not a scintilla of doubt. It needs no learning or book exploration to appreciate it beyond a common sense reading of the Constitution of our country. It is as plain as the plainest illustration can make it. The President and Senate cannot complete a treaty, which necessarily and primarily calls for an appropriation of money, without the assent of the Representatives of the people. Bear in mind, this so-called treaty settled no controversy; established no disputed line; created no alliance; is the incident, accident, or adjunct of nothing else; but is a naked agreement for the purchase of country; a pure call for an appropriation, nothing else. What is called a "treaty" is strictly and merely an agreement to appropriate, or that this House shall appropriate, a sum of money. Now, if the treaty-making power can buy they can sell. If they can buy land for money, they can buy money for land. If they can buy a part of a country, they can buy the whole of a country; if they can sell a part, they can sell the whole of our country, and this, too, against the wishes of a people as protected and expressed in the popular representatives. Are we ready to accept such an interpretation?

There is no pretense that the Senate committed any wrong. They did what they could to make a treaty, but it was of such a nature that it was incipient or conditional only, and could never become complete till its approval by ourselves. This duty we must perform upon our own responsibility, and in good faith to our country and constituents, without regard to anything which has been done by anybody else. Russia could know, should know, was presumed to know, and did know, that the attempted treaty was incomplete, and she can find no fault, whatever the result of this deliberation may be. The President has prematurely taken possession of the country attempted to be ceded, hoping the appropriation would be made. In this Russia took with him the risk of the result. May it not have been done as a moral force to compel us to make the appropriation?

But Russia is a friendly Power, it is said, and it would be impolitic to offend her. If she is friendly, then she will never have an idea of any hostile resorts on account of the acts of Andrew Johnson notoriously unauthorized, and assented to by herself. It would be the last way she should show her spirit of regard for us, to attempt to impose this cession of territory upon an unwilling people. Better refuse an acceptance of the territory and pay Russia any damage which it has occasioned her for our protectorate of Alaska during a year, and flying our flag over that distant possession. There may be some inconvenience in our dispossession of Russian authority for a time, but all those evils had better be borne, and anyhow reasonably compensated, than allow this opportunity to go by for a practical assertion on the part of this House of Representatives of a doctrine, which, if surrendered, may at some day destroy the liberties of the people.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a few remarks touching one of the powers granted in the Constitution of the United States, and I do that for the purpose more particularly of assigning the reason for the action I am by the laws and by my oath required to take in the case which presents itself for our consideration when it comes to a final vote upon it. I perhaps, stand in an attitude in this case I seldom stood in in any case which has presented itself for my consideration since I have been a member of this House, or when I occupied civil circles of life. My position is that of a conservative character, a word I do not admire, but I have no other term to express the position I occupy.

A few brief remarks before I enter upon the discussion of what is implied in the term treaty will suffice me.

But a few remarks preceding that of taking up the constitutional provisions. The argument made in advocacy of the majority report, I believe, with due respect to the committee and to those who advocate the idea of the richness of that country, to be most exaggerated. I could, if time allowed and I could be indulged in a reply, show that they are something after the tales of Gulliver. And, by the by, they are nothing more than what has been detailed to me by men who lived a few years gone by in regard to the country that I live in myself. But the occasion will not bear me out in drawing the parallel between the extravagant notions of men who lived in North Carolina sixty, seventy, and eighty years ago in regard to the richness of Tennessee described by the people who lived in North Carolina, or at least by some who had been upon the frontier and had got but a faint view of the country of Tennessee. They went back and told wonderful tales of its richness. Those tales were not in reality more extravagant than the tales told in reference to the richness of this Alaska country.

Then on the other side it is argued that of all the sterile portions of God's green earth, of the most huge capers of nature in its wildest and most frantic rage, this has been thrown up and made a barren, bleak waste upon which the wild boar of the forest could not feast. Even the wolf, it is said, is not to be found there. Well, for gentlemen to say it is too poor to support wolves is a little too much. Neither a white man nor an Indian has ever put his foot where the wild dog has never been; for if the wild dog cannot live there no human being can live there, no animal can live there. I cannot give in to that idea. I think it is not so barren, so sterile as all that. I think God, when he made this mighty globe of ours, destined Alaska for a divine, an infinite, a wise purpose, and that it should be a blessing.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULLINS. Not one moment. I know the gentleman is with me, but I do not want two speeches combined in one.

Mr. HIGBY. I only want to ask a question.

Mr. MULLINS. I have not time. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure when I have leisure. I have no speech written out so that I can just refer to the point where I left off by stopping to answer inquiries, as those who have spoken before have done.

Thus you see I do not agree with these extravagant ideas of the richness of this country, that if you dig a hole there at night, as was said of Tennessee, when you go back next morning it is six inches deep in oil; and if you plant corn you raise ten bushels to the acre, as was said of Middle Tennessee, but if you do not plant any you raise five. I do not believe that of Alaska, neither do I believe that the growth there is as tall and as splendid and as lasting as they say it is. That is not the case in the geological sense of the word. I mean by the geological expression to apply it to all that surrounds the earth and the consequent laws of nature that govern it. It is not found in the history of our country and of this globe to be the fact that the lasting timber is found in that cold region. It is not according to the nature of things that it should be so. But that there is timber there I do not doubt, and enough for all purposes necessary for the use of civilized man in this country.

Now, I occupy this medium ground, and as to my absolute decision about this matter, I shall not be controlled by the richness of this country, nor its sterility, but by its geographical position and the facts involved in this case. In regard to this treaty and all that has been said about it by the parties that have spoken on both sides of the question, there is in all the arguments one basis from which they have never been able to wrench loose; and I am very glad to find that that is so; and that is this, that where treaties are made with the contingencies attached thereto, to complete them by payment is the action of the House. All the lawyers that have pleaded on the case, every lawgiver and every writer of law investigating this case and arguing upon it, comes down to one fixed basis, and that is that its substantial and fixed ratification has to be done by the action of the House.

I will say here that I expect to cast my vote for the payment of the money to consummate this treaty. And now a few words in regard to what I conceive to be the treaty-making power as set forth in the Constitution, and what the term treaty means. I do not pretend to give its national sense in all its ramifications, but upon what general principle does the word treaty stand? How did it originate? You never find the term used by any Power until belligerent Powers began on earth. It grew out of warfare between contending powers. And when the term is made to cover all civil actions and civil contracts, it is a stretch of the term as we find it in this Constitution. In my opinion, it is a stretch of the term to make it cover all national negotiations. When you go back to Vattel and Bouvier you find that the word treaty relates to questions growing out of the conflicts of different nations one with the other. It is the settling by negotiation between the belligerent Powers of a principle that was contended for on the battle-field, and that not being legitimately settled, or settled by the sword or war-making power, it then assumes somewhat of a peaceful form. The principle contended for is to be settled; a state of quiet exists and they agree upon the parties that shall settle the difference between them.

The treaty has been spoken of here in relation to our northern boundary between the State of Maine and the British Power. What was that? It was to settle a definite dividing line between two Powers. It grew out of our original revolutionary war. The dividing line was not definitely settled, and the two Powers agreed to have gentlemen come forward with their instruments, both the compass and the solar compass, and determine the line, and they agreed upon the line and it was settled. That grew out of the power of conquest, out of our victories in the revolutionary war. And now the word "treaty" is made to cover every solitary species of action that grows up between the governments of different Powers when they come to negotiate in a civil capacity. It is nothing more than negotiation. I say this for this purpose, and nothing else, to determine by this House and lay the basis down that this is a republican Government. The very first article that presents itself to our view in the Constitution declares that all legislative powers are vested in the Congress of the United States, and in case a treaty requires legislative action it hinges back upon the Congress of the United States. It means nothing more nor less than this, that we, as a republican people, have a written Constitution, and that word "treaty" comes up and is recognized in it as one of its articles. We must understand that when that term is used it is intended to be used in all civil negotiations, not with a high hand and with a power that is not to be checked by the people in Congress assembled. If a treaty was to be concluded finally by the President and the Senate, if that idea was fully indorsed, then I would say, farewell to American liberty.

The Constitution in that sense would be understood to carry with it a power that overrides its own positive terms. To understand this thing distinctly we must take the Constitution as it stands as a whole, not wrenching one section and one paragraph from another, but coupling it all together according to the character and nature of the Government under which we live. In the very heading of the Constitution we find this declaration:

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

This is carried out in its details, and more particularly and positively in asserting the grand fundamental fixed principle that all legislative powers are given to the Congress of the United States. And when you come to the treaty-making power here, unless you take it in its context with a full sense of the bearing of the other powers in the Constitution, great harm may be done. The argument made here, that a treaty, when made by the President and two thirds of the Senate is binding and conclusive upon us, and that we have no power to resist it, precludes the idea of this being a threefold Government, with executive, judicial, and legislative departments.

This is the threefold political power that is guaranteed in this fundamental organization of our Government; and if these two powers have the supreme right to make treaties, where is the third power? What is the third power here for? The very article itself that gives the power to the Senate and the President to make treaties is absolutely concluded in the fact, and with common reasoning upon it. And why? Why it rests on this fact:

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof"—

In pursuance of this instrument, that means—"and all treaties made, and which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

Under the authority of the United States! Does that exclude Congress? The President and the Senate having the supreme power to make treaties does that exclude the right of Congress to determine whether they shall be final or not? If it does, you have got no such power as Congress to sit in judgment upon the case.

This is where the people come up by their Representatives, for whom we have pledged by oath to stand by, protect, and defend, and guaranty to them this right that they have bequeathed to us, only in trust for them.

Then what next? It is here declared to be the law made in pursuance thereof. Taking this view, the Congress of the United States must pass upon it. I have not time to detail several other passages in this Constitution that fully bear out this idea.

What, now, do I mean? I mean that of all the Governments upon the face of the civilized globe those that are republics should be most jealous of their rights. For here the enemies of the Republic can crawl through the treaty-making power and fasten upon the body-politic by acquiring territory. And if it is agreed that Congress is bound by any treaty to acquire territory, you certainly must allow the other side of the case. The territory can be sold, you may graft the powers of the people on it, and then you are at the end of your row, save when they elect Representatives and send them to this House. That is all your chance.

Now, why should this treaty be ratified? We, as the people of the United States, a grand and powerful nation, placed above any and all others, carrying in our wake the Bible, with all its benign influences and intrinsic rights to every clime, kingdom, and country where the American flag floats in grandeur amid the proud hurrahs of all republics; we carry it with us. And what is the march and tread of this empire of our Republic? It is, as I have believed before, Heaven's greatest and best gift that has come down from the shocks and battles of the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries. She lifts her towering head amid the wreck of empires, and she rides above the storms of all the future ages that are crumbling to the dust. She comes as a giant strong from the chambers of the East, and she lifts her towering head and looks westward for empire.

Can you stop this Anglo-Saxon race? They say they ought to be stopped. Why? Alaska is poor and barren. Nevertheless she is going out to the West, and if there is a little country lying out there, and there is a small bit of land intervening between it and the continent of America, upon the broad sheet of water that rolls up on the Pacific tides, shall we not make it blossom as the rose? Shall we not make her a rock of shelter amid the storm?

We will do it. And why? Because if we cannot have the benefit of that people they will have the benefit of us. And why? Because this great and gigantic Power, which holds in its fist of monarchy one quarter of the land of the civilized world, has seen fit to recognize that Alaska is upon the continent of America, and to say to us, "Of all the people in the world I would rather you would have it."

We struck hands then in friendly alliance with this mighty monarch, who, during the last few years, has, as with the arm of a Vulcan, smitten the chains off more than thirty millions of bondmen and set them free to love and revere the hand that has given them their personal freedom and the right to worship God as their consciences may dictate. We love that country, for she is standing a little in the wake of us who claim to be republicans.

Russia has seen fit to rely upon Congress for the payment of this debt. Doubtless she recognized all the powers of our Constitution; but she recognized also the magnanimity of the House of Representatives, in whom is vested the control of all disbursements of money. She knew that we would not be wanting in respect for the pledges of our good faith made by the Senate. I think that possibly the Senate acted in haste. The principle which I adopt is that treaties, so-called, when made in time of peace, are simply negotiations—affairs of bargain and sale. There is no belligerency existing between this country and Russia; there has never been, and I trust there never will be.

When our nation was in peril, when a mighty rebellion was drenching this land in blood, what did we see? We saw the French lion roaring over here in Mexico, seeking a permanent foothold on this continent. No sooner was that done than Russia remembered the Crimean war, in which England and France rolled up their combined powers upon her. In that struggle my sympathies were with Russia. Though my ancestors came from England, though I speak her language, though I love her on account of the ties of blood and religion, though I admire her because she spreads the light of the Gospel wherever her influence extends, yet I feel still more warmly toward Russia, because when the fate of our Government was trembling in the balance, when she saw our people animated in the fearful struggle, by a thought that rises above the imagination of empires, and will yet, I trust, illuminate the pathway of that monarchical Power to a better form of government, Russia, seeing the French in Mexico battling for a stronghold, sent her fleets into our western waters. From that hour France was smitten as were the lions when Daniel was cast into their midst. She had politically the lock-jaw, and soon there was a "skedaddling." [Laughter.]

When the fiendish men of the South were endeavoring by means of garments, poisoned with the seeds of yellow fever and small-pox, to introduce these contagious diseases among the people of the North, (God help the men who could do such an act!) at the time when the rebellion was endeavoring to sustain itself by such diabolical expedients, Russia came to us with her sympathy and succor. Russia now offers us a portion of her territory lying in North America, five hundred and seventy thousand square miles, about one fifth of this continent. Shall we buy it? If it is nothing more nor less than what its enemies say, it is worth that. If it is what its friends say we cannot weigh its value; we have not scales and balances only in the imagination of the human mind to measure its grandeur. But I do not give entire credit to all that is said in its favor.

As this is the condition of things, and I find it so, I wish it distinctly understood I vote for this appropriation of money, because the American nation in its mighty march onward will have it. I want it peacefully if we can; never forcibly if it can be avoided.

Mr. HIGBY obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. MAYNARD, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee accordingly rose, and Mr. MAYNARD as Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. GARFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD (at ten o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. NICHOLSON: The petition of Mrs. M. J. Hutton, widow of John C. Hutton, private in third Delaware infantry, for a pension.

By Mr. STOKES: The petition of Joseph Anderson, of Tennessee, for compensation for lumber taken for the use of the Government.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 2, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of James Ross, praying that pensions be granted to the soldiers of the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of Connecticut and New York, praying an appropriation for the removal of obstructions which impede the navigation of the East river entrance to New York harbor at Hell Gate, and the removal of rocks in the harbor known as "Battery," "Diamond," and "Coenties" reefs; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a petition of William Cornell Jewitt, praying an appropriation of $7,200,000 for the purchase of Alaska, as a proper appreciation of the life-long services of Hon. William H. Seward; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARLAN presented the petition of Mrs. Fannie Kelley, of Kansas, praying compensation for Indian spoils and for injuries resulting from her captivity among the Indians, having been captured July 12, 1864, west of Fort Laramie, and for compensation for services rendered to the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of Benjamin Severson, in behalf of property holders in the city of Washington, in relation to the Washington canal; which was referred to the Committee of the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the opinion of the Court of Claims in the case of George Ashley, administrator of George Holgate, deceased, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Minerva Lewis, administratrix of Ezekiel Lewis, deceased, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of M. N. Radovich, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Black Beaver, a Delaware Indian, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed, and he asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary C. Lane, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of James Narcon, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DRAKE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 941) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy and Marine corps, reported it with amendments.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 583) in relation to the transportation of United States mails by railroad companies, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 563) for the preservation of the harbors of the United States against encroachment, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COLE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1080) for the relief of Edward B. Allen, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 78) for the relief of the Columbia Turnpike Company, for use and occupation of their road during the late rebellion, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Captain H. Clay Wood, submitted an adverse report.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 582) to incorporate the District of Columbia Concrete Stone Company, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, from the joint select Committee on Retrenchment, reported a bill (S. No. 587) to provide for retrenchment and greater efficiency in the diplomatic and consular service of the United States, and submitted a report thereon. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CORBETT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 192) to incorporate the Potomac Navigation and Transportation Company of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 236) in addition to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria Steam Packet Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 236) for the relief of Martha E. King, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

JAPANESE STUDENTS AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Committee on Naval Affairs have directed me to report a joint resolution to admit certain persons to the Naval Academy, and recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the joint resolution reported by him at this time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let it be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the Naval Academy at Annapolis not exceeding six persons, to be designated by the Government of the empire of Japan; but no expense is thereby to accrue to the United States, and the Secretary of the Navy may in the case of these persons modify or dispense with any provisions of the rules and regulations of the Academy which circumstances may, in his opinion, render necessary or desirable.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution (S. R. No. 154) was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This resolution is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and has been submitted to the Navy Department, and does not meet with any objection there. In fact, the resolution has been drawn up in accordance with their views. The circumstances of the case are about these: in the literary institutions at New Brunswick, New Jersey, there are now some six Japanese youths, who read and speak our language, and who have adopted the principles of our religion, and are intelligent young men. The Japanese Government desires that they shall have the benefit of such instruction as can be had in our Naval Academy and cannot be obtained elsewhere. It seems to me, as I hear the subject somewhat discussed about me, that this is in perfect accordance with the true policy, and with the duty of this Government. It is a policy which we have already adopted, to establish friendly intercourse with the Japanese. We have sent agents there. We have received them in this Chamber, and it is our true policy, because by establishing a friendly intercourse with this nation, while we benefit them we secure to ourselves a material wealth which cannot be estimated. It is our duty, because we are placed in a position where we can benefit the rest of mankind. We have civilization and the arts and Christianity and civil liberty to give to them, and we ought to cultivate our intercourse with them.

There is another idea. This is the most opportune time in the world to establish this intercourse. This nation, at a great price, has just destroyed that miserable dogma that civil liberty is the prerogative of the white man alone. We have established the fact that it belongs to all mankind; and now by establishing intercourse with these nations in Asia we can give them the benefit of the blessings that we enjoy; and with this railroad running across the continent, and the ferry across the Pacific, we shall be shedding light on that nation that has been living in a twilight existence for centuries. This resolution meets the approval of the Naval Committee, of the Navy Department, and I know it will of the country.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1845) to amend an act entitled "An act to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 818) to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 166) for the relief of the owners of the land within the United States survey No. 3217, in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. No. 469) confirming the title to a tract of land in Burlington, Iowa.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 585) fixing the time for the next meeting of Congress; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER called for the reading of the bill at length; and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That after the adjournment of the present session the next meeting of Congress shall be on the third Monday in November next instead of the first Monday in December, 1868, as now provided by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill go on the Calendar; it does not need any reference; and I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YATES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 586) for the relief of Amos Sanford, of Prairie City, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATOR FROM FLORIDA.

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a privileged question. I present the credentials of Hon. A. S. Welch, one of the Senators recently elected by the Legislature of Florida a Senator in the Senate of the United States. I move that he be sworn in, and that the credentials be read. The Secretary read the credentials, as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA.
EXECUTIVE OFFICE, TALLAHASSEE.

This is to certify that, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, the senate and assembly of the State of Florida, chosen under and by virtue of the constitution framed in accordance with the reconstruction acts of Congress, did this day convene in joint assembly and proceeded to elect a Senator in the Congress of the United States to fill the term expiring on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1869.

And I do further certify that Adonijah Strong Welch received a majority of the votes of the said joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting.

And I do further certify that the said Adonijah Strong Welch has been nine years a citizen of the United States and two years a citizen of the State of Florida, and is a registered voter.

Therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me, and in pursuance of the requirements of the constitution of the State, I do hereby accredit the said Adonijah Strong Welch as Senator in the Congress of the United States, to fill the said term expiring on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1869.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Florida, this 17th day of June, A. D. 1868.

HARRISON REED,
Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senator-elect from Florida be permitted to take the oaths.

The motion was agreed to.

The oaths prescribed by the Constitution and laws were administered to Mr. WELCH, and he took his seat in the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating correspondence in relation to the destitute condition of the Osage Indians in Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BRIDGE OVER BLACK RIVER.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1027) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio, have instructed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate to consider that bill at this time. It is a mere local matter, and I am sure there will be no objection to it. It is a matter of necessity, as the bridge is now being constructed. It is necessary that Congress should give its assent, as it is part of a navigable stream.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that it shall be lawful for the county commissioners of the county of Lorain, in the State of Ohio, to build a bridge across the Black river, near the village of Black River, in that county, at the point where the county road leading east from the village crosses the stream; but there is to be placed in the bridge a draw of not less than one hundred and forty feet in width, with a center abutment not to exceed twenty-five feet wide and ten feet above the water-line, leaving a passage on each side of the abutment of not less than fifty-seven feet in width, and so constructed as not to impede the navigation of the river, and allow the easy passage of vessels through the bridge.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if that is wholly within the jurisdiction of Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes. It is a mere local matter. The county commissioners were building the bridge without being aware that it was necessary to have the assent of Congress. I suppose there is no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEST WISCONSIN RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWE. I move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 152, which has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 152) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to further extend the time fixed and limited by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in the State of Wisconsin," approved May 5, 1864, for the completion of the railroad from Tomah, in the county of Monroe, to St. Croix river or lake, between townships twenty-five and thirty-one, for a period of three years to the West Wisconsin Railroad Company, a corporation established by the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and which, by the laws of that State, is entitled to the land grant made in the second section of the act of May 5, 1864; but if the railway company shall not have completed the railroad from Tomah to Black River Falls on or before the expiration of one year from the passage of the resolution it is to be null and void.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I now move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 159.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, (S. No. 159) relating to the Western Pacific railroad, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, which was to strike out in lines thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three of the committee's amendment the words "and the United States shall pay to said company, their successors or assigns, such sum as may be reasonably due for such use and occupation thereof."

Mr. CONNESS. When this amendment was offered by my friend, the Senator from Vermont, it was discussed to some extent. The only real objection I saw to it was that in case the company built important structures there they ought to be compensated if the United States required them. I apprehend that if the Government at any time should do damage to private property they would be willing to pay, and I propose to withdraw any opposition I made to the amendment and let it be made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no further objection to the bill myself. If the Senators from California are in favor of this bill, I do not know that other Senators should object. But it seems to me there ought to be some provision by which other railroads coming into California at that point might connect. I understand that there is one railroad that will now, if this bill passes, have the entire monopoly of all opportunities of connecting with San Francisco.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. There is another question that arises, whether giving possession to this company we do not thereby oust the settlers and become liable to damages to those parties? There are claimants to this island who claim it in fee; and if we authorize this company to take possession of it, it seems to me we may perhaps be liable for some damages to the parties who may thereby be ousted. I am not sure that that is so; but I think it is a question that ought to be investigated.

Mr. CONNESS. It has been investigated thoroughly.

Mr. COLE. I wish to move an amendment or two to the amendment of the committee. I move to strike out in the eighteenth and nineteenth lines the words "as not being required in time of peace for military purposes."

Mr. CONNESS. I have consulted with my colleague touching this amendment, and have no objection to its being made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLE. I move further to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "the," in the sixteenth line, the words "the chief of engineers and."

Mr. CONNESS. I hope this amendment will not be made. It is already provided that the only privilege that the company shall be entitled to under this bill shall be such as shall be designated by the General of the Army and the Secretary of War, who will, of course, exercise their judgment after considering the opinions of the engineers on this whole subject. Such a provision as is now proposed has never been introduced in any bill of this kind. The consent of the Secretary of War is all that is generally imposed; but in this case the consent and approval of the General of the Army is added. I hope, therefore, this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. COLE. The amendment that I propose is offered in view of the fact that the chief of engineers has made a report in reference to this subject, which has been printed, and is upon the tables of Senators, and his report is to the effect that the island is needed for the defense of the city and harbor of San Francisco. There are some points in this report that are very strong. Whether the whole island is needed is questionable. If, however, it should be determined to be necessary for the defense of the harbor, or if that fact has already been determined, it certainly should foreclose any further or other disposition of this island. That a part of it at all events is necessary for the protection of the harbor and city no one acquainted with the locality can for a moment question. This amendment is offered in order to give the chief of engineers of the Army a voice in determining the question as to whether this island shall, all of it, or what portion of it, be retained for the defense of the harbor. That is the reason why I propose the amendment I have offered.

Mr. NYE. I think the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from California is a slight and indignity offered to the superior officers. Of course when this permission is obtained of the General of the Army and Secretary of War, they will consult their proper subaltern officers, among whom is the chief engineer of the Army, and they will use all the means in their power to ascertain whether it is proper to allow any of this island to be used, and if any, how much? Therefore I think it would be an indignity to superior officers to put upon a commission with them one entirely their inferior, and an officer, as the Senate will observe, always subject to their command and control, and one whose advice would be very likely to be taken. I trust the bill will not be lumbered up by such an amendment. It must be perfectly apparent to the most casual observer that the chief engineer would be consulted before all other officers. I have read the report of the engineer submitted here, a report which I venture to say upon a review he would not again attach his name to. I hope the honorable Senator will not embarrass the bill by urging this amendment, when a moment's reflection will convince him that of course the very man whom he proposes to make one of this board would be consulted.

I trust we shall reach a vote upon this bill. It is important that this great work should have a convenient terminus on the Pacific. This is not a question for California or the western end of this road alone; it is a question that concerns the entire commerce of the country; it is a question that concerns every individual who may travel upon the road; and if the Senate will give me their attention for one minute I will show why. Every train of cars that makes the round trip between San Francisco and Stockton will have to travel fifty-seven miles increased distance but for this facility, and each passenger will have to pay fare for going round by San José to come into the city of San Francisco. Give the authority provided by this bill, and that distance will be saved; therefore it interests New England just as much as it does California. It shortens the charge on every ton of freight that crosses from the Pacific ocean to the Atlantic by saving twenty-two and a half miles in distance, making in that item alone untold thousands a year to the consumers of this country; and within the coming decade there will be an aggregate saving in freights alone of untold millions to the consumers of this country.

In addition to all this, it gives a convenient landing where any ship that comes from China or any port will find water sufficient to unload from its hold on to the very cars that are to transport the products it bears across the continent.

I hope, therefore, that this bill will meet with no opposition. The Senate will bear in mind that no title is granted. It is a simple easement by consent of the War Department and the commanding general to use no more of this island, but as much of it as they will allow; and the company, in order to make it available, must incur a very large outlay, which will increase the value of the island, the title to which still remains in the hands of the Government. Let Senators remember that if the island is worth millions now, as it is said, its value will be quadrupled when the company have expended upon it from one to two million dollars to put it in a condition for them to use it. Instead of decreasing the value of the property this will enhance it fourfold. I hope the Senate will now let us vote on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. COLE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORTON. I hope, Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be adopted. What is the objection now to having the chief of engineers incorporated in this bill and to require his opinion as to what is demanded, as well as that of the General of the Army? It is certainly no disrespect to the General of the Army to require the opinion of the chief of engineers. It may be another difficulty, however, in the way of this railroad company seizing this island, and it seems that every obstacle which is placed in the way of the railroad company taking possession of this island is to be objected to. I have no interest in this matter one way or the other except as I am opposed to the policy of giving away the most valuable property belonging to the United States to railroad companies. I do not see the necessity of doing this when they have got to San Francisco. In the future development of that city, which I think can now hardly be estimated, this island may be of very great value to the defense of the city, may be of great value to the Government for many purposes beside that of mere wharves. The Government has use for land and for property there aside from the mere defense of the city in time of war. Do we not know that? And yet we do that which is equivalent to giving the title to it.

My friend from Nevada says that it is a mere easement; but, Mr. President, it is a mere easement under circumstances that amount to a title except in the case of war. We allow the company to go there and build their depots and machine-shops and the houses necessary for their employés. They propose to expend thousands, it may be millions, of dollars upon the island. When they have done this they will have political influence enough and power enough, in view of the money they have expended, to prevent the Government from taking possession of it except, perhaps, under the most necessary or trying circumstances. I regard it, and it must be regarded, although it is put in very smoothly here, as the granting away of this island. That is what it amounts to, and you cannot make anything else of it. It results in that.

Mr. President, I have had occasion to admire the adroitness with which this bill has been drawn. It gives to the company the use of this whole island except upon a certain negative condition; and what is that? Except so much as may within one year from this time "be designated by the General of the Army of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of War, as not being required in time of peace for military purposes." It is put in the negative, very adroitly put in; and whatever is necessary in time of peace for military purposes is reserved. That is very little; all the rest they are at liberty to build upon, to cut up, to improve in any way that meets their approbation; and we give them the right to do this on all except that which is necessary for military purposes in time of peace. When war is threatened, and you propose to take possession of the rest of the island, you find it covered with depots and railroad tracks and mechanic shops and other valuable and costly improvements, and they will say, "You must not disturb these things; this is the terminus of the great Pacific railroad; consequently the Government must look somewhere else to find a point of defense." We know what will be the effect of that just as well as if it were done. I am advised by those who know more about this than I do a good deal, that this island is now worth perhaps $1,000,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Five millions.

Mr. MORTON. It is worth a large sum, and we are to-day in substance giving it to a railroad company. We are giving it away in aid of a corporation that now has as much land as will make three or four such States as the State of Indiana. We are never done giving. There ought to be some limitation to this policy. There is no use of a great hue and cry about the Osage treaty and the Cherokee neutral lands, and all that, when the Government is continually, upon one pretense and another, glossed over in one way and another, giving away its most valuable property.

I think the amendment of the Senator from California ought to be adopted. Let us have the opinion of the chief of engineers as well as that of the General of the Army, making it his duty, as it is peculiarly within his province, and not that of the General of the Army, to examine and report as to how much of this island is necessary to the country. Why, Mr. President, there is covered up in this—and I know that in saying this I am giving offense to some of my friends—

Mr. CONNESS. I should think so.

Mr. MORTON. It does not make any difference in the matter of duty.

Mr. CONNESS. You will have a reply to it.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, as a general observation, whatever part of the island is necessary for the defense of the city of San Francisco in time of war is, or ought to be, necessary in time of peace; the Government should have possession of it, should put it in a position of defense; but here we only reserve so much as is necessary in time of peace, when there is no danger.

Mr. CONNESS. Why, Mr. President, I will have to correct the Senator—

Mr. MORTON. I will submit to correction.

Mr. CONNESS. The language which seems to him so objectionable has already been stricken out. The Senator does not appear to have known of it.

Mr. MORTON. I think I did know it. The bill reads:

As may, within one year from the time this act shall take effect, be designated by the General of the Army of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of War, as not being required in time of peace for military purposes; which privilege shall, however, be suspended whenever the United States shall be engaged in war or in imminent danger thereof, and notice of such determination shall be given to said company, its successors or assigns, by the Secretary of War.

The substantial thing is there yet; that is, that this company shall have all of this island except that which is necessary for military purposes in times of peace, with the privilege on the part of the Government of doing—what? Of resuming possession of the rest when it is necessary in time of war! Why, Mr. President, that gives the Government no privilege at all. The Government has that right now with regard to every inch of soil in this country. It can take possession of my homestead, or of yours, if it is necessary, in time of war or in time of imminent danger, just as well as it can take possession of the rest of this island. Did not we all know that? Therefore, reserving to the Government the right to resume possession of this in time of war or danger amounts to nothing. It is a little bit of a humbug put into the bill for the purpose of making it pass. Every Senator knows that the Government can take possession of the whole of the island if it needs it in time of war. It can take possession of any other property in time of war that it needs.

Mr. NYE. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. That being the case, the honorable Senator assuming that it may become necessary in time of war, I ask whether he thinks it best to stop all progress in peace in view of that emergency? I know very well that the Senator's home or mine can be taken, but would it be sound policy to have the Government occupy it now for fear such an emergency might arise?

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if it is necessary for the Government to occupy it now to prepare for defense in time of war, they have a right to take it. They have a right to take your homestead or mine in time of profound peace by paying its value.

Mr. NYE. So they have a right to take the city of San Francisco and claim that it is necessary to defend the harbor.

Mr. MORTON. And hence I say that the reservation in this bill is a mere humbug. It amounts to nothing. It would appear as if the Government was reserving something out of the grant, when it is reserving nothing at all. But there is even a limitation upon that right which would not exist if they were taking ordinary private property, because they have to give notice of it. The provision is that upon giving notice the Government may resume possession.

Mr. President, the Government can take your homestead or mine without giving us a day's notice if they deem it necessary. The substance of this bill, it being adroitly drawn, is to give to this railroad company the great body of this island; we give them the right to use it forever, except—

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator from Indiana will allow me to say one word. I drew the amendment reported by the committee with my own hand without consultation with any member of the committee or any human being. When he says it is adroitly drawn, thereby implying that it is dishonest, and has as an object something which is not expressed on the face of it, let me say, with all respect to that honorable Senator, he is grossly mistaken, and does gross injustice to myself personally, a thing which I apprehend he would not be knowingly willing to do. No, sir; all that is granted by the amendment of the committee under discussion is the simple privilege to this company to occupy and use so much of this island as is not necessary for military purposes in time of peace according to the judgment of the General of the Army and of the Secretary of War. If there is a certain portion of the island which is not necessary for military structures in time of peace, why may it not be used for other purposes in which the country has a great interest, as is the case here? Sir, there is nothing concealed.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I yielded for an explanation, not for a speech.

Mr. HOWARD. I shall take occasion to reply to the Senator's speech.

Mr. CONNESS. So shall I.

Mr. MORTON. I did not know that my friend from Michigan drew the bill. I made no imputation against him as an honorable Senator, or anybody else here. I did not think of such a thing.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I most respectfully ask the Senator to whom he did desire to ascribe bad motives in this connection?

Mr. MORTON. Now, Mr. President, let me say that this thing will not win. I did not intend to ascribe bad motives to any Senator on this floor; but I was speaking on the bill itself. Whether the individual who introduced this bill meant this or not I do not know, nor do I propose to inquire. I speak of the effect of the bill, and the effect of it is not to be evaded by making it a personal matter. I intended nothing personal about it, and certainly I shall not be diverted from my purpose by any allusions of that kind. I observe at the conclusion of the amendment of the committee these words:

And the United States shall pay to said company, their successors or assigns, such sum as may be reasonably due for such use and occupation thereof.

Has that clause been stricken out?

Mr. CONNESS. That has been stricken out.

Mr. MORTON. Well, Mr. President, I am only surprised that it has been. It expressly provided that we should give in substance this island to the railroad company, and then if we had occasion hereafter to use it ourselves we should pay them for it. This clause has been stricken out; but it leaves it on the footing simply of other private property. If the Government takes my land for military purposes it is required to pay me for it, and as this bill stands, if the Government should ever take possession of a part of this island that may be used for railroad purposes, the Government can be called upon to pay for it, and they will in the absence of a provision declaring that the Government shall have the use of it without pay. If it is intended that the Government shall have the right to resume possession of this island and use it without pay, it should be so provided in the bill. But it is left just in that position where it will be on the footing of other property that may be taken for the public use. There is a provision that "in case of such suspension of said privilege, it shall be the right of the United States to take possession of the part of said island subject to said privilege, together with all buildings and other fixtures erected thereon by said company, and to occupy and use the same for military purposes during the war."

Our right is to be confined forever hereafter "during the war." We may require this island for hospital purposes, for quarantine purposes; we may require it for arsenals, or may require it for various purposes as a nation for which the Government requires property in other parts of the United States, but we are not to have it from this company except during war.

Mr. NYE. If the Senator will not regard it as an interruption, I desire to suggest that before reaching this island there are three others in the bay, one, the Island of Alcatraz, on which the Government is constructing works of defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Chair must call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is Senate bill No. 488.

Mr. NYE. I hope we shall be allowed to get a vote on this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.] This bill has been up now for the fourth time, and I wish very much to get a vote upon it. It is essential that the company know where they are to have their western terminus. We are near the end of this session. They want to begin their operations, and I hope we shall be allowed to come to a vote upon this measure this morning. I would not ordinarily make this appeal, but I hope the Senator from Maine will see its importance, and will allow us to go on with the further consideration of this bill at this time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Of course, if I were to consult my own personal feelings and wishes, I should be very glad to acquiesce in the suggestion of the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS;] but I am admonished by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] whose bill was pushed aside yesterday by the appropriation bill, that he will insist, if I yield to this request, that his bill shall take its place. I should be very glad to yield as a personal consideration, but I think the Senator from California will see that, having insisted that the appropriation bill should go on yesterday against the Senator from Vermont, he ought not to appeal to me as a personal consideration to yield to him now. Still, if the Senate were ready to take the vote on this railroad bill, I would not object to the appropriation bill being laid aside informally; but if it is to lead to discussion, I am not in a condition to yield.

Mr. CONNESS. I reply to the honorable Senator that I have begged for a vote on this bill a great many times, and I have not made this discussion. The honorable Senator from Indiana has seen fit, in pursuance of his duty, I doubt not, this morning to make statements which, if he were better informed, I know he would not have made. I understand that Senator's character too well to ascribe any other disposition to him; but he mistakes the objects and purposes and intents of this measure. Nevertheless, if we can get a vote, I am perfectly willing to waive all debate on my part.

Mr. MORTON. I yielded the floor because the morning hour had ended, and not for speeches, for I had not quite concluded my remarks. There was one other thing I wanted to say.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In the present stage of the appropriation bill, and in view of the position I was obliged to assume yesterday against the bill presented by the Senator from Vermont of a strong public character, while I have no personal wish on the subject myself, I think I ought to present to the Senate the question in this case. If this bill is to be debated, I ought to submit to the Senate the question whether it will now postpone the appropriation bill and go on with this bill with the understanding that there is to be a long debate on it. I would not, however, object to the appropriation bill being laid aside informally simply to take a vote on this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to make a suggestion to the honorable Senator from Maine. The difference between this and the case of the Senator from Vermont is this: the Senator from Vermont called up a bill which had just been reported from a committee, which was new matter; it was the first time it had been considered; but this bill has been before the Senate a great many times; it has been discussed until I think everybody understands it. I believe it is the first time I have made such a request of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I really hope that he will allow this bill to be proceeded with informally for the present, and if we cannot soon take a vote on it we can then resume the consideration of the appropriation bill; but if we can vote on this, let us have it disposed of one way or the other. There is certainly no similarity between this and the case of the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont will have an opportunity again, whereas this bill has been taken up and laid down until everybody is tired of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed to lay aside the order of the day informally for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill which has been under consideration during the morning hour. Is there any objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to have it go on the statement of the Senator from New York that this bill under the circumstances is entitled to preference in the consideration of the Senate over the one to which I had the honor to ask their attention yesterday. That was a measure of great public consequence, either for good or for evil—there will be a difference of opinion as to that—and one which we all know perfectly well it will require a good while to pass. The Senate decided that they would not consider it, but would this. Now, I make no objection to the Senate going on and considering these railroad bills as long as they please; I only wish to call their attention to the fact that if they prefer to occupy the time, when a veto is impending over a public measure, in considering bills that we can pass on the last day of the session and have them approved, to the exclusion of such measures of a public character as I have named, they have a perfect right to do so, and it is not my province to complain. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to passing by the order of the day informally? No objection being made, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. COLE] to the amendment of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to the bill (S. No. 159) relating to the Western Pacific railroad.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to have a distinct understanding about this. The regular order is passed over informally, I understand, with the right to resume it provided this bill leads to discussion.

Mr. CONNESS. It certainly must lead to some discussion. I will not debate it if I can avoid doing so, I am sure.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the Senator from Maine will allow twenty minutes for this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; say twenty minutes.

Mr. MORTON. I had just one further remark to make in regard to this bill, and that is that the pretended reservations in the bill in favor of the United States amount to nothing. The Government has all the rights which it pretends to reserve in regard to any and all real estate, and if it had made an absolute and unconditional grant of this island to this railroad company it would still have every right in regard to it, in time of war or danger, for military purposes that it is pretended to reserve on the face of the bill. These reservations are simply deceptive in their character. They amount simply to that right which the Government has as to all real estate, whether conveyed absolutely or not.

Mr. President, it is within the province directly of the chief of engineers to determine this question that is here said to be reserved, the value and the extent of the island needed for military purposes. Why, therefore, the objection to leaving it to him? As was said by the Senator from Maine, there is a report now from an engineer made on this subject. I am told that it was adverse to this claim, and for one I should like to hear that report read.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, I am very much surprised at the position taken by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] for I know how devotedly he labors to promote the public welfare, and that all he says and does in this Chamber is controlled by his conviction of public duty; but if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] was right a few days since in the discussion of this question, if the completion of this great railroad is to revolutionize the trade of the world, if the people of the whole United States and the trading part of all civilized nations are interested in shortening this line, should this bill pass it secures a line for the western end of this road about one hundred miles shorter, as I have been led to believe, than the old line. If, therefore, this railroad company were averse to the construction of this branch road making their terminus at this island, it would be the duty of Congress, in my opinion, to modify their charter, as we have a right to do, and compel them to reduce the length of route, because it diminishes the tax on freight across this continent to that extent; this shortening of the line would enable the trade passing from ocean to ocean to reach deep water at a point that much nearer.

But, Mr. President, there is another reason why Congress ought to compel this company to put the terminus of this road at this island, or some other such place. At this point the terminus of the road will be at deep water, where ocean-going steamers and other ships can float up to the depots of the company and put off and take on freight directly from the cars. If we are left to the old line all the freight that crosses the continent on this road will be compelled to go through the corporation of San Francisco, and be subject to the expenses of handling and cartage incident to the transportation through a great commercial city. Everybody knows the great tax this will necessarily involve, not only to private freight but to the freight of the Government. Why, sir, in the shipment of ordnance and other munitions of war it seems to me it is our duty to secure such a line of transportation as will enable it to be done with the least handling and least cost.

This project, beyond doubt, will shorten the line very materially and enable the company to put the terminus of the road at deep water, where all this freight can be received and re-shipped without this handling and cartage.

We believe the Government has a title to the island. It therefore has a right to permit this company to build its road to the island. It will involve a considerable expense to the company; but the incidental advantage to the whole community, it seems to me, ought to induce Congress to compel them to build the road to the spot indicated and put their terminus there for the reasons I have stated, and I can see no reason whatever to the contrary. It diminishes the tax on trade—on the immense freight for the Government as well as for private individuals—across the continent. There is not a single fact stated by the Senator from Indiana, as it seems to me, that ought to weigh to the amount of a feather against these great public reasons.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like very much to hear the report read which is on the table.

Mr. COLE. I feel it obligatory on me to correct the statements of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. HARLAN.] They are certainly very erroneous in the particular of the distances. He says that this will shorten the distance to reach deep water at San Francisco one hundred miles. That is certainly a very egregious error. It will shorten the distance a mile or two and no more. The water in front of the main land opposite San Francisco is not deep out for a mile or two, and will be built out eventually to within a mile or two of this island.

This is a question as to whether this island is necessary for the defense of the city and harbor of San Francisco. That is the point in which I consider it. It does not make so much difference in point of distance as to whether the road terminates on some portion of the island or upon the main land. Nor does it make so much difference whether they reach this point on the bay or whether they go around to San Francisco. Even that could not make a difference of one hundred miles nor forty miles nor thirty miles. This is all a mistake about the distance to be saved.

Mr. HARLAN. I have only this to say: I judge in the first place by the maps that are on file in the Interior Department, which it became my official duty to examine carefully at one time, and I have only stated the judgment I arrived at from an examination of those maps, and that is verified by a statement of the Senator's colleague. He confirms my judgment in the matter, and says it will at least shorten the line one hundred miles. But the Senator's remark reminds me of another fact. This railroad will be compelled to connect with a private railroad if it goes on the old line and has no terminus of its own at the ocean; and the freight across this continent, therefore, would be saved the taxation of that private corporation; but if they are permitted to build this branch road at their own expense and make their terminus at deep water, thus evading that possible taxation by that private corporation, as well as the expense of shipping everything through the corporation of San Francisco.

Mr. COLE. There is certainly nothing in the way of building the road to the shore of the mainland and out into deep water opposite San Francisco, in case they choose to stop there, rather than to go to this island. However, I am quite willing that this company shall have their depot and place of transshipment upon the island of Yerba Buena; but the statements made in reference to the great advantage that it will be to the Pacific railroad cannot be sustained by the fact, as any one will see who will take occasion to look at the maps of the country. To be sure, if they were to follow the original law of the Pacific and Western and San José railroad and go by San José, it would increase the distance perhaps some thirty-seven miles; but that is much further than there is any necessity for any railroad going to reach the city of San Francisco. San José, which is the present terminus of the Pacific railroad, is far out of the way. Unquestionably a Pacific railroad will be built, and this railroad will build this line down to the city of Oakland, which is opposite San Francisco, and out into the bay, and perhaps upon this island; and I am quite willing that they shall provide it does not interfere with the harbor and city of San Francisco. But I do not see how it will save any distance more than about two miles at the utmost by stopping upon this island or by stopping short of the island. I only make this statement for the purpose of correcting the statement made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask what is the distance from San Francisco to the main land there?

Mr. COLE. It is some six or seven miles, if my recollection serves me, and to the end of a road now built much less.

Mr. STEWART. I mean to the island, actually built. Is it not over ten miles?

Mr. COLE. The distance from San Francisco to this island is less than two miles, and the distance from the island to the main land is about three or four miles. But wharves are already built away out into the bay toward the island, and railroad cars are now running out upon those wharves, and that they will eventually reach the island I have no question. This company will have the privilege of reaching the main land and the island in this way, and will not be interfered with at all. There is nothing in the laws of California to prevent them from pursuing such a course. They can pursue any course they choose in reference to the location of their road.

Mr. CONNESS. I am a little astonished at some of the statements of my colleague. It must be known to him that the Western Pacific Railroad Company located the route of its road via San José to San Francisco, and that the distance between San Francisco and San José is fifty miles; and that the line is shortened, and very largely shortened, by the proposed route. But my colleague raises a new issue, one not referred to by the honorable Senator from Iowa, namely: that there is but a short distance gained should the depot be made on the Oakland side of San Francisco bay, or at the island of Yerba Buena. He is technically right in that; but that has not been raised heretofore. He tells us in the same breath that there is a railroad now pointing to Yerba Buena Island, and that it will eventually reach there, and this company can undoubtedly go there. I suppose they can if they buy that railroad and wait until that railroad shall have reached the island; but it is my colleague's statement simply that they will reach the island. They have no right to reach it without the permission that this bill proposes to give; and I confess I am astonished that my colleague should offer opposition to the location at deep tide-water of the terminus of this great trans-continental road. I do not wish to extend the discussion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rose at the same time with the Senator from Maine to call for the reading of the report in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

"Report by George H. Elliot, G. H. Mendell, and B. S. Alexander, officers of engineers, to General A. A. Humphreys, chief of engineers, of an examination of Yerba Buena Island, showing its importance as a military defense to the harbor of San Francisco."

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is not the report I called for. I wish to hear the report of the committee that reported the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, I will say to the honorable Senator, and reported with an amendment as bills generally are, without any accompanying printed report.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No statement of the character of this island, its extent, location, and value?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; but the committee very fully examined that matter.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I must say, in view of the character of this bill, that the committee ask us to take a good deal on faith. Here is an island about which most of the Senators do not know very much—perhaps an island of one hundred acres, or five hundred acres. I have no information on that subject. Its exact location, how it is to be approached, what it is worth, what its peculiar features are, and in what regard it is important to individuals or to the country, these are questions upon which we have no statement from the committee asking us to give support to this bill. I submit that is asking a good deal of the confidence of the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator will give way and allow that report, which is in the hands of the Secretary—

Mr. CONNESS. It is a very lengthy one.

Mr. HOWE. Its reading was called for by the Senator from Maine, and I thought if that was read it would explain it.

Mr. MORTON. It may be very important, too.

Mr. CONNESS. I have not the slightest objection, if the Senate want it read. I have read it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The report to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers is from the military officers. It has to do only with the military features of the question. Now, sir, some time ago, during the session, there was laid upon our tables a remonstrance of some citizen of California, setting up a private right in his own favor. I do not know whether the claim made by that person to the island, or a portion of it, has been considered by the committee or not; but it was proper that it should have been considered before we came to vote upon the bill. I agree in very much that my colleague has said about it. Perhaps there is a statement of the question which will remove the objections to the bill. But this is said to be a very large grant that is being made to this road. Some gentlemen have said to me that it was very difficult to estimate the value of this island. They place it at millions of dollars. One gentleman went so far as to say that it was the most valuable piece of ground in the world in view of the future of this country.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator from Indiana give way while I call his attention, and the attention of the Senate, to what seems to me to be the point of the case? I think it will shorten the debate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am always more glad to hear the Senator from Wisconsin than myself.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator misunderstands me. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the bill. I rise for the purpose of calling his attention and that of the Senate to the point in the bill as it is presented to me now, and it is this: it is of no consequence what the intrinsic value of the island is, whether it is $100,000 or $100,000,000; it is not worth anything to the United States for the purposes of sale, simply because as I understand—I have not the evidence, because that paper is not read, and I have not read it—but I understand the military authorities say that we must have it for military purposes in case of war. Therefore, in time of peace it is not worth anything to us. We cannot sell it, and we do not want to occupy it. If we do, and the War Office says so, then the company take no privileges. That being the situation of the island, the bill says that the railway company may have the privilege of occupying so much of it as the War Office does not want. Occupy it how long? Until the War Office says, "War is at hand, or is imminent;" and when they say that, then this privilege of occupying by the railroad company is gone, and we take possession of it with all the fixtures upon it, and occupy it for our purposes. Now, if it is worth $100,000,000 it is of no more consequence to us, since we will not sell it. If we were in a condition to sell it, then I should want to sell it to this company, or whoever would give most for it; but if we cannot sell it, and do not want to use it, why not let this railroad company use it? That is the point, as it strikes me, in the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not construe this grant as the Senator from Wisconsin does. I do not think it is an occupancy at will. I think it is an agreement on the part of the Government that if the railroad company shall take possession of this island and improve it by the erection of such structures as are necessary in connection with the road that that occupancy shall be perpetually subject to just one thing: that if war shall come during the war the Government may resume the occupancy; but in resuming the occupancy the Government becomes the tenant of the railroad company, and is to pay the railroad company for the use of its improvements.

Mr. STEWART. That is stricken out.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well. Then without paying rent the Government has the right to resume the possession pending the war. There is no provision on the subject of rent, I believe. That would raise a question simply whether the Government would be bound under the circumstances to pay rent or not without an express contract on the subject. But the provision is, that the Government may resume the possession during the war, to be returned of course to the company at the close of the war; so that as between the Government and the company it is a grant perpetual, amounting to a grant in fee. As neither is supposed to have a life, both being perpetual, that is the effect of it.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the attention of the Senator to the language of the bill, and see if it is not simply this: if it grants anything more than the privilege to the company to occupy this island when we do not want to occupy it?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It means much more than that. It means just this, that the Government says to this company, "You may go and take possession of that island, and you may improve it, and you may occupy it subject to the will of the Government in case of war." It is not a tenancy at will. It is an agreement to a continued occupancy.

Mr. CONNESS. If my friend will permit me, the Senator from Maine on my right [Mr. FESSENDEN] has got some amendments touching this very point which he will offer, and which will be entirely acceptable.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am very much gratified that the Senator says that it will all be acceptable and satisfactory then. I do not know, but if it is so with him it ought to be with all other wise men, but some of us are so stupid perhaps as not to be able to see it. I want to know something about it before a grant of this sort is made; and I think the demand made by Senators who wish to know something about it is but reasonable. I think the committee ought to have accompanied this bill with an elaborate report, giving us all the facts. If this is to result in a shorter line between San Francisco and the Missouri river we should have been informed how it was proposed to be done, so that we should know something about it. If it is to be a mere gratuity because Congress can make it, let us know that. I think the Senate has not been called upon to vote for so important a bill as this upon so little information since I came into the body. We are literally without information except so far as it is furnished from the War Department, and that report is adverse to this occupancy, as I understand. That report takes the ground that the entire island—I have not read it, and perhaps I ought not to refer to it—may become important for military purposes for the ordinary defense of the coast.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will look into the bill he will discover that if the Secretary of War and the General of the Army are of the opinion that the whole of the island is requisite for military purposes then this bill will have no effect at all; then it will all be retained still for military purposes. The company ask only so much of the island as those officers shall determine is not necessary for warlike purposes in time of peace.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. COLE] to the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the amendment to the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in line sixteen, after the word "by," to insert "the chief of engineers and;" so as it will read, "be designated by the chief of engineers and the General of the Army of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of War."

Mr. CONNESS. My only objection to that is that the chief of engineers is a subordinate to the General of the Army and to the Secretary of War, and therefore I do not want that amendment inserted.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that amendment will not prevail. I do not wish to spend time about it, but it is perfectly obvious that the course that will be pursued in regard to this will be that the Secretary of War and the General of the Army will direct an engineer to make out a report in regard to this island, and they will base their judgment upon the information which they will thus derive from a subordinate officer. It is not expected that they will go in person and inspect the island and survey it personally. I do not think it worth while to leave such a power as this to a subordinate officer. No part of the island would be subjected to this privilege under this bill if the engineer who has already decided against it should be put upon the board, because his vote would balance that of the General of the Army, and no action could be taken upon it at all. It would utterly defeat it.

Mr. COLE. As a general proposition it is true the chief of engineers is subordinate to the General of the Army and the Secretary of War; but he is not subordinate to those officers in his particular sphere. If we give him a voice in this matter equal with them he will have as much voice in it as they will have, and as he is the proper officer to determine this question I insist upon the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. One word more. Is it possible that the honorable Senator from California can desire the engineer to constitute one of the judges of this case when he has already predetermined the question against the company and come to the conclusion that no part of the island can be spared for this purpose? He is not a fit person to judge in such a case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The suggestion of the Senator from Michigan induces me to ask him whether the engineer is of the opinion that this entire island is important for the military defenses in that locality?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that if he will have the report read—

Mr. CONNESS. It is very long.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will not call for it; but I will state that when this matter was suggested a commission was appointed of military men of the engineer department to make a survey and report to the engineer office. They made, as they say, a careful survey, which is set out, and they report their own judgment that it is not best to have anything done with it; that it is all needed for military purposes, and that this grant will interfere with those purposes. That is their opinion; whether right or wrong I am not engineer enough to say.

But one thing that they say struck me with a good deal of force, and I should like to have some gentleman explain it. They say that the navigation there on the other side of this island, I suppose, as near as I can get at it, is now difficult on account of the force of the current; that vessels, especially sailing vessels, meet with great difficulty at times on account of the force of the current in going up to the city, I suppose, and that the effect of building this causeway and bridge will be seriously to increase the force of that current and thus seriously impede navigation. They consider that of so much importance that they make it as one of their principal objections. In case this grant is made, I suppose it will be necessary to build solid for a very considerable distance where the water flows, and probably an open bridge for some distance—I do not know how far; but, at any rate, the engineers say that the effect of that construction there will be seriously to affect navigation on account of the inevitable effect which will be produced by increasing the force of the current. I know nothing about it except what I see by that report; and I meant to inquire, before we got through, of some gentlemen learned in these matters how they will answer that argument, because it struck me as an argument of some consequence, for there is a great deal of navigation there.

Mr. CONNESS. It does not affect this amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know it does not affect this amendment, but it affects the main question.

Mr. MORTON. It is somewhat remarkable that the only information which the Senate has on this subject is a report of engineers of the War Department, who have reported against the measure, and this bill is to be forced through here right in the face of that report. It is objected that the report is too long to be read; but the Senate is called upon to vote away this island in the face of an uncontradicted report made by a board of engineers. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senate is to vote away no part of the island.

Mr. MORTON. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. HOWARD. Neither title nor privilege. It will depend entirely upon the judgment of the General of the Army and the Secretary of War whether the company shall have a particle of this island.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes six, noes not counted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "be," at the end of the nineteenth line, the words "terminable at the pleasure of Congress, or may be;" so that it will read:

Which privilege shall, however, be terminable at the pleasure of Congress, or may be suspended whenever the United States shall be engaged in war, &c.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move further to amend the bill by inserting after the word "as," at the end of line forty-one, the words "to authorize or grant any subsidy or land for any road built under this act, or;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize or grant any subsidy or land for any road built under this act, or to increase the subsidies in bonds beyond that accruing under existing lines of location and laws heretofore passed providing for the construction of the Pacific railroad.

Mr. CONNESS. When this amendment was shown to me before it did not occur to me that it excluded a subsidy of land. The bill as it stands was intended to exclude a subsidy of bonds. In the first place, there is very little land on the route of this road, and it is hardly worth while to exclude the amount of land to which they are entitled. It will be remembered that the company at their own expense, without any subsidy in bonds, will build an extent of at least thirty-five miles of road over a very high range of mountains. I think, with the disposition to give lands for the construction of roads which are great public improvements, and with the fact which my colleague very well knows, and I presume will affirm, that there are very few public lands on the route of the road proposed, it is not well to exclude the small quantity of lands that may be granted there. Therefore, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Maine so as to strike out the words "or lands." They are to build over a high mountain range, the most difficult work that can be imagined, without a dollar of bonds of any kind whatever. I hope the Senator from Maine will accept that modification. It is but reasonable and just that they should have these lands when they propose to shorten a great public highway.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. CONNESS. Then, sir, if it be in order, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "or lands."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Maine whether the previous amendment offered by him would not read better if he were to say "and may be suspended" instead of "or may be suspended;" so that it may be terminable at the pleasure of Congress, and may be suspended whenever the United States shall be engaged in war, &c.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I accept that modification, to substitute "and" for "or." I do not think it will make any difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think there ought to be an amendment to this bill before it is passed providing that any causeway or bridge that is erected from the mainland to this island shall be erected under the supervision of the engineer department, so that they may see that it is built in such a way as not to seriously impede navigation.

Mr. NYE. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that there are laws regulating that subject now. Neither this company nor any other company would have a right to build a structure in the harbor of San Francisco that would obstruct in any way the navigation of the harbor. It would not be allowed by existing laws.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It does not obstruct the navigation in that sense.

Mr. NYE. The apprehension, as I understand it, the Senator from Maine has is that they would change the channel by filling up so as to make obstructions at some other point.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Increase the force of the current.

Mr. NYE. The company will undoubtedly take care of that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should rather not leave it to them myself.

Mr. NYE. Do you mean that it shall be constructed under the supervision of a Government engineer?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir; one of our own engineers.

Mr. NYE. A Government engineer might make a structure that would cost $20,000,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I confine myself merely to that point, that it shall be so constructed as not to impede or obstruct navigation. I can draw the amendment in a very few moments.

Mr. COLE. In pursuance of the suggestion of the Senator from Maine I think an amendment of this sort might with propriety be adopted: to insert after line thirty-five the words "but so as not to impede the water-way."

Mr. NYE. Only skiffs or flat-boats run through this channel. The Senator from California knows that no ships come through of any size.

Mr. COLE. I am not speaking of the navigation, but the current, the tide.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The point is that it affects the current on the other side by making an obstruction here.

Mr. NYE. That is hypothetical entirely.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is so said by the engineers.

Mr. NYE. I understand that is assumed, but from my information I do not think there is anything in it.

Mr. NYE. Scientific men, engineers, would be likely to know.

Mr. COLE. I offer this amendment: to insert after line thirty-five the words "but so as not to impede the water-way to the injury of the harbor of San Francisco."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think that that will reach the point that I have been speaking of.

Mr. COLE. If that is not sufficient I am willing to agree to any modification that will make it so. I do not know what suggestion the Senator from Maine would make. The tides set up back of the island and flow daily to and fro. There is an ebb and flow of the tide on this side of the island where this causeway will be built across. ["Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think that amendment will not answer the purpose. Gentlemen are very anxious for the question. They continue calling "question, question" when we are trying to get this bill into a shape in which it will be satisfactory to the rest of us. If they will let the "question" alone for a few minutes I think we may come to some conclusion, but if they keep calling "question" I will give it up. It is of no more interest to me than anybody else, but I should like to have it safe, for I really think that the city of San Francisco is destined to be one of the greatest cities on the globe at some future time, and I think it of very great importance that we should not pass any bill that may seriously affect the navigation of its bay.

Mr. CONNESS. I agree entirely in what has been said by the honorable Senator. I think he ought to concede that we have a very deep interest in preserving that harbor. Why, sir, if an obstruction should be made there injurious to the harbor, it would be removed at once; they would not be permitted to go on.

Mr. COLE. In the report of the board of engineers, which has been submitted in connection with this bill, a careful and scientific calculation has been made to determine the effect which it would have upon the harbor of San Francisco proper if the channel between the island and the eastern shore of the bay were to be closed up by a solid causeway. This calculation shows that the currents in front of the city where vessels lie at anchor would be very much increased. Those of us who reside there know that those currents are now so great as to often make it exceedingly difficult to reach the wharves by the vessels navigating the upper river as well as those which come in from the ocean; so that if this tide were to be increased materially by turning the current that passes now east of the island into the narrow and deeper channel in front of the city it might work, and would unquestionably work, very great damage to the city of San Francisco.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. MORTON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. Before the vote is taken, I understand the Senator from Maine is preparing a substitute, and I wish to see which amendment I shall vote for. I shall vote for the stronger of the two.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask my friend from California whether this proviso, added to the end of the bill, will not answer better?

Provided, That no work shall be constructed by the said company between the mainland and said island which will, in the judgment of the War Department, injuriously affect the navigation in the harbor of San Francisco.

Mr. COLE. That will not cover the case, for this reason: that side of the island is scarcely navigated at all. It is not the navigation, but the water currents that are to be protected, the tide that ebbs and flows east of the island into the bay twice a day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does not anything which affects the currents, which increases the force of the currents, injuriously affect navigation?

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course it does.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I thought this was general enough:

Provided, That no work shall be constructed by the said company between the mainland and said island which will, in the judgment of the War Department, injuriously affect navigation in the harbor of San Francisco.

Several SENATORS. That covers it.

Mr. COLE. I am not sure that that is sufficient. With that construction, however, I shall not object to it; but if it relates to the navigation east of the island—

Mr. FESSENDEN. It does not say "the navigation between the island and the mainland," but "in the harbor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California withdraw his amendment?

Mr. COLE. Yes, sir; I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This question, then, is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to make one inquiry. I wish to inquire what is the purpose of so much of this bill as follows line thirty-three? It does not seem to be a part of the amendment reported by the committee. It seems to be a part of the bill. It provides for the right to construct another road from this island to the town of Stockton. I should like the chairman of the committee to inform us what is the purpose of that part of the bill?

Mr. HOWARD. I was not able to hear what the honorable Senator said.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of so much of the bill as follows line thirty-three? It does not seem to be a part of the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I can answer the honorable Senator. It authorizes the Western Pacific Railroad Company, this corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, to locate a road and to take from the public land such earth, stone, timber, &c., as is usually allowed in the construction of a road, and such other grants and privileges as are given for the construction of the Pacific railroad with the exception of the subsidy in bonds, which is specially provided against.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What lands of the United States, then, does this road pass through?

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator is aware of the topography of that country he will know that it passes from this island through what is called the Contra Costa range of mountains, a very high mountain range, to Stockton, or near there, which is on the plain in the valley, a distance of thirty-five or forty miles—a route of very difficult construction, indeed, and such as the Pacific railroad on its main line receives $48,000 per mile in bonds for constructing.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My objection to the language used in this part of the bill is that it seems to authorize the construction of a railroad in a State; to give to a corporation of a State a power to locate and make and build a road in a particular direction and upon a particular route.

Mr. CONNESS. My friend will permit me to say that it is precisely the language of the original Pacific railroad bill, and the same right precisely that is given in that bill to construct the Central Pacific railroad.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The suggestion of the Senator may be an answer, and it may not be. I have not time to make a comparison of the language; but I understood the policy of the Pacific railroad grant to be to allow the corporations of the States where that road ran through a State to construct it. Congress did not undertake to organize companies or to empower companies in a State, but to give companies under the authority of the State subsidies to enable them to carry out the work which the State authorized. This provision undertakes to clothe the company with authority to build a road in the State of California. Can Congress do that work? Can Congress authorize a railroad company of the State of California to build a railroad from the city of San Francisco to the city of Stockton, whether that railroad is to go over high mountains or along deep valleys?

Mr. CONNESS. Why, Mr. President, I will answer my friend again. The Congress of the United States authorized the Folsom and Placerville Railroad Company to do just that thing. It authorized the Copperopolis and Stockton Railroad Company to do just that thing. It was passed upon by both Houses of Congress in those cases, and no question was made in regard to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I know that Congress has in many cases granted lands to States for the benefit of railroad companies organized under the authority of the States; but I did not know that Congress had undertaken by any bill already passed to authorize the construction of railroads within the limits of States, and I do not think Congress possesses that power.

Mr. HOWARD. If the honorable Senator will look at the first Pacific railroad charter he will discover that Congress has done the same thing in the State of Kansas, and companies are now operating under that clause.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That was referred to the State. The corporation was organized by the State. Congress merely said to the company, "We will give you subsidies, if, under the authority of the State, you construct the road." That was the legal effect of it.

Mr. POMEROY. The company was authorized to build according to its charters.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But it was chartered by the State, so that the company referred to by the Senator from Michigan got its authority from the State.

Mr. NYE. This company is chartered by California.

Mr. POMEROY. The State of Kansas conferred the right to construct a railroad along a particular route.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the Senator from Kansas says, the State of Kansas conferred the authority to construct a railroad along a particular route, and then Congress said to that company, "If you will construct that road, we will aid you in that enterprise by the subsidies that we propose." But here is a naked proposition that Congress will clothe the company of a State with authority to build a road not authorized by the laws of the State, for anything that appears here. It is an entering wedge to a new system. It is a power under which we may construct a road from Washington city to New York, under which we may construct a railroad from this city to the city of St. Louis, and so on. It involves propositions of a gigantic nature.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose they have a right by their charter to go there.

Mr. CONKLING. It is authorized.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If it is authorized, Congress need not use language which attempts to authorize it. That Congress may authorize them to go over the public lands, to go over special reservations, is not questioned by me. That does not seem to be the purpose of this provision. The purpose of this provision seems to be to clothe the company with authority to construct a railway.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to know from those who are familiar with this bill whether it is understood that the Government of the United States, when they take possession on the termination or suspension of this privilege, have a right to take possession of any works and structures on the island, and if they are to do it without making compensation therefor?

Mr. HOWARD. I refer the honorable Senator, in answer to his question, to the bill itself, in which it is declared that the United States shall be authorized—

To take possession of the part of said island subject to said privilege, together with all buildings and other fixtures erected thereon by said company, and to occupy and use the same for military purposes during the war.

That answers part of the honorable Senator's question. The remaining part of his question, whether it is expected by the advocates of the bill that the Government shall pay the company anything for that use or occupation—

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Whether the Government are to pay for the works and structures?

Mr. HOWARD. Not at all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me that ought to be expressed.

Mr. HOWARD. It was expressed in the bill itself as I reported it to the Senate, but the Senate have seen fit to strike out that part of it. For instance, the words "and the United States shall pay to said company, their successors or assigns, such sum as may be reasonably due for such use and occupation thereof," have been stricken out.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It was expressed that the United States should pay?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And that has been stricken out?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If it has been stricken out on the ground that it is understood the United States is not to pay, I think that ought to be expressed. If this company are to put up structures there, and the Government of the United States takes possession of the island, it ought to be expressed that the Government is not to pay for those structures.

Mr. COLE. There is no question, I believe, before the Senate at present. I therefore move to amend the bill by inserting as an additional proviso the following:

And provided further, That this act shall not impair the rights or claims of persons in possession of the island of Yerba Buena at the time of the military occupation thereof, or who have been ousted therefrom by military force, nor the assignees or grantees of such persons: but such rights and claims shall be ascertained and liquidated according to the laws of California.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. COLE. The facts, so far as this amendment is concerned, are, that there were persons in possession of this island, living there with their farm-houses and improvements, who had been there for many years. I think their occupation began before the acquisition of the country by the United States. They were in quiet and peaceful possession of their homes upon the island until about a year ago, or perhaps until the year 1866, at which time, after the war had ended, the military authorities took possession of the island and ousted these parties. This was done by the strong arm of military force, and without any adjudication of their rights. These persons were in possession of this property by as much right as other citizens in San Francisco held the property that they occupied; for it will be remembered that this island is within the boundaries of the city of San Francisco. Other persons upon the main land in the city of San Francisco regard themselves as justly entitled to the property they were in possession of, and which has been granted to them by the local authorities and by Congress. This possession of the island, dating back prior to the occupation of the country by the United States, gives these parties a right superior to that which was acquired by the United States by the proclamation of the President in 1850 or 1851, which declared this to be a military reservation.

To be brief, these persons are entitled to this little meed of protection which is sought for them at this time. They only ask such protection as is awarded them by the laws of California. There the laws provide that if a railroad company need any private property, even a possessory claim, for the purposes of building their railroad or improvements, they can go to one of the district courts and ask that a commission be appointed for the purpose of assessing the value of this occupation, this possessory right. These persons only ask this privilege. We know that it is not asking much for them, because a powerful railroad company always have more influence with courts and commissioners than humble individuals. But these parties are entitled to this protection.

I know it has been stated that this island is a rocky island. There are rocks upon it; but there is also good land upon it. These persons were there before the military occupation, with their dwellings and their out-houses, and they had their orchards, their cattle, and other stock. They were living there as quietly and peaceably as any people were living in any other portion of the State. I do not charge that there was any motive for the use of military force to get these persons out of possession, springing from the railroad company, because I do not know that that is the case, and I do not believe that that is the case. I believe that the military thought they had a right to this property, and took it in the manner they did for military purposes. But these people have been ousted; they have been driven from their homes; they have been forced to abandon their works there, their wharves, their quarries, and their fields; and if this company is to come in and take possession of this island, or any portion of it, it should pay these parties the little value that will be attached by a commission, under the laws of California, to their possession and improvements. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will acquiesce in this amendment. It is only an act of justice to parties who have been overridden by the military authorities, and whose rights have not been properly respected.

Mr. CONNESS. I should be very sorry to see such an amendment adopted as the one my colleague has proposed. In the first place, those parties never had any right to go there at any time. They were contestants against the title of the United States to the island. Like the other contestants against the title to the point known as Black Point—

Mr. COLE. I ask my colleague if there was ever any question as to their right, or any contest between them and any department of the Government prior to the year 1866, or when the military department took possession?

Mr. CONNESS. There was nothing to hinder any person from going upon this island any more than there was from going upon Angel island, or going upon Black Point reservation, or going upon the Presidio reservation, all of which belonged to the Government, at or near San Francisco; but parties acquired no right by going there. It was a military reservation; and my colleague knows very well what I am now going to say, that there was a legal case made up against the Government of the United States entitled "Grisar vs. McDowell," McDowell being the commander of the military department when he took possession, as he had a right to do, and was instructed to do by the Government, and removed those occupants, so called, or claimants.

Mr. COLE. That was not at this island at all. It was another piece of property in a different place and under somewhat different circumstances.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope my colleague will allow me to make a connected statement.

Mr. COLE. Excuse me for interrupting you.

Mr. CONNESS. Of course it was in regard to another piece of land; but it stood upon precisely the same principles. The case of Grisar vs. McDowell, in which my colleague, I believe, was a counsel against the Government, was tried and determined by the Supreme Court here this year, and determined in favor of the United States. The legal question involved was that the squatting parties denied the legality of the reservation made; but that has been settled by the highest court in our country. The possession claimed of this island was precisely upon the same terms and the same ground, except that the parties claiming this island went upon it and undertook to occupy it when it was a reservation, and the parties who claimed in the case of Black Point, or the case of Grisar vs. McDowell, were parties who were assignees of those who had occupied. That is the only difference. Otherwise, the cases are precisely the same.

Mr. President, the chairman of our committee [Mr. HOWARD] examined this claim of title fully, and those parties have no title. They came here and alleged a title, and then offered it for sale. Some speculative persons, perhaps, undertook to make a bargain with them. But after it has been alleged and stated here, and nobody questions it, that the Government has not only a title to this island, but requires it for military purposes, are you going now to adopt a provision of law which shall recognize a title unexamined, or in fact condemned? Why, sir, it is not to be thought of for a single moment.

Mr. HOWARD. In regard to the amendment of the honorable Senator from California [Mr. COLE] I have a word to say. This island was reserved for military purposes on the 12th of October, 1866, by proclamation of the President of the United States, after a careful examination of the claims which had been put forth to the island on the part of private individuals. The matter seems to have been referred to the district attorney of the northern district of California to investigate those titles. The result was he came to the conclusion that there was no ground in law whatever for the claims which have been referred to. Thereupon the President of the United States issued this proclamation, or this order:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON CITY, October 12, 1866.

Whereas the island of Yerba Buena, in the bay of San Francisco, is needed for defensive purposes, and has been surveyed by the Government, and batteries projected and planned for its occupation, the within application is approved and referred to the Secretary of the Interior, with directions to except and reserve the island of Yerba Buena, in the bay of San Francisco, from relinquishment and grant to the city of San Francisco, California, authorized by the act of Congress, approved July 1, 1864, and to designate the said island as so excepted and reserved; and it is ordered that the said island be retained by the United States for military uses.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

Mr. MORTON. It occurs to me, if that is worth anything at all, it is a good answer to this bill, the whole of it.

Mr. COLE. The Senator from Michigan states that this island was reserved in 1866.

Mr. CONNESS. Eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

Mr. COLE. Eighteen hundred and sixty-six by Andrew Johnson. These persons have been in possession there, as I reiterate, for many years, and their possession antedates any attempt to make it a military reservation. The reservation of it for military uses was as much a violation of the rights of these persons as if the same power had been exercised in reference to a piece of land in the heart of the city of San Francisco, if you please, on Montgomery or Clay streets; but if this reservation had been made within the city of San Francisco, would it be alleged here by my colleague or the Senator from Michigan that the persons whose lands and valuable improvements were thus taken in that city were not entitled to any compensation for their improvements and lands which they had occupied for fifteen or twenty years, and upon which they had placed valuable improvements? Is that the position taken? If it is it is one from which I most earnestly dissent.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will allow me, he is speaking of improvements made by those settlers. I beg him to state, if he is able to do so, what those improvements are.

Mr. COLE. I have already stated what those improvements were. They consist of farm houses, out-houses, orchards, wharves, quarries, and other things too numerous to mention—valuable improvements which I have myself seen, and which anybody can see any day from the ferry-boat that passes from San Francisco to Oakland. These persons are, in my judgment, clearly entitled to some consideration.

I am aware of the decision which has been made in the Supreme Court touching a case somewhat similar. It was an action brought by a person by the name of Grisar against General McDowell for ousting him from his residence on a military reservation in San Francisco. The question as to whether Grisar was entitled to compensation for disturbance in his possession is one not now to be discussed. But this consideration must not, I think, go for naught with Senators: that these persons had been upon that island from some time prior to the acquisition of the country by the United States down to the year 1866, with the supposition that they were entitled to their possessions, and with as much ground for that belief as other citizens in San Francisco had.

I know there is a disposition on the part of some Senators and members of Congress to treat "squatters," as they are termed, or settlers, with great disrespect, and as if they were not entitled to any regard from the Government. That is not my opinion. The public lands are the lands of the people of the United States, and by law persons are entitled to go and settle upon them, and notwithstanding one adverse decision or opinion of an Attorney General, I believe they are entitled to protection. Those persons, if any, upon the public lands are entitled to some protection. If their lands are to be taken for a public use, or a quasi public use, their rights ought to be regarded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. COLE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (who had voted in the affirmative.) I beg to say that I did not entirely comprehend the latter clause of the amendment. I voted yea; but I will change my vote and vote nay. I am willing to vote for the amendment without the last clause. I think the last clauses imposes obligations upon the Government that we ought not to assume.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cole, Edmunds, Fowler, Hendricks, McCrory, Morton, Ross, Vickers, Wade, and Willey—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conkling, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Howard, Johnson, McDonald, Morgan, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Welch, Williams, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Cattell, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wilson—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose it is hardly worth while to offer any amendments to this bill; but I will move in the thirty-fourth line to insert after the word "authorized" the words "if its charter so authorizes;" so as to read:

The said Western Pacific Railroad Company are also hereby authorized, if its charter so authorizes, to locate and construct a road, &c.

Mr. STEWART. I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. CONNESS. There is not the slightest objection to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Gentlemen accept this. They think this one amendment may be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand the effect of this license is that the Government retain the title to the island; that they grant a privilege which they may suspend or determine at pleasure, and that they may take possession of this part of the island at pleasure during war, and then transfer it back again to the use of the company. I think there ought to be a provision in the bill that if they suspend or determine this privilege, and the structures or erections remain, the Government are not to pay for them; or if the Government take possession of the island for a time, returning it to the company, the Government shall not pay for the use and occupation during that period; and to that end I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

And provided further, That on the determination or suspension of the privilege hereby granted, and on the United States taking possession of that part of the island to which such privilege applies, the Government of the United States shall not be required to make compensation for any structures or erections remaining thereon, or for the use or occupation of said island or structures.

Mr. CONNESS. I have simply to say that I do not think such an amendment as this was ever before offered in such a case. We have passed a score of acts giving the right given in this bill to occupy parts of military reservations, but no such conditions were ever imposed as have already been imposed by this bill, and by the amendments offered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask the Senator from California, so that we may understand it, whether his idea is that the Government is to pay for structures or erections that may remain, or are to pay for such temporary use and occupation of the island as they may make? If the idea is not that they are to pay, there is no objection to providing that they shall not pay; but if they are to pay I certainly will not vote for the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I have nothing to say.

Mr. MORTON. I have something to say, as my friend stops short. I submit now that the objection made by the Senator from California is a fair illustration of the iniquity of this bill. It is simply to give the company the use of this island, it is said, we to resume it when we need it; we to hold the title; but in the meantime they have costly structures there, as they will have, depots, machine-shops, railroad tracks, houses for employes to live in. War comes on, and we want it; but, says the Senator, we must now pay for those things that we find there, and which are in the way.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator says nothing of that kind, and the honorable Senator from Indiana is not authorized to put that language in my mouth.

Mr. MORTON. Well, Mr. President, the opposition to this amendment says that distinctly, if it means anything. If they do not mean that, why oppose the amendment?

Mr. CONNESS. Why, Mr. President, have I no right to oppose an amendment unless such language as the Senator chooses shall be mine? That is it, is it?

Mr. MORTON. I speak of the effect of opposing this amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Ah!

Mr. MORTON. I say it means that, or it means nothing. If Senators do not mean that the Government shall pay for the machine shops, and for the depots, and for the structures that may be there in case of war and we have to take possession of the island, let this amendment be adopted. Sir, in this way this little donation, this insignificant little affair may cost us several million dollars in case it becomes necessary for us to resume the possession of the island. Is not that manifest to everybody? I do not expect that this amendment will prevail; but the thing is so plain that it cannot be avoided, nor can it be explained away. It is intended to be left in that position; this amendment is to be voted down; so that if we have to take possession of it, as this board of engineers say we ought to keep it in the first place, then we have got to pay this railroad company for their improvements. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CONNESS. No, Mr. President, I did not say, nor do I care whether it is voted up or voted down; but I protest and give notice to my friend from Indiana now, in all conscience and good nature, that he is not authorized to attribute to me language that I have not used, nor motives that do not exist in me; nor do I think it is right for him to denounce as iniquitous a measure that has been sustained and supported by a large majority of this body. I think that is going a little too far. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon for saying that much; but it so seems to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MORTON and Mr. ANTHONY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HARLAN. I wish to say one word in relation to this amendment. I supposed when the Pacific railroad bill was enacted into a law in 1862, and when the Government undertook to grant lands and subsidies, supposed to be worth one or two hundred million dollars, that the nation had some interest in the construction of this work; but even at that time learned and able Senators on this floor placed barriers and embarrassments around the bill which prevented any one of the four companies charged with the construction of this work from moving an inch for two years. I need not name now what they were. Every Senator who is conversant with that legislation probably will remember it as vividly as I do. And now, when it is proposed to give this railroad and the United States a terminus where produce and freight can be shipped and unshipped without the embarrassment of unnecessary taxation and unnecessary expense of handling, able and honorable Senators here are disposed to embarrass it by clogging the bill with unusual provisions. Does not every Senator know that if private property is taken for the public use the Constitution provides that the owners shall be compensated therefor; and why should we place in a bill here a provision that these private individuals shall not be paid for the private property they place on the public lands, and in that way render it impracticable for the company to put the terminus of the road where the nation and the trading world demand that it should be put?

All that is granted here is merely the right to use the land on which to build their railroad track and railroad depots; and Senators want to place barriers in the way of proceeding to construct that work that will frighten men from building the work where it is needed by the nation and by the world. It does seem to me that if a majority of the Senate are not enemies to the construction of this work where it ought to be constructed, they ought not to place these unnecessary barriers in the way. We grant $480,000 a mile in bonds; that is, the use of them, the loan of them, to enable this company to build its road over the public land; we grant them the land, the right of way, and then grant them the right to condemn private property and pay for it at its appraised value.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator would allow me to make a suggestion? Beyond what he says of the inequity that strikes me as remarkable about this amendment is this: these erections may be made very expensive, as we know they are to be, and the time may come at once when they are taken possession of by the Government before any use whatever has accrued to the grantees. Would it not be very monstrous in that case to provide that, however early the taking possession might be, it should be without any sort of compensation, and without an application of the constitutional provision to which the Senator refers?

Mr. DAVIS. The remarks of the honorable Senator from Iowa induce me to believe that the interpretation given by the Senator from Indiana who last addressed the Senate on the subject is about right. This railroad company is asking for a great privilege, to make one of its termini upon this island, and to have the liberty to erect its necessary buildings upon it. It is entirely in the option of the Government to impose any conditions they may please upon this temporary use of this island by the railroad company. The conditions that this amendment propose are not unreasonable. They are just; they are proper. Let them be distinctly named to the corporation; and if the corporation does not choose to accept the use of the island upon these conditions let them decline it. It is no great privilege to the Government to have the terminus of this railroad located and its buildings erected on this island. It is for the benefit of the corporation; and if the island should be required at any future time or in any future exigency of the country or the Government for the purposes of defense and fortification, let the company place the island just as they found it. It is not for the benefit of the country; it is for the benefit of the corporation that these various buildings, machine-shops, depots, and everything of that kind are to be built. If they are not willing to accept the grant upon those terms for the temporary use of the island let them decline it, and let them hunt another location.

I say it is absurd, it is monstrous, it is impudent for the company to ask the use of the island and to erect such buildings as it chooses and require the Government to pay millions, if you please, or whatever may be the sum of the cost of those buildings when they are to be removed. Sir, there is a sovereign right that the Government has to give or withhold the use of this island from this corporation. The idea that if this island is required at any future time for the necessary important military defense of San Francisco or of the country, the Government should be required, when appropriating the island to that use, to pay millions and millions to this company for the purpose of removing any structures that it may choose to build upon the island is impudent to the last degree. Instead of being unjust, it is liberal in the highest degree for the Government to extend to this company the use of this island, and to say to it, "When it is to be resumed by the Government for any purpose, it must be put back in the same position as when the company found it, without charging upon the Government a large sum of money to remove buildings that the company may put upon it. Unless this amendment or something equivalent to it is attached as a condition to this temporary use of the island by the corporation, I, for one, will vote against the bill."

Mr. HOWE. I feel called upon by the present aspect of the question to apologize to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] for some remarks I made to him in the opening of this debate. I put the point to him rather strongly that this bill, as it stood, was simply a permission to this railway company to occupy our land there while we did not want it, with the right in us to take it back and use it ourselves when we did want it. I would not have said that to him if I did not think that it was what the bill meant. So it had been interpreted to me by an honorable Senator.

Mr. CONNESS. That is precisely what it meant.

Mr. HOWE. So I understood the Senator from California to say was the true meaning of it when I made the statement to the Senator from Indiana; and as such I was willing to vote for it; but—

Mr. NYE. Let us see if we cannot get through with this bill. I want to know if this amendment prevents our removing the structures from off the island?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not at all.

Mr. NYE. Then provide for that, that we may have the right to remove the structures, and I think there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HOWE. That is perfectly fair.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to say one word?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I said, having charge of the bill here, feeling somewhat concerned in it, as I do, that I did not care whether this amendment was voted up or voted down. The Senator, as he states the case, states precisely my understanding of it. If this bill were not to provide a great public convenience I should not be its advocate.

Mr. HOWE. With that understanding the Senator from Nevada says he is perfectly willing that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. NYE. With the understanding that we can remove the structures at any time; that the Government shall not hold the structures, and not pay for them.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. STEWART. Never mind that; let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Several SENATORS. Withdraw the call.

Mr. CONNESS. I did not call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays can be withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLE. At the suggestion of two or three Senators I offer an amendment to insert as an additional proviso the following:

And provided further, That this act shall not impair the rights or claims of persons in possession of the Island of Yerba Buena at the time of the late military occupation thereof.

The objection, it seems, to a provision similar to this, which was discussed a few minutes ago, was to that which was added to it. This is a provision very nearly the same as that which is contained in all the Pacific railroad bills. I think there can be no objection to this.

Mr. CONNESS. I have not the slightest objection to it. I had objection to the other provision connected with it.

Mr. COLE. I incorporated in the former amendment a provision in reference to the laws of California, because, as I then stated, the laws of California provide an easy way by which rights of this character can be ascertained and determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the vote is taken I wish to make just one remark. It is now proposed to pass this bill without information as to the extent of this island, as to its value, as to its connection with the coast, with the statement of one of the California Senators, who lives in the city of San Francisco, that there is no difficulty on the part of this company in reaching deep water without occupying this island. In view of an adverse report by the Engineer Bureau of the War Department, when Congress is officially informed by the War Department that no such structures ought to be allowed upon the island, that the necessity of it for military purposes in making a proper defense of that great harbor on the Pacific coast forbids this use, we propose to give to this rich corporation an island of immense value; of what value the Senate is not now informed, but of great value: because I say that this occupancy, so far as it shall extend, amounts to a gift. In the face of this report, in the face of the statement that an approach to deep water can be conveniently had by this company, and that there is no absolute necessity for this appropriation of the island in order that this company may enjoy its franchises already granted, we propose to pass this bill.

Mr. President, I think the Senate should hesitate before doing it. The most important harbor next to New York that we have, the most important island perhaps that we possess, the most important piece of ground owned by the Government, perhaps, is to be turned over to a corporation that has had given to it in bonds and in lands a greater gift, of larger value than perhaps has ever been given by any Government in the world—a corporation whose stock has now, as I understand, run up to a very large premium; and this is to be given in the face of the report of the War Department that it ought not to be done in view of the proper defense of a great harbor.

Mr. HOWARD. I regret that the honorable Senator from Indiana should take such a view as he does of the effect and operation of this bill. He speaks of it as a measure giving to a rich corporation this almost invaluable island, holding out to the world the idea that the company are by virtue of this bill to have the whole of the island. Certainly, if the Senator has read the bill, as I have no doubt he has, he can have drawn no such inference from its language. The direct contrary is true. They do not hold the title to the extent of a pepper-corn of this island.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I said so far as this island would become occupied under this bill, it was equivalent to a grant.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; I am glad to hear that modification of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is no modification. It is just what I said before.

Mr. HOWARD. I certainly understood it in a different sense at the time the Senator was addressing the Senate. The bill is, according to its terms and on its very face, a mere license to use such portion of this island as the proper military authorities may esteem unnecessary for military purposes in time of peace. Sir, is that giving away this important island? Is it making a large donation to a rich company? I will not characterize the remarks of the honorable Senator from Indiana, because I think him incapable of willfully and perversely misstating the contents and meaning of a bill which is before us for discussion. I therefore hope we shall come to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conkling, Connors, Corbett, Davis, Drake, Fowler, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Wade, Williams, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Edmunds, Hendricks, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Trumbull, Vickers, and Wiley—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Cole, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Norton, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Welch, and Wilson—22.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to correct a verbal error in the bill which has just been passed, so as to make sense of an amendment made on the motion of the honorable Senator from Maine. It now reads, "That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize or grant any subsidy for any road built under this act, or to increase the subsidies in bonds accruing;" &c. The object was to prevent a subsidy in bonds, and I desire to insert the words, "in bonds" after "subsidy."

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much land do they get by this?

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose about five or ten thousand acres.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The amendment may be made by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be so amended.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1345) to amend an act entitled "An act to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

EXPORTERS OF RUM.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 318) to correct an act entitled "An act for relief of certain exporters of rum," was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to put that joint resolution on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read for information.

Mr. SUMNER. It is merely to correct an error.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, which provides that the word "and," where it occurs in the act to which it is amendatory after the word "export" and before the words "actually contracted," be changed to "or," so that the corrected act shall read, "intended for export or actually contracted for."

Mr. SUMNER. That was the original language of the bill, and it carries out the intention. I hope there will be no question about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not. It is very important that this correction should take place. The bill has passed, and here is a mistake, and there are only sixty days within which these exportations can be made, and the time is running out now. I hope the Senator will withdraw his opposition.

Mr. COLE. I should like to hear the joint resolution read again.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. There can be no objection to it. It carries out the original idea of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it must go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently said. A little while ago I objected to the present consideration of a joint resolution to correct an act of a certain name. I am assured by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] who reported the original bill, that this correction is right. I do not see it in that light myself; but I defer to his superior judgment and withdraw the objection that I made to its present consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the joint resolution will be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. JOHNSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ALEXANDER J. ATOTCHA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now before the Senate, being the bill (S. No. 488) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Alexander J. Atotcha," approved February 14, 1865. This is a private bill that was left unfinished last evening.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to lay that over, to postpone it.

Mr. CONKLING. That is not necessary. That bill is not the unfinished business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I thought the Chair called up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suggest that that bill be passed over informally, and that we take up the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over informally if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection.

EVENING SESSION FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator from Maine to permit me to make a motion that the Senate take a recess at five o'clock until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. ANTHONY. For what purpose?

Mr. CONNESS. To consider private bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There should be a specification of the purpose, for considering private bills.

Mr. CONNESS. That is the object. I have none at present myself, but I know other Senators have, and they are crowding us at all times, and we cannot get along with public bills of great consequence unless we get them out of the way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it is understood that nothing but private bills shall be considered, I do not know that I have any objection.

Mr. CONNESS. That will be the understanding.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to know whether the appropriation bill was the order of the day and the unfinished business?

Mr. CONNESS. I understand it to be now before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it was not, then I was exercised for two hours on that subject without any particular reason.

Mr. CONNESS. The motion now is that a recess be taken for the purpose of considering private bills this evening.

Mr. HOWE. A large number of private bills have been reported to-day from the Committee on Claims which will not be ready for consideration this evening.

Mr. CONNESS. There are others that may be considered, and then they will be out of your way.

Mr. HOWE. Very well; all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking a recess from five o'clock until half past seven o'clock to consider private bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to take a recess from five o'clock to half past seven this evening. It is entirely too hot to sit here to-night.

Mr. RAMSEY. The thermometer is now 87° in the Hall, and will probably be 90° before we get through.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the question recurring on the motion for a recess, it was not agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, if the appropriation bill is not the order of the day, I suggest—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill will be taken up, if there be no objection, and the other bill postponed. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON,] which has been read and debated.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment paying for lands in Maine and Massachusetts. It was discussed at length yesterday.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ANTHONY answered to his name.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to know if that is the amendment relating to the claim of Maine and Massachusetts?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I had the floor assigned to me upon that question when the bill went over yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor when the Senate took a recess yesterday. If there be no objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to hear the amendment reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert, as an additional section, the following:

And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of executing the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, concluded on the 9th day of August, 1842, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the State of Maine, for ninety-one thousand, one hundred and twenty-five acres of land assigned by said State to settlers under said article, a sum equal to $1 25 per acre; and to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, for twenty-six thousand one hundred and fifty acres of land, a sum equal to $1 25 per acre: Provided, Before said sums are paid the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall agree with the United States that the settlers upon their public lands in the late disputed territory in Maine entitled to be quieted in their possessions, as ascertained by commission heretofore instituted by said States, shall have been or shall be quieted by a release of the title of the said States.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, this is a claim which has been before the Senate on several occasions, commencing, I think, in the Thirty-Fourth Congress. I will very briefly call the attention of the Senate to the history of this claim, or the leading points in it, and then I propose to submit an amendment.

On the 3d of March, 1857, Mr. Iverson, from the Committee on Claims; moved an amendment to an appropriation bill relating to this demand. That was ruled to be not in order, and was not entertained.

On the 14th of July, 1860, a similar amendment was moved by Mr. Simmons, from the Committee on Claims, to the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1861. It was decided by the Senate not to be in order—yeas 22, nays 26.

On the 25th of February, 1861, Mr. Simmons again moved the amendment to the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1862. It was again decided by the Senate not to be in order—yeas 16, nays 23.

On the 3d of March, 1863, a similar amendment was moved by Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1864. It was determined in the negative—yeas 14, nays 24.

This is the history of this claim in the Senate, with the exception of two bills, to which I will now refer. On the 4th of March, 1864, Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill (S. No. 156) to carry into effect the fourth article of the treaty of Washington concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 9th of August, 1842. There was no action on that bill.

On the 11th of January, 1866, Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. No. 68) to carry into effect the fourth article of the treaty of Washington concluded between Great Britain and the United States on the 9th of August, 1842; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported on the 13th of March, 1866, and passed the Senate on the 21st of March, the same month.

The present amendment is substantially similar to the former amendments to which I have referred and the bills to which I have also made reference. It provides for the payment to the States of Maine and Massachusetts of the claims of settlers to lands on the disputed territory. I believe the amount of money to be paid, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, the Government price of public land, will amount to something like one hundred and forty or one hundred and sixty thousand dollars. The amount of land is a little over ninety thousand acres. By elaborate reports which have heretofore been made to the two Houses of Congress it appears that there are several claims held by the State of Maine, or preferred by her upon the attention of Congress, all connected with this treaty of Washington, and all of them, with a single exception, falling under the terms of the fourth article, or alleged to fall under the terms of that article. These claims have all been contested. They are now quite old, and in my judgment they deserve more of investigation than they can possibly receive when presented in the manner in which this claim is presented, as an amendment to a general appropriation bill.

But, sir, for the purpose of quieting all further controversy on the subject of these claims of the State of Maine, I would be willing to waive objection to the present appropriation if I could be perfectly secure against any further demand by that State, or by the State of Massachusetts, which formerly had jurisdiction over this country, and in behalf of whom there is some allegation of claim made. I propose, therefore, as an additional proviso to the amendment that which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the appropriation hereby made shall be held to conclude and extinguish all asserted claims of said States of Maine and Massachusetts, and of all settlers, owners, and claimants against the United States under the fourth article of said treaty of Washington, or in relation to depredations upon the lands or territory mentioned in said article, or to interest upon expenditures incurred by the State of Maine in defending the same prior to the negotiation of said treaty.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will state as briefly as I can the nature of the claims which are thus preferred as they are set forth in House report No. 119, Thirty-Eighth Congress, first session, a report made by Mr. John H. Rice, from the State of Maine, a very elaborate and interesting report, exposing in full all the demands made on behalf of his State. In the first place, there are demands made for depredations committed in this disputed territory between 1832 and 1839, at a time when the State of Maine did not assert her jurisdiction over the territory, as it is alleged, upon the request of the Government of the United States. British subjects came into the territory during those seven years and cut off a considerable quantity of timber from the lands. It is alleged that the loss was incurred by the owners of the lands because the State of Maine did not protect them, and that her default in protecting them was in consequence of a request made to the State authorities by the President of the United States. The amount of the damages so claimed on behalf of individuals is very large; it has never been ascertained; and the claim is now so old in date that no intelligent investigation of the subject can ever be had. But it is a claim gravely proposed in a congressional report, and as it relates to the same subject-matter as this amendment I propose to conclude it and to avoid all discussion hereafter by naming it in the amendment which I have proposed.

Again, sir, the State of Maine, under another article of the treaty besides the fourth, was allowed her expenses incurred in attempting to defend her title to this disputed territory. Her account for outlays was, under an act of Congress, audited and settled at the Treasury Department, and she was paid the whole amount which she had expended. She was also under a special act of Congress paid all interest which she had paid upon loans to raise money to meet those expenses; but she claims, or has claimed, that in the calculation of interest at the Treasury Department on her expenditure she was not allowed as much as she ought to have been. The accounting officers of the Treasury settled her accounts according to the usual rule, according to the legal rule upon which accounts were adjusted in that Department in the absence of particular directions from Congress. The State was paid the principal of all her expenditures, and was paid the amount of interest upon the loans which she had made in order to meet those expenditures, but she was not allowed interest upon the interest which she had paid, or upon the principal which she had paid, and she insists that the calculation shall be made according to the principle which obtains in the settlement of accounts between individuals; that is, that a payment to her shall be first applied to the interest, and afterward, if there be any balance, it shall be applied to the principal. Instead of that she was simply paid the amount of her expenditures as a principal sum and the amount of interest which she had paid on her loans as a principal sum also; and the accounting officers of the Treasury did not allow her an additional amount which she would have received of the principle which obtains pretty generally, I believe, now in the settlement of private accounts had been adopted. That is also a claim of hers under the treaty of Washington.

I am disposed, therefore, in voting this very considerable amount of money in this somewhat irregular manner, overruling former decisions of the Senate upon the question of order, and taking this claim as valid without particular investigation or debate, to make sure at least that we are completely done with claims under the fourth article of the treaty of Washington and under any part of that treaty, so far as the State of Maine and the settlers upon her lands in this disputed territory are concerned.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let the Senator confine his amendment to claims under the fourth article of the treaty. The amendment goes much further than the fourth article.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The amendment applies not only to matters that arise under the fourth article, but the claims of the State of Maine, which is founded upon a distinct article of the treaty. The Senator, I understand, desires me to exclude the latter clause.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator if he would be willing, as this claim is made under the fourth article of the treaty, to confine his amendment to all claims arising under the fourth article of the treaty?

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the Senator moves an amendment of that kind the Senate may decide the point.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The idea upon which the honorable Senator founds his amendment is one, I think, that it is hardly just to apply to any bill; and if he will just bring his mind to consider it for a moment, I think he cannot avoid coming to that conclusion; and that is, that if the State has a claim here to be considered upon its own merits the Senate are willing to allow that claim, provided the State will give up all other claims which it may have against the Government upon other grounds. I ask the Senator whether that is consistent with his idea of justice and right. I ask any Senator whether it is consistent with the idea of justice and right. We make here a specific claim arising under the fourth article of the treaty; the Senator's amendment is substantially, "We will pay that claim provided you will receive it in full of all claims arising not only under that fourth article, but under any other article of the treaty." Is that just as a principle?

The Senator says that considering how it comes up, that it is a matter here upon an appropriation bill, it is a sort of bargain. Sir, it is on an appropriation bill; but is there any want of time to consider it? When it has been brought forward heretofore it has been at a late period of the session, sometimes on the last night, when there was not time to consider it, and when I myself, although in favor of the claim, could not say that I thought it came fairly before the Senate. Now, here it comes fairly before the Senate, and is as well and as thoroughly considered as if it was in a bill by itself. We are not deficient in reports of committees; we have half a dozen of them; and we are not deficient in time to explain and understand the whole matter. But the Senator says, "Inasmuch as it comes up on an appropriation bill, therefore we will impose upon you this condition: if you by any possibility have any other claim arising under that treaty or any part of it you must give us a receipt in full for that, or we will not grant you this relief." That is it substantially. Is that just? Would the honorable Senator, if he was sitting as judge, decide upon a proposition of that kind? I apprehend not; it therefore is not fair.

Now, sir, what are those other claims? One of them is a claim that does not arise under this treaty; and that is the claim for depredations, as it is called, upon the lands. There is no claim that I can perceive, or that has ever been made, arising under any article of the treaty for those depredations. I will state in what that claim is founded. The Government of the Province of New Brunswick undertook to send men there to cut off timber. It was a disputed territory. They claimed it; it turned out not to be theirs, any part of it in reality; but they sent on persons to cut off and strip the timber from those lands. The State of Maine raised a military force and sent that military force on under the land agent to protect that property. There was danger of a collision on the border that might lead to difficulty with the British Government. We did not ask any aid of the Government of the United States to protect us, but took our protection into our own hands. But the Government of the United States did interfere, and they sent down the commanding general of the army, General Scott, to interpose on behalf of the United States and the State government. The United States Government through him ordered the troops of Maine off and took possession of the territory themselves, and did not defend it or attempt to defend it, in consequence of which the timber was all stripped off the land. That is the simple statement.

There was an agreement made at the time that both parties should suspend operations, under the direction of the commanding general of the army; and what was the result? Maine held loyalty to the bargain; but the Province of New Brunswick, in between thirty and forty days, stripped off the timber. Maine has made a claim against the General Government, founded upon that interference, for the loss of the timber; but it has nothing to do with the treaty. I am very much afraid, from what I have witnessed in this Hall in regard to claims, that we never shall get anything in regard to it; but, nevertheless, I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is the fair thing to say that you will not grant this under the treaty, however honest it may be, unless Maine gives up that claim? Is that a kind of legislation that he thinks would be exactly a fair mode of dealing with the State? Here is one claim; we ask you to settle it upon its merits; and what has that to do with the other, which has nothing to do with the treaty?

There is another claim that arises under the treaty, but it arises under a separate article of the treaty, under article five. What is it? By that treaty the Government of the United States were to reimburse Maine for her expenses in defending that territory. It did, after a long time, reimburse the actual expenses and interest, but, in calculating the interest, it calculated it in the old fashion, applying all the payments it made from time to time to the principal instead of to the interest that was due.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The interest was not provided by treaty. The provision of the treaty was simply that Maine should be repaid her expenses. Subsequently Congress passed an act that she might obtain interest.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir; Congress passed an act to pay interest, and it passed an act to pay interest as a consequence of the provision of the treaty to reimburse Maine. Maine borrowed money, for which it paid interest, in order to carry on that service. Maine claims that that interest, under the fifth article, shall be calculated in the ordinary way, as has been done in the case of Maryland and other States. The Senator says to Maine, "You must give up that; you must not be heard on that claim at all, although it was allowed to Maryland in a similar account and has been allowed in other cases." Perhaps we shall never get that, but ought we to give it up? Ought we to be called upon in consequence of making this claim, if this is seen to be just, to give up the other, too? Those are questions perfectly distinct in their character from the matter under consideration.

It being a fact that we have made two several and distinct claims not connected with this one, having no reference to it in any way, it is proposed to put here an amendment by which we shall be called upon to give up those claims, one of which may be considered as arising under the fifth article, and the other having no reference to the treaty; that we shall not have this claim, however just and right it may be, unless we give a receipt in full for claims which are not connected with it. Is that fair? One would think that my honorable friend in moving this amendment was rather operating as retained counsel to see what he can do best for his client than acting as a legislator to decide between the United States and a State upon principles of justice and equity. I know that is not according to his nature, and I think he must see at once that the excuse he makes for offering it is not a valid excuse when there is so much opportunity as there is here to consider this claim upon its merits. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania by striking out all of it after the reference to the fourth article of the treaty.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise to say a word in opposition to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine. The claim of interest and the claim for depredations upon the disputed territory, and the claim provided for in the amendment itself indemnifying settlers, all came here to Congress together. They have been pressed at one and the same time. They are combined together in reports which have been made to the two Houses, have been considered together by committees which have investigated the general subject of the claims of the State of Maine. I do not connect them together for the first time by my amendment. I take the claims of the State of Maine as they have been introduced here by her agents and her representatives in the two Houses; and when I discover that upon the present occasion a single one of these claims is singled out and an appropriation to cover it is asked for I simply recall the omitted items of demand and propose to include them in the action of the Senate, so that we shall make an end, that we shall terminate questions of controversy between that State and the Government of the United States in reference to—what? The general subject-matter to which the treaty of Washington related, the disputed territory claimed to be within the boundaries of the State of Maine, but which was divided by that treaty.

The Senate will remember that the Government of the United States agreed to pay to the States of Maine and Massachusetts by that treaty the sum of $300,000, and expressly in consideration of the assent of those States to the line established by the treaty. That was the leading and controlling consideration upon which the payment of that money was provided for. Another reason was assigned to popularize the treaty, suggesting that the Government of the United States received acquisitions of territory and posts on the line of the State of New York, and upon the line of Vermont.

I believe, also; but that was the leading, that was the main consideration for the payment of that amount of money to those States. Now, sir, I venture to say that when that treaty was negotiated, and when it was ratified by the Senate of the United States, none of these claims that are pressed on our attention from the State of Maine were considered or thought of.

It will be remembered that the commissioners representing the two States of Maine and Massachusetts hesitated in giving their assent to the treaty when being negotiated by Mr. Webster and Lord Ashburton. Finally they proposed to submit the question to the Senate; they propose to be bound by the judgment of the Senate upon the question whether those States would agree to the treaty, or should assent to its terms. The Senate proceeding to ratify the treaty, the States of Maine and Massachusetts acquiesced in it, and it went into effect and became the fundamental law of the land; and these States received the amount of $300,000 for their assent to the line established by the treaty, so far as they were concerned, and to the general provisions so far as they would affect those States which were contained in that treaty. Then here come up three or four claims which have been brought into Congress and pressed upon the attention of both Houses. They are still pending and undetermined. What I desire now is that in voting money to these States upon claims which are doubtful, upon claims in regard to which exactly opposite opinions can honestly be held by members of Congress, we shall determine the whole subject which was sent here and which has heretofore been considered in the two Houses—all relating to this disputed territory, claims of property or of right in the disputed territory, and to the expenditures of the State for its protection at a certain period of time when we were upon the verge of hostility with Great Britain in reference to this very dispute.

And now, sir, what is the claim of interest, which is the main thing to be debated under the present motion to strike out the latter clause of my amendment. By one of the articles of the treaty of Washington of August 9, 1842, it was made the duty of the United States to indemnify Maine for her expenses incurred in protecting and defending the territory which had been in dispute with Great Britain. Under this article, the expenses of that State for troops, civil posse, and otherwise were audited at the Treasury, and as the amounts so audited were reported from time to time, appropriations were made for them by Congress and they were paid. Finally, on the 8d of March, 1861, an act was passed through the two Houses of Congress providing that so far as Maine had been obliged to pay interest in borrowing money to defend her territory, the amount so paid should be refunded to her. This has been done. She could not claim that interest under the treaty. She was obliged to come to Congress to obtain the passage of an act here to allow her interest on her expenditures.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the honorable Senator allow me a word?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The honorable Senator says that Congress agreed to pay her the interest, which has been done. That is precisely the point. The proposition is that it was done in a particular way, which was not doing it in the way in which it was meant by the act that it should be done.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That is a criticism upon words. The amount of interest which she had paid out was repaid to her.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not according to the rule established by legislation with reference to the payment of interest to States.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator is struggling over a difficulty about words. I will state it precisely if he will wait a moment. The amount of interest which the State of Maine had paid upon her loans negotiated for the purpose of meeting the expenditures of defending this territory was repaid to her; but she was not allowed interest upon that interest at the Treasury. Of course she could not obtain that under the act of Congress which was passed for her relief. What, then, is the nature of this claim for interest? It was not covered by the treaty of Washington; nothing was covered but the principal sum of her expenditures. She received them. Then she appealed to Congress, and a law was passed authorizing the payment to her of the amount of the interest which she had paid upon her loans, and that has been paid to her; every dollar of it. Now, what is the present claim? That Congress, by another act or joint resolution, shall authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to calculate interest upon the interest which she paid, shall take the principal sum and the interest originally paid into one account, and shall allow her an original amount of interest upon a particular mode of calculation, such as it is said was authorized in a former case of a claim by the State of Maryland a great while ago, the only precedent in our history which the researches of gentlemen have enabled them to bring forward as justifying such an allowance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The same rule was applied in the case of Georgia.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am alluding to the only one mentioned in this report. How much was the amount of that? In 1864 the amount was $211,547; the additional interest desired by that State to June 1, 1864, was $211,547 48, to which would be added now the interest for four years more upon a principal sum of $180,792 22 making a present claim of over a quarter of a million dollars. Is not this a little remarkable? Here an outlay originally made by the State of Maine for her own interests in protecting her own territory, asserting her own title, vindicating her own boundary, not instigated by the Government of the United States, in fact incurred under discouragement from the State Department and the President, made on her own account, was generously refunded to her by the treaty of Washington; and afterward upon an appeal to Congress the interest which she had paid upon loans to make that unauthorized outlay—I mean unauthorized so far as the Government of the United States was concerned—was also paid to her; and yet here is a claim accumulating rapidly in amount and now swollen up to $250,000, or about that amount of interest as it would be calculated according to the statement in this report.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] says that I appear desirous to act otherwise than as a judge. I suppose the gentlemen who represent the State of Maine in the two Houses of Congress, on a question of this sort, are to be taken as representing their own State; representing it particularly; prepared to vindicate its interests, and, so far as possible, to make good the claim which has been preferred in its behalf. All that I am desirous of doing is to secure to the Government of the United States so much of security and of immunity against doubtful, contested, and State demands as I can, when this subject is brought before me and I am obliged to vote upon it. I did not bring it here. It is brought here by the State, and I regard the present amendment as a compromise. I am willing to take it in that point of view. Although I am not satisfied that these claims, made on behalf of the State of Maine, are good and valid, that we are bound in point of law, in point of moral obligation, to pay them; yet, as it is a contested matter and as different opinions prevail, and as a generous course on the part of the Government in a case of dispute with one of the States is wisdom and policy in the main, I am agreed to compromise these several claims which have been pressed upon our attention by paying this large amount of money, provided this will make an end of it.

I am willing to do what a man in private business often does in his difficulties with his neighbors; where there are differences of opinion. Where there are matters of contest, the parties meet together and each side gives up some of its pretensions, and getting to a common ground conclude all dispute and difficulty. That is for peace and good neighborhood; and in the long run men who act in this manner are to be reckoned as wise and prudent in their day and generation. In that way I would act now in Congress. This State presenting these three or four claims through her representatives; through committees that have been inspired by her arguments and her reasoning, is now to be treated; and all the matters in dispute which are introduced here ought to be concluded at one time.

Now, what is the result? I might have gone over this record and shown several other bills that Congress has passed paying money on claims of Massachusetts and Maine. I paid several thousand dollars a few years ago to quiet two townships in Maine. There have been appropriations for war expenses of 1812 at different times by Congress. There has been no disposition to deal harshly or to deal unjustly with these States, and particularly the State of Maine. But what will be the result if you do not adopt this amendment of mine? The inevitable result will be that those interested in the State of Maine in these claims will continue to press them on the attention of their representatives, and we shall have bills hereafter introduced for their payment. The argument pressed upon one will be persisted in after perhaps repeated defeats. We see that claims grow stronger by the lapse of time. The very claim covered by the present amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire has been ruled out of order several times, and was rejected upon one occasion. The excuse is that it came up at the end of a session when there was no time to fully consider it. I think that objection applies here. This ought to be brought up by itself and voted upon by itself, and ought not to be put on an appropriation bill.

What I desire is that we shall be done with this whole subject of claims from the State of Maine with reference to lands disputed about, and in regard to which the boundary treaty of 1842 was made, and that in paying this sum of money now we shall have in part consideration for it peace for the future, security against renewed demands, against future debates and the consumption of public time to the injury of the interests of the people and States. I should like a settlement. I am unwilling to vote this money on any other principle.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I want to say in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania is that his whole argument goes to the extent it did before, and that is that he understands himself as making a compromise. I do not ask the Senator to make any compromise of a doubtful claim. I ask the Senate to pass a claim which is not doubtful in my judgment, and which has been reported favorably upon over and over and over again, so that I do not agree to his idea. He may vote so if he pleases, but the question is whether we are entitled to this particular specific claim, and the Senator's amendment that we shall not have it if we are entitled to it unless we give up all other claims that we may have not only arising under this treaty but outside of it, is not fair. They are terms not imposed on anybody. The Senator seems to talk as if he never heard of a claim being before Congress before, as if this were a new thing. Why, sir, they are here every day, of one sort and another. All I ask now is to confine the amendment of the Senator to the article under which we make the claim, the fourth article, and I hope the Senator will be willing to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The Chair understands the Senator from Maine to propose to amend the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania by striking out the words—

Or in relation to depredations upon the lands or territory mentioned in said article, or to interest upon expenditures incurred by the State of Maine in defending the same prior to the negotiation of said treaty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not in order strictly, but if there be no objection the Chair will entertain the motion to strike out.

The motion to strike out was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 21, noes 9.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BUCKALEW, as modified, to add to the amendment of Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, this proviso:

And provided further, That the appropriation hereby made shall be held to conclude and extinguish all asserted claims of said States of Maine and Massachusetts, and of all settlers, owners, and claimants against the United States under the fourth article of said treaty of Washington.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see what right the State of Maine has to make any such agreement, or why it is just to conclude the claims private persons may have against the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the amendment is entirely out of place and had better be voted down, and let us come to a vote on the original proposition.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I can answer the proposition of the Senator from Maine. This claim is made on behalf of settlers, citizens of that State, under the treaty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all. It is not made on behalf of settlers, but simply made to enable the Government of the United States to give releases to certain settlers that they agreed to give releases to. Now, the Senator offers an amendment that if you give releases to these settlers, or enable the United States to do it, it shall be in full for all claims not only of the State of Maine under that article of the treaty, but of all private persons, whatever may be the nature of their claims. Those words ought to be stricken out, and if that were done I should have no objection to the proposition.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator does not understand me. What I mean is that the State of Maine makes this demand in the interest of her settlers; she herself may make any adjustment she pleases with them; but at the same time as the claim is made on behalf of them, it is perfectly proper to conclude the whole subject. The claim is made under the fourth article of the treaty, and I understood from the Senator's former argument that he was willing to conclude the whole subject under that particular article.

Mr. FESSENDEN. So I am, so far as the State of Maine is concerned. Any claim that the State of Maine may have under the article I am perfectly willing to conclude; but if a private individual has a claim against the United States under that article or any other, I am not willing to conclude that; and it is not right to do it. Therefore, if the Senator will strike out these words I have no objection that the State of Maine shall be entirely concluded as to all her claims under the article. I move to strike out these words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. On this question I have paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] who was obliged to leave on account of sickness. I am in favor of the appropriation and he against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire and in favor of this amendment. I do not feel at liberty to vote for this amendment because I do not know which way the Senator from Maryland would vote if he were here.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conkling, Davis, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, McGee, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Vickers—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Cragin, Fessenden, Fowler, Harlan, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Tipton, Willey, Williams, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cameron, Cole, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Wade, Welch, and Wilson—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON,] from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YATES. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line four hundred and eighty-nine:

That the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion is authorized to expend the appropriation heretofore made for the purpose of erecting a penitentiary for the Territory of Colorado on the site belonging to and owned and provided for the purpose by said Territory.

I am directed by the Committee on Territories to report this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. YATES. It does not make any appropriation. I will state that an appropriation of $40,000 was made to build a penitentiary in Colorado Territory, and the site was to be fixed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The difficulty which I wish to obviate is this: the title to a grant on which it is to be built is in the Territory, and the Secretary of the Interior does not wish to expend the money without some instructions, inasmuch as the title to the ground is in the Territory. I presume there is no objection whatever to the amendment. It does not propose to make any new appropriation whatever, but simply that the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, apply the money already appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This would be an authority to the Secretary of the Interior to erect a prison on a different tract of land from that authorized by a previous appropriation?

Mr. HARLAN. I understand the difficulty which the Senator from Illinois seeks to obviate to be this: now by a general law no head of a Department can expend money in the erection of public buildings until the title shall have been shown to be clear and in the United States; but in making the conveyance of the site for the penitentiary the conveyance was made to the Territory of Colorado? So the Senator from Maine will see that there is a technical difficulty.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This, then, is to authorize him to erect the building for which the appropriation was made, upon a different tract of land.

Mr. HARLAN. No, it is the same tract of land as I understand, but the land was conveyed to the Territory instead of being conveyed to the United States of America.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And the former appropriation only authorized it to be erected on land belonging to the United States.

Mr. HARLAN. That is a general provision of law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And this proposes to authorize him to expend this money on land belonging to the Territory?

Mr. YATES. The Territorial Legislature fixed the site.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The object of my inquiry was to learn whether it was an item of appropriation, or simply a direction of an appropriation already made.

Mr. CRAGIN. I will state that at the last session of Congress the Committee on Territories reported a bill authorizing the Territories to erect penitentiaries at an expense not exceeding $40,000, to be taken out of the internal revenue taxes raised in the Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When was that act passed?

Mr. CRAGIN. At the last session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. I reported it from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to refer to the statute.

Mr. CRAGIN. Here is the book, [handing it to Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of 22d January, 1867, I see, appropriates of the revenues of that Territory that amount of money for that purpose. That being so, I do not see that there is any objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I offer this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Assistant Secretary of the Interior shall be entitled to receive a sum equal to the difference between his salary as such and that of the Secretary of the Interior for and during the period he has heretofore acted pursuant to law as such Secretary during the absence from the seat of Government or illness of such Secretary, and such sum is hereby appropriated out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to inquire of the Senator who offers this amendment whether he understands that to be usual; whether there is any precedent for it; whether it is customary for the subordinates, when performing the duties of the head of the Department in such cases of sickness or absence, to receive the higher compensation.

Mr. HARLAN. Similar provision was made for the Assistant Secretary of another Department during this session, and it has been made, I think, frequently heretofore.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is this amendment moved by a committee?

Mr. HARLAN. The Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; notice was sent to us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does notice do under the rule?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the rule to require that it should be referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Presented in the Senate and referred to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand that was done.

Mr. HARLAN. It was presented and referred yesterday to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to allowing Mr. Otto the pay of Secretary of the Interior during the time his chief has been employed as Attorney General. There is justice in that; but to adopt the general principle stated in the amendment would lead to innumerable claims. For instance, the Secretary of State has been occasionally absent at Auburn for a few days at a time. Is the Assistant Secretary to receive his pay during his temporary absence? In a case where an Assistant Secretary really does the business of the office and discharges its responsibilities, his chief being employed in the discharge of the duties of another department, I would not object to paying him the higher salary during that time, and the Government would lose nothing by that arrangement. I should be willing to give Mr. Otto the difference in pay during the time his chief has been acting as Attorney General.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How is it when the head of a Department is absent for several weeks because of sickness?

Mr. SHERMAN. The difference in pay has never been given so far as I know, and I do not think it ought to be done.

Mr. HOWE. You have, I guess, at least as many as half a dozen statutes on the book declaring that such payments as this shall not be made. If Congress is willing to pay an Assistant Secretary for acting in the place of the principal, it ought to be a general rule. If you put this provision in here, you will have a separate bill in every case where the head of a Department is absent for a short time and his assistant performs his duty. That is unnecessary legislation, even if it is just.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know if the meaning of this is that the Assistant Secretary of the Interior shall have the same pay as the Secretary. When he is serving as Secretary I should like to know who is discharging his duties as Assistant Secretary. I thought he was placed there for the purpose of discharging the duties of the Secretary when the Secretary should be absent.

Mr. HARLAN. At this session we passed a bill on an amendment to some law giving the heirs of a chief clerk in the State Department the pay of Secretary of State during the period he served as Secretary of State. Such bills have been passed here repeatedly giving an Assistant Secretary the pay of Secretary during the time he acted as such on account of absence from the city or on account of sickness of the Secretary. I do not want to press this if it is not a proper thing to be done; and if those who are conversant with the custom of the Government in relation to such questions will say that it has not been done repeatedly in relation to other Departments I shall withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe the case of Mr. Dickens was an old matter, and for peculiar reasons. It arose before there were laws on the subject. There are now statutes on the subject, and that case cannot properly be cited as a precedent.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Iowa can see the distinction I make. The United States appropriate money, $8,000 a year for the pay of the Attorney General, and $8,000 for a Secretary of the Interior. While the Secretary is performing the duties of Attorney General according to law by assignment, important responsibilities are necessarily thrown upon his assistant, and I am willing to pay him for that time, because then the United States lose nothing; they pay only two officers of the higher grade, whereas if you extended the rule further and allowed for a temporary absence, as a matter of course the United States would be paying two officers for performing the same work, and that principle is forbidden by law. There is an express provision in a general law which declares that no officer shall receive the pay of his chief when there is no vacancy in the office, because as a matter of course that would involve two salaries for the same office. I do not know of any case where that has been granted.

Mr. HARLAN. I will accept the modification of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio, to make it read that he shall receive the difference in pay between that of Assistant Secretary and Secretary during the time the Secretary has acted or may act as Attorney General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be put on an appropriation bill, because if that is a true principle it ought to be applied to the other Departments, where the thing is happening constantly, and therefore it ought not to be put on this bill. In the next place, I doubt greatly the propriety of it at all. The fact is that when an Assistant Secretary performs the duties of Secretary he does not do any more work than he did perform, and he has the honor of being acting Secretary of the Interior, or of State, or whatever it may be. I am not speaking of this particular gentleman; I have no doubt he is as solid as anybody is; from what I know of him I have no doubt he is; but I speak of all of them. They do not wear themselves out any more than they did before; they get the pay they had before, and some clerk performs the duties they did before; and there is no need of paying them extra.

Mr. HARLAN. Judging from the expressions that have been made here, there is no use in urging the amendment, and I withdraw it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. I offer this amendment, to be inserted after line two hundred and twenty-five, on page 10:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enlarge the lot in the city of Nashville for the erection of a custom-house, $25,000.

It is proper for me to state that in offering this amendment I do so under the instruction of the Committee on Commerce, and that the appropriation meets the approbation of the Treasury Department. It is simply to enlarge the lot of ground at Nashville for the site of the custom-house.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will state to the Senate what this is. In 1856 Congress appropriated $20,000 to purchase a lot of land in the city of Nashville for the erection of a public building in that city, and the act limited the size of the building. The Secretary of the Treasury now communicates to the Committee on Commerce that the lot of land which was authorized to be purchased is not large enough for the erection of a suitable building, that there ought to be additional land procured for that purpose. The supervising architect has sent to the Committee on Commerce a plan of the building which is in harmony with the custom-houses that are being built now, and have been for the last six or eight years in the country generally, whereby it becomes necessary to acquire additional land. As I understand the matter, the Committee on Commerce recommend that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to acquire additional land for that purpose, and this appropriation is made to enable him to do it.

Mr. POMEROY. Land for what? To erect a building on?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. A custom-house, court-house, and post office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much land have they now?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. One hundred feet by fifty perhaps; and the plan of the building is one hundred and twenty feet.

Mr. POMEROY. They want $25,000 for more land?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the amount of receipts from imports at that port?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know. What I mean to say about it is that heretofore an appropriation of $20,000 was made to buy land for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashville, and that is found now to be inadequate; there is not land enough on which to erect such a building as is recommended by the supervising architect and by the Treasury Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My inquiry was what was the amount of yearly receipts from customs at that port?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know. Very likely the Committee on Commerce may know.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this $25,000 appropriation for the purchase of land for the site of a building for a custom-house in the city of Nashville, when there never has been one dollar of money expended in the State of Tennessee by this Government for any public building whatever. In 1860 a lot was purchased by the Government, which is there now; it is too small for the purpose of erecting this building. Instead of being worth $20,000 now, that lot is worth $100,000. We add a certain quantity of land so as to make the lot large enough to erect a building suitable for the purpose. We need a custom-house, a post office, and a court-room, as in other cities. It is certainly a very small amount, much smaller than has been expended in any city of the same size in any State of the Union. I am very well aware that the citizens there will have to make up some of the money needed to secure land enough to build a suitable building upon.

I do not recollect the amount of receipts from customs, but the internal revenue of that district is very large, and previous to 1860 the receipts from customs were considerable; at the present time they are small, and have been since 1860. Of course the customs ought now to increase very rapidly. I could make a statement of the size of the buildings constructed in other cities of the Union, and also of the prices for which they were erected, if it were necessary, but I do not think it is necessary to go into such statistics for the purpose of making clear the propriety of this little appropriation of $25,000 to be expended in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. POMEROY. I would not like to oppose anything that ought to be done; but if this is for the purpose of an internal revenue office or post office it ought to be so stated. I understand it to be for a custom-house.

Mr. FOWLER. All the officers of the Government there are to be in this custom-house building, I understand.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator represents they have large internal revenue receipts, and need a post office, but he fails to tell us in regard to the receipts from any commerce that passes through the custom-house. I am willing to give to these States any reasonable appropriation for anything that we are in the habit of appropriating for in any State; but I never thought of asking for an appropriation for my own State for the purpose of building post offices or an internal revenue office, although I presume they would be very acceptable and desirable. States which are so situated that do not have much commerce cannot expect to have custom-houses. I would not call this a "custom-house;" call it some other name.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is well known that in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities, buildings were erected for custom-houses, post offices, and court-houses, and all the Government offices. This amendment simply authorizes the extension of the size of the lot at Nashville to enable them to rent a building relatively of the same size as in these other cities.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Tennessee. If my friend from Kansas would look to the law of 1856, authorizing the erection of this custom-house at Nashville he would see that the building at Nashville is not only intended for a custom-house, but for the use of the courts of the United States, and the post offices and other offices connected with the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I move to amend the bill by inserting an appropriation of $25,000 for a post office building in the city of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. I believe there is now no town of that magnitude in the United States that has not such a building erected by the Government. The post office at Harrisburg yields a large revenue to the Government, and the safety of the mails and the dignity of the Government require that there should be such a building there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the amendment reported from a committee of this body?

Mr. CAMERON. Well, Mr. President, it ought to have been reported before. [Laughter.] I suppose if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will "accept service" now that will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment can be entertained by unanimous consent. Is there any objection to the amendment?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is not in order?

Mr. POMEROY. I did not understand what the amendment was.

Mr. CAMERON. The amendment is to appropriate the sum of $25,000 for the erection of a post office in the city of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, on condition that such a building as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct to be erected shall not cost more than that sum, because if it does cost more I pledge myself that the people of Harrisburg will make up the additional sum.

Mr. POMEROY. It would be a pretty good precedent to set, because I want to move a similar appropriation when this amendment is adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been renewed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The objection having been made once, it was hardly necessary to renew it.

Mr. CAMERON. It is not exactly the same proposition, because I have added a condition that the money shall be appropriated on condition that the people of Harrisburg shall pay the additional sum which the Secretary of the Treasury shall say is necessary to erect a proper building.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suppose the Senator is hardly serious in urging this proposition. There is no instance where the Government has built a post office by itself. In large seaports, and perhaps in some other places where a custom-house has been necessary, provision has been made for a custom-house building that should also contain accommodations for the post office and the United States courts. There is no instance, I believe, where an appropriation has been made for building a post office by itself; and by law the Post Office Department is authorized to provide all necessary accommodations for post offices. I must enforce the rule on the Senator.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not think the chairman will do that when he comes to look at the case. When we have a United States court at Harrisburg we are perfectly willing that it shall have rooms in this building without charge. Just think of it, at the seat of government of what is admitted to be next to the greatest State in the Union we have no place for the post office there unless it is by the sufferance of the people who own the buildings.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the case everywhere.

Mr. CAMERON. No; it is not the case at Portland, in Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is the case in my own city.

Mr. CAMERON. We have provided in this very bill for such a building at Portland, in Oregon.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My own city is parallel precisely to the honorable Senator's case as to being the seat of government, though not parallel in greatness as regards the comparative importance of States; and I should hardly think of moving the same thing for Augusta.

Mr. CAMERON. This is the difference between the cases: the post office in the town which is the seat of government of the State of Maine I think gives no surplus, or very little, while at Harrisburg it is a very large one. The Harrisburg office is the most profitable post office to the Government in the State of Pennsylvania, outside of Philadelphia, and Philadelphia is the most profitable in the Union, not excepting New York.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe this is all out of order. The question of order has been raised, and it is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was so feebly raised that the Chair did not know whether it was intended to be insisted on or not. [Laughter.] In the mean time gentlemen go on to argue it. I suppose they waive the point of order when they go on to argue the question. Points of order should be made promptly in limine; and when gentlemen proceed to argue the merits of a proposition it is to be presumed they waive points of order.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, it depends entirely on the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he will insist on his rule or whether I shall have my amendment put on the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he can readily remove the only objection the Senator from Maine makes to the proposition. The Senator from Maine says that no post office buildings are constructed unless there is a custom-house in the same building. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will consent that there shall be a custom-house in this building I suppose the Senator from Maine will withdraw his objection?

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If a question of order is made the amendment cannot be received.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If I understand the Chair so to rule, I have a motion to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so rules, of course.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call the attention of the Senate to the ninth page of the bill, line two hundred and six:

For repairs and outfits, $15,000.

The estimate was $170,000; and I am told that $15,000 is a misprint; it should be $150,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Repairs and outfits" of what?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is in regard to the revenue-cutter service. I move to make the appropriation $150,000 instead of $15,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to renew a motion to amend made by the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the appropriation for marine hospitals, and I wish to add to what I said the other day on that subject a few remarks made by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report submitted in 1865; one page is all I wish to read:

"The working of the marine hospital system as at present constituted is not altogether satisfactory. The erection and repair of numerous expensive buildings, and the support of the establishments necessarily connected with their operations, have entailed upon the Government a yearly expense far beyond the amount contributed by the seamen, which has been met by large annual appropriations by Congress.

"The act of July 16, 1798, by which the system was created, and the rate of contribution fixed at twenty cents per month, confined the action of the Government to the simple expenditure, for the benefit of the seamen, of the amounts thus contributed by themselves, and contemplated laying no burden on the public Treasury. If it is deemed advisable to continue any system of relief, under control of the Government, it is respectfully suggested that the original intent of the law should be carried into effect and the fund made self-sustaining. With this view it will be necessary to increase the fund and to make a material reduction in the expenses.

"Experience has shown, and former Secretaries have at various times and with entire unanimity represented to Congress, that the system of public marine hospitals, maintained and managed by the Government, is the least economical method that has been devised for the administration of this fund, and affords the least comparative benefit to the seamen. The expenses of these establishments are large, independently of the number of seamen received in them. When the patients are numerous the average rate of expense per man is not unreasonable; but where they are few, as at most of the public institutions, the expense per capita is very largely in excess of the cost of maintaining them under contract at private, State, or municipal institutions, where they would be better accommodated at an expense exactly proportioned to the services rendered.

"Mention may be made, in illustration, of one of these public hospitals, which is maintained at an annual expense of upward of four thousand dollars, and which accommodates an average of less than a single patient, at a daily cost per capita of more than $14 50; while quite as satisfactory relief can be had under contract for about one dollar per day.

There are, moreover, several hospital buildings, erected at great cost, now lying idle, out of repair, and not available for their intended use. Some of these have never been occupied, and one, at least, is situated at a point remote from any port, and where relief is never demanded. Others now occupied are in a condition requiring large and immediate outlay to preserve them.

"In view of these facts, it is strongly recommended that authority be conferred by law upon this Department to sell such hospitals as experience has shown are not needed, retaining only those situated at important ports, where, by the course of commerce, demands for relief are likely to be most frequent and pressing, and where contracts on favorable terms cannot be procured with private or municipal institutions. The proceeds should either be returned into the Treasury, in repayment of their cost, or invested for the benefit of the hospital fund.

"In favor of the contract system it may be remarked that it is in operation most successfully at New York, where demands for relief are far the heaviest, at Baltimore, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Louisville, and Cincinnati; and it is believed that quite as advantageous and satisfactory arrangements might be made at other ports where Government hospitals are now located. Even at ports where it may be deemed best to retain the ownership of the hospital buildings it might be advisable to lease them to private or municipal hospitals, which would gladly receive the seamen on favorable terms. Such an arrangement was formerly in force at Charleston, South Carolina, much to the advantage of the patients and the fund.

"Should these suggestions be adopted, and at the same time the rate of contribution fixed at thirty cents a month, instead of twenty, as at present, the proceeds of the tax, thoroughly collected and economically administered, would be ample to meet every demand which a judicious discrimination in affording relief would make upon them; and the seamen would receive far more substantial and efficient benefit than under the present system."

Mr. President, I showed the Senate the other day that up to 1846 there never had been a dollar contributed by the nation to this fund but once, and that was in lieu of the twenty-cents tax. That took place in 1837. I showed that repeatedly since 1846 Congress had omitted all appropriations. I showed that when they first commenced making appropriations they commenced appropriating twelve or fifteen thousand dollars per annum, the highest being $25,000, until one year they appropriated $200,000 in aid of this fund and to furnish five different hospitals. Putting the two subjects together, the appropriation was $200,000. I now produce the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury, who says that if you will take ten cents more a month, that is to say $1 20 a year, from the men who are employed in this service, and add it to the fund, the sailors can be taken better care of with that fund than they are with the money which you appropriate; and the only argument alleged, as I remember, the other day in favor of this appropriation was that the wages of the seamen—for they get wages—were spent so thriftlessly and shiftlessly for purposes of dissipation that they would not save anything to take care of themselves; so that this $1 20 a year which the Secretary proposes to take out of their wages is money which confessedly, if it is not taken, will be squandered in dissipation. Take that ten cents away, says the Secretary, and you can save to your Treasury $150,000 a year. Now I ask the Senate to make that substitute, to refuse this appropriation, and then put that clause in the bill; and I want the yeas and nays on that proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out from lines forty-seven to fifty-four the following clause:

For supplying deficiency in the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, $150,000: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall communicate at each annual session of Congress a full and complete statement in detail of the amounts collected from seamen, and also the amount expended for sick and disabled seamen, in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 3, 1802.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The report from which the Senator read was the first report, I believe, that was made by the present Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator is not disposed to place much reliance on the opinions of the present Secretary of the Treasury, but with these he is disposed to agree.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator is entirely right. I did not read that to strengthen myself, but I put it to influence the conviction of the Senator. I never knew him to differ with the Secretary of the Treasury when he asked an appropriation, and I hoped he would follow him when he discouraged one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He does not discourage that appropriation now. He suggests a change of the system. I do not think he knew at that time anything about it. I know precisely how that was got up; he sent a clerk of his Department, who was officiating as librarian, I forget his name, to look at the hospitals around the country, and he made an examination and gave his opinions when he came back, and upon the opinions of that clerk the Secretary founded his report. The suggestion made has a good deal of plausibility in it; but if we are going to change the system it must be done as a whole. You cannot do it by diminishing the fund at once, which is absolutely necessary under the present system. If the system is to be changed it cannot be changed now by striking out a necessary appropriation, because it is a matter that must be done by degrees. If you omit to make the needed appropriation either they go on and there is a deficiency to be made up, or else you must shut up some of these hospitals, turn the men out of doors, and that without making a new arrangement for a contract system of some kind or other.

I am of opinion, as I stated the other day, that we have too many of these hospitals. We have them at some places where neither the present demands for supporting sick and disabled sailors nor the prospective demands are such as to justify the erection of a building. A great many buildings have been erected, more especially up and down the Mississippi river, more I think than are necessary there. Some have been sold; considerable reforms have already taken place; Congress has authorized the sale in several places of hospitals that were not needed and where the expense of keeping them up was necessarily very great comparatively in consequence of there not being sufficient demand to justify the erection and keeping up of a building. Probably the reason a marine hospital has not been built at the city of New York is that the city of New York has so many sailors that no one hospital we should be likely to erect could hold all who ought to be accommodated. At any rate, they have not begun the system there; for what reason I do not know. Perhaps it was unwise to change the old system, but I am myself of a different opinion, and I have been always of a different opinion. I do not think it operates well in all cases to leave these men to the tender mercies of contractors; but where you have a large extent of sea-coast and a great deal of navigation it is better to have a hospital, and have it properly cared for and properly managed. We want more or less of them, how many I do not know.

If the Senator desires to correct the evil it must be done systematically. You must examine, in the first place, and see how many hospitals can be dispensed with and sold, and how many it is necessary to retain; because there are some places where they are necessary for these purposes, and others where they are not. Take the hospital that is erected in my city. It cost with the furniture, probably about sixty thousand dollars. The Senator says "sell it for a town hospital." It is a little out of the city, though on the harbor. It is in the town of Westbrook. The town of Westbrook has no need of it, nor has the city of Portland. The city of Portland has ample accommodations for all its poor. It would not be good for any purpose. It would not bring $10,000. It would only bring what the materials would sell for when taken down. It is the only marine hospital for about three hundred miles of sea-coast. Will you shut up that hospital at once without making another arrangement.

I say, then, that if my friend wishes to arrive at a proper conclusion—and I have no sort of objection to its being tried—there should be an examination made to see what number of different hospitals can be dispensed with, which of them ought to be sold, and then provision should be made by law to exact more of the sailors, if you mean to meet it in that way; but at present you have no law on that subject, and it is not very likely that you can get a law through at this session of Congress. This sum is necessary for the succeeding year; you cannot begin a reform of this kind by simply saying that money which is absolutely needed for the system as it exists shall not be appropriated and then leave everything to chance afterward to make it up. That is no way to begin, because it is an important system and we have got to take care of these people in some way or other.

If, therefore, the Senator wishes to substitute the contract system, entirely sweep out all these hospitals, let us have a well-digested plan for that purpose, and not begin by striking out this appropriation which, in the existing state of things, is absolutely necessary to the support of the seamen. That is what I object to. I will, if I remain in Congress long enough, go with the Senator to examine this system thoroughly, and if there are errors in it that ought to be corrected, to correct them, dispose of the hospitals we do not need, substitute the contract system where it will be more advantageous; but to strike out at once an appropriation that is absolutely necessary for the system as it exists, is, in my judgment, not wise legislation, and is not the right end to begin at, because there is nothing provided to make up for what is absolutely necessary.

Mr. DRAKE. I want to make a suggestion to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin about this matter which, perhaps, may have some weight with him: I think the principal objection which has existed to these hospitals has grown out of the want of efficient superintendence of them. They have been very much more expensive heretofore than there was any necessity for, the custom-house officers having the matter put into their hands of providing for them without understanding that business. To remedy that difficulty the Senate has passed at the last session a bill authorizing the appointment of a supervising surgeon, whose duty it shall be to examine the condition of all these hospitals, to supervise the operations of them, and the supplies for them. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin whether it would not be wiser, in regard to this matter, to wait until such an officer as that has had the subject in hand long enough to investigate the condition of them and to put us in the right track for remedying any objections that may have existed heretofore to the system.

Mr. COLE. I have no objection to any more economical disposition that can be made of sailors who have become disabled or sick in the service, but this proposed rejection of the appropriation will be followed, as I see, by no provision whatever for them. These hospitals are established, I believe, by particular laws, and it appears to me the proper way to effect a remedy would be by reorganizing the system, modifying the laws, and not by withholding an appropriation. There is one of these establishments at San Francisco, a very large marine hospital, established by the General Government. It has been in use a long time, and has generally been well filled with patients. If the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin should prevail, it seems to me it must necessarily result in closing it up, and of course in great distress to the inmates of the hospital. I presume the appropriation of $150,000 may be sufficient. I am willing to agree to that reduction which has been made, but I am opposed to striking out the appropriation entirely.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I call attention to the fact that here are the Senator from Maine, the Senator from California, and the Senator from Missouri, insisting upon this appropriation of $150,000, and insisting upon it simply because you have got so many hospitals to take care of, and not because you have got so many seamen to take care of. The Secretary of the Treasury says that you can take care of the seamen without any money from the national Treasury if you will add ten cents a month out of the funds of the seamen.

The Senator from Maine says here is a system and you are in danger of disturbing the system by suddenly cutting off this appropriation; that the true way to effect a reform is to see how many hospitals you can dispense with, and then when you have dispensed with these see how much money you want out of the Treasury. Mr. President, in answer to that, I call his attention and that of the Senate to the fact that more than half a dozen times since 1846, when you made your first appropriation to this fund, you have made no appropriation at all. You did not make any appropriation in 1865, not a dollar to this fund, and the seamen did not suffer; at least if they did, we did not hear of it.

And yet it is suggested that if you do not make this appropriation while you are investigating the system the seamen will suffer. No, sir; let the hospitals stand; let the seamen occupy them if those who contract to take care of them think they can take care of them there the cheapest. All I propose to do is to withhold this appropriation which you have demonstrated over and over again is not necessary, and then to add to the seamen's fund ten cents a month more than you now collect from it. That, the Secretary says, will take care of them, and take better care of them than has been taken of them heretofore. Then you can make up your minds at your leisure whether your hospitals are necessary or not. My amendment has nothing to do with them; it will not destroy them; it will not dissipate them; it leaves them where they are.

Mr. COLE. The estimates are based on some information which the Department has on the subject.

Mr. HOWE. The Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do with the estimates. His board submit the sum they want, and they ask $200,000 this year because they had it before.

Mr. COLE. I presume they are able to give good reasons why the appropriation should be made.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Conkling, Conness, Edmunds, Howe, McCreery, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Cole, Gragin, Drake, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Vickers, and Welch—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Corbett, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Salisbury, Sherman, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 347) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1206) to restore to certain parties their rights under the laws and treaties of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 411) for the relief of Almira Wyeth;

A bill (H. R. No. 523) granting a pension to James S. Todd;

A bill (H. R. No. 671) granting a pension to the widow of Henry Keneday;

A bill (H. R. No. 775) granting a pension to Rebecca Jane Kinsel;

A bill (H. R. No. 780) for the relief of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relative to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House.

PENSION BILLS.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 373) to place the name of Mahala A. Straight upon the pension-roll of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 456) granting a pension to the minor children of Pleasant Stoops;

A bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to George F. Gorham, late a private in company B, twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 522) granting a pension to W. W. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. No. 525) granting a pension to Jeremiah T. Hallett;

A bill (H. R. No. 661) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of William Craft;

A bill (H. R. No. 662) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of George R. Waters;

A bill (H. R. No. 663) granting a pension to Cyrus K. Wood, the legal representative of Cyrus D. Wood;

A bill (H. R. No. 664) granting a pension to the minor children of Charles Gouler;

A bill (H. R. No. 666) granting a pension to Henry H. Hunter;

A bill (H. R. No. 669) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Myron Wilklow;

A bill (H. R. No. 670) granting a pension to the widow and children of Andrew Holman;

A bill (H. R. No. 521) to place the name of Solomon Zachman on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 673) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of John S. Phelps;

A bill (H. R. No. 672) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Charles W. Wilcox;

A bill (H. R. No. 676) granting a pension to Thomas Connolly;

A bill (H. R. No. 677) granting a pension to the minor children of James Heatherly;

A bill (H. R. No. 770) granting a pension to John H. Finlay;

A bill (H. R. No. 675) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Cornelius L. Rice;

A bill (H. R. No. 771) granting a pension to John L. Lay;

A bill (H. R. No. 773) granting a pension to William H. McDonald; and

A bill (H. R. No. 825) granting a pension to John W. Hughes;

And asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bills, and appointed Mr. SIDNEY PERHAM of Maine, Mr. J. F. BENJAMIN of Missouri, and Mr. G. F. MILLER of Pennsylvania, managers at the conference on its part.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate proceeded to consider the message received from the House of Representatives informing the Senate of its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bills of the House last named.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said last-named bills, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bills.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. VAN WINKLE, Mr. TRUMBULL, and Mr. EDMUNDS.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the bill (S. No. 349) granting aid in the construction of a railroad from the town of Vallejo to Humboldt bay, in the State of California, was recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1206) to restore to certain parties their rights under the laws and treaties of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF LATE REBEL STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Senate joint resolution No. 139, relating to the counting of electoral votes.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to remind my friend that to-morrow at one o'clock has been set apart for the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot help that. We will do the best we can. This is business of the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 2, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The reading of yesterday's Journal was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

TAX ON INTEREST OF BONDS.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1350) to authorize internal tax on the interest of bonds and other securities of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill and report were read in extenso, as follows:

A bill to authorize an internal tax on the interest of the bonds and other securities of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of interest hereafter due and payable on all the bonds and other securities of the United States. To secure the collection of said tax, the amount of interest hereafter paid on any bonds or other securities of the United States, bearing interest at six per cent., shall be at the rate of only five and four tenths per cent., and bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. shall be at the rate of only four and five tenths per cent.; and if bearing interest at the rate of three per cent. shall be at the rate of only two and seven tenths per cent. per annum. No higher rate of interest than is herein prescribed shall be paid on any bond or other security of the United States now outstanding, or authorized to be issued, all conditions of any such bond or other security, and all laws and parts of laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution of the House, instructing them to report without unnecessary delay a bill levying a tax of at least ten per cent. on the interest of the bonds of the United States, to be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury and such of his subordinates as may be charged with the duty of paying the interest on the bonded debt of the United States, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report and bill:

The Committee of Ways and Means are opposed to the proposition embraced in this resolution, and report the bill only in obedience to the positive order of the House. In the argument made in the House in favor of the resolution the English income tax law was referred to and quoted. There is a law corresponding to that law on the statute-books of this country, imposing a tax on incomes of five per cent., while the English law is less than three per cent. But your committee have been unable to find in the statute-books of England or any other civilized country a law that could be regarded in any way as a precedent for the bill the House have instructed the committee to report, which, if enacted, will be simply a law providing for the payment of a rate of interest on the Government debt ten per cent. less than was agreed for, ten per cent. less than is stated in the bonds, and ten per cent. less than was pledged to be paid by the solemn enactment of Congress when the money was required to carry on a war which threatened the life of the nation. The evil effects resulting to a nation, whether her national credit is guarded and protected, or whether by legislation of the character now proposed the confidence of all other civilized nations is forfeited, may not be felt or appreciated in time of peace; but the committee desire to call attention to the consequences that would follow the passage of a bill of the character now submitted, in case we should ever hereafter have occasion to use our credit for the purpose of providing means either to sustain ourselves at home or to defend ourselves in any collision with a foreign Power.

The committee repeat that in reporting the bill they act in obedience to the positive directions of the House, and contrary to their own best judgment. They reserve to themselves their rights, as members of the House, to oppose in every possible way the adoption of a measure which they regard as hostile to the public interest and injurious to the national character.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved that the bill and report be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I demand the yeas and nays on the latter motion.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider except by unanimous consent, as it is a bill which must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my motion.

EXPORTERS OF RUM.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, also reported back House joint resolution No. 318, to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum," with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution provides that the word "and," where it occurs in said act after the word "export" and before the words "actually contracted," be changed into "or;" so the corrected act shall read, "intended for export or actually contracted for."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTEREST ON THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask consent to introduce a bill to equalize taxation and reduce the interest on the public debt, for reference to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill be reported.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I only desire to have it referred.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to hear what it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] demands the regular order, which excludes all business but that which is privileged. This, therefore, cannot be considered unless the gentleman withdraws his demand.

Mr. ORTH. I am willing myself to do so, but there are gentlemen around me who insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill is, then, not before the House.

DIVISION OF TEXAS.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Reconstruction, who have been some time considering the matter, have come to a unanimous agreement to report back the bill which was sent to them for perfection (H. R. No. 1203) to provide for the erection of not more than two additional States out of the territory of the State of Texas, and for other purposes, with one amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Does the gentleman expect to put it on its passage to-day?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. That was the intention.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope that will not be done. I did not expect it would be disposed of to-day.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. What day would suit the gentleman better? If the gentleman will fix a day I am willing it should be done.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know about the state of business before the House. Let the bill be printed and recommitted.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I have received letters and telegrams from the convention. They are very anxious we should act upon the bill so that they may act. I will consent, however, to have it printed and recommitted, and I will consult the gentleman when to call it up.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is this a subject upon which the committee can report at any time?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BECK. Will not the gentleman agree to fix Wednesday next, when Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. BROOKS will be here?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I will not fix any time now, because it might not suit my friends.

Mr. BECK. I desire it should not come up before those gentlemen are here.

The bill was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the House resumes the consideration of House bill No. 1206, to restore to certain parties their rights under the laws and treaties of the United States, pending at the expiration of the morning hour yesterday, on which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. STONE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STONE. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. ORTH. When the morning hour expired yesterday I was opposing the adoption of the proviso to this bill offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I will now say to that gentleman that if he will offer his amendment as a substitute for the proviso now attached to the original bill I will withdraw my opposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will do so. I move to strike out all after the words "provided further," in the substitute, as follows:

That such confirmation shall not affect the rights of third parties, but shall establish simply the title of the claimant as between him and the United States.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all persons who, previous to the passage of this act, have acquired any valid right or title to any of the lands embraced within the provisions of this act under the preemption or homestead laws, or otherwise, shall be protected in their rights.

That amendment will make the bill as it was originally.

Mr. ORTH. I am willing a vote should be taken on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ORTH. Before resuming my seat I desire to say that this bill enables parties to go into our own courts of justice and test their rights under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and also whatever rights they may have acquired under the homestead and preemption laws of the United States. The bill was thoroughly considered not only by the Committee on Private Land Claims, but by the Committee on the Public Lands, and is unanimously reported to this House.

Mr. STONE. In the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WOODWARD,] who left the city yesterday, it has fallen to my lot to give a brief explanation to the House of this bill, and in order to understand it thoroughly it is necessary to refer back to the treaty made between the United States and Mexico. By that treaty the United States agreed to respect all Mexican or Spanish titles, and for the purpose of ascertaining the public lands in the State of California they appointed a land commission, and required landholders, or those who held grants from Spain or Mexico, to exhibit to this land commission the evidence of their titles, and the commission was to decide upon the validity of those titles granted to the parties on appeal, first to the district court, and then to the Supreme Court of the United States. The commission commenced and continued its session, but by the act only two years were allowed the parties to present their claims and have them adjudicated upon. After a while the act was further extended for two years, making four years in all. That time has expired, and it has been found by examination that there are a variety of claimants in California who claim titles under the Mexican and Spanish Governments, who, owing to the short time allowed by the original act of 1851, have not yet had an opportunity to have their claims presented and adjudicated upon. The sole object of this bill is to extend the time one year longer. This is no new bill. It enunciates no new principle. It merely extends the provisions of the act of 1851 for one year from the passage of this bill. There is not a line or a letter in the bill that establishes any new principle whatever, or any principle different from what has been established by the acts of 1851 and 1860, and that principle was simply to distinguish and discriminate between what were public lands in the State of California and what were private lands. These parties only ask to be allowed to go into the courts and establish as between themselves and the United States whether they hold a valid grant under the Mexican or Spanish Government? There has been a variety of claims presented, which, owing to the expiration of the act of 1851, could not be adjudicated.

Some objections were made yesterday to this bill by some of the gentlemen from California; but those objections have now been obviated by the adoption of the proviso offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I will state that this bill has been thoroughly examined by two committees of this House, and they have reported unanimously in its favor. The committee that I represent supposed and believed that the proviso that they had incorporated in the bill accomplished the very object contemplated by the gentleman from California, [Mr. JOHNSON,] and also by his colleague, [Mr. HIGBY.] This bill interferes with no vested rights whatever. It disturbs no man's possessions. It disturbs no man's rights. It merely gives to citizens of the United States the right to go into the courts and establish their title by existing law. What possible objection there can be to the bill I cannot see. I will state that if there is any settler upon the land who has any valid title, by the very terms of the bill he is protected, and the court has to settle that question. It is, in fact, only a bill to open the doors of the Supreme Court of the United States to our own citizens where they have been closed by the lapse of time under the original act as against the United States and nobody else. This bill does not attempt to settle conflicting claims between private individuals. It does not touch or trench on any man's rights. It simply says to the citizens of California, if you have any valid grant derived from the Mexican or Spanish Government that you can prove beyond a doubt before the courts the doors of the courts shall be open to you. The time prescribed by the original act was too short for a State of the magnitude of California. It was found absolutely necessary once before to extend the time to allow all the persons in interest to go into the courts.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would like three or five minutes upon this matter before the question is taken.

Mr. STONE. I would yield to the gentleman with great pleasure, but I have had a great many applications for the floor, and I have had to decline them. I am merely the organ of the committee, and time is pressing. I must therefore decline.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will venture to state to the House that this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Has the previous question been seconded?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Cannot there be some discussion on a matter of this kind?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question.

Mr. HIGBY. I wish to correct one statement of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. STONE,] if he will allow me.

Mr. STONE. I will yield.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman from Maryland stated that this proviso was satisfactory to all the members from California. He was mistaken in reference to myself. I have not said decidedly that I was not in favor of this bill with the proviso, nor have I said that I was in favor of it. I have no right to debate this question, because the gentleman from Maryland has not yielded to me for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are various points in this proviso to which I understand the gentlemen from California have assented, to which I wish to call their attention, because, in my judgment, it will not accomplish what they think it will accomplish. All the squatters on these lands, if the Mexican titles should be upheld, will be driven out in defiance of this proviso and of the homestead and preemption laws of the United States.

Mr. STONE. I have not distinctly heard what was said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the gentleman from Maryland will give me his attention I will say that my point is this: that the proviso which has been here introduced will not accomplish, I think, what the person who proposed it [Mr. JOHNSON] intends to have accomplished by it. If a person has settled upon land claimed under a Mexican grant, the title to which may hereafter be established in the courts of the United States under this bill, then he will not be upon these lands under the preemption laws of the United States, but he will be upon lands to which the United States had no title when he entered upon them, and therefore he cannot avail himself of the preemption laws of the United States, but will be subject entirely to the will of the person who may prevail in the court. But I have a more serious objection, which is this: that by a general law we ought not to open these questions of land titles in California under grants from Mexico. By the law of 1851 a commission was established for the examination of these claims. Parties had a right to appeal.

Mr. STONE. I must resume the floor.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; I hope the House is satisfied that this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. STONE. I cannot understand the force of the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.] The United States by a treaty, in accordance with the law of nations, bound themselves to respect all Mexican and Spanish land grants. The commission which the United States created was merely the mode by which the evidence of these grants was brought to the knowledge of the Government. The Government, by these solemn treaty stipulations with Mexico, pledged itself that it would respect all Mexican and Spanish grants that existed at the time of the date of that treaty and the cession of California to the United States. That is all that this bill asks. All that this bill asks is an opportunity for the citizens of California to show that they do hold valid grants. That is the whole object of the bill.

As I have before said, this bill does not decide any right at all, but simply presents the broad question of allowing the citizens of California to go into court and show their rights under these grants. It strikes me, with all due deference to the gentleman, that it would be a most outrageous breach of faith on the part of the Government toward those who hold these valid Mexican grants to deny them an opportunity to prove them in the only mode known to the law, in the courts of the United States. I now call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STONE and Mr. BOUTWELL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 36.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WINDOM called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. STONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORTH obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. BLAIR, who asked unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill for the relief of Nott & Co.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw that objection. The bill will occupy but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill, after which there will be an opportunity for objection.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of State to examine the claim of Nott & Co., American merchants doing business in China, against the Chinese Government for losses of coin sustained in 1847 by the capture and robbery of the vessel called the Neva; and if in the opinion of the Secretary of State the claim ought to be paid he is authorized and instructed to pay the same, with the rate of interest allowed on other claims, from the time of such loss, out of any funds received from the Chinese Government under the treaty of 1858 for the payment of losses sustained by American citizens; and that the amount be paid to Nott & Co., or the surviving copartner or copartners, or any person duly authorized to be their agent or attorney. The second section provides that the decision of the Secretary of State as to the right of the claimants to be paid, as to the amount to be paid, and as to the parties entitled to receive the same, shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I do not see anything in this bill that goes to show that there has been any settlement or liquidation with the Chinese Government by which it appears that that Government has in its hands money of ours to pay this claim. I cannot consent to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill cannot now be reported.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. STOKES till next Tuesday, and to Mr. ADAMS for one week.

E. R. AND S. W. CLARKE.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Private Land Claims has but one more bill before it, the bill (S. No. 347) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke to certain land in the State of Florida claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government. This matter was by the committee referred for investigation to a member of the committee, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WOODBRIDGE.] I received a note from that gentleman this morning, stating that in consequence of serious illness in his family he is obliged to go home. He left the papers in my hands, but the report is not yet finished. I ask unanimous consent of the House that this bill may be reported on some day next week during the morning hour.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I also object. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. ORTH. Then, Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND,] who when a member of the Senate examined this bill, I report the bill now, and ask its passage at this time. In connection with the bill, I report the petition of the Messrs. Clarke, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk partly read the petition, when

Mr. ORTH said: It is unnecessary for the Clerk to read that document further.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I insist that the reading shall be concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot insist on that. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman presented the petition as part of the report of the committee. I desire to hear the remainder of it read; and I do not think any gentleman has the right to interfere with the reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts can no more insist upon the reading of the entire petition than he can demand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] shall finish an hour's speech after he has commenced speaking.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Can the reading be stopped in the midst?

The SPEAKER. The floor is in the possession of the gentleman from Indiana, who can control how his time shall be occupied. The bill will be read.

The bill provides that the title of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke to a tract of land five miles square on Black creek, south of St. Mary's river, in the State of Florida, and bounded as follows: upon one side by the St. Mary's river, and upon the other side by vacant lands, being the same lands to which an exclusive right to take the timber was granted by the Spanish Government to John Underwood, and upon which he erected a saw-mill in 1805, and which was kept up and continued for many years, shall be confirmed: provided, that nothing herein contained shall operate to the prejudice of any claim which may be set up to said land by reason of any previous sale thereof; nor shall this act in any way prejudice any claimant under the said John Underwood, or any person deriving title or claim thereto under said Underwood, his heirs or assigns, or of any person or persons who may be entitled to preemption rights under any existing laws of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I should like to have the report read or to have some explanation made.

Mr. ORTH. I will attend to that.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Indiana had seen as much as I have in reference to the confirmation of these private land claims, such as the Houmas claim—

Mr. ORTH. I do not yield. I know what I am reporting here this morning as well as the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill arising under the treaty of Florida. It has been before the Senate, and has been very thoroughly examined by the Committee on Private Land Claims in the Senate at the time my neighbor, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND,] was a member of the committee. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont, who is more familiar with the facts than I am.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. How much land does this embrace?

Mr. ORTH. Something over forty sections.

Mr. POLAND. The gentleman from Indiana is making a most unexpected demand upon me. All I can say is that while I was a member of the other branch of Congress this was before the Committee on Private Land Claims, of which Judge Harris was chairman and I was a member, and we gave the case a very full and careful consideration. It was unanimously reported by the committee of the Senate, and it passed the Senate, and only failed to pass the House by some disarrangement of the papers, the division of them between two committees. It seems that one year ago a bill of this same character was examined by the committee of the House and passed by the House; it was really passed by both Houses.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman from Vermont whether there was not a bill passed in this Congress many years ago for the purpose of having these men go before the United States court in Florida, giving them full power to test their right there? They have never done so. The petition, which was not read, sets forth the facts. It shows these parties have never been before the courts; but they come here for us to legislate away the rights of other parties in that land, which were never tried before the courts, without giving us a chance to hear the report read or the petition read upon which it is founded. If men's rights can be taken away in that way let it be understood. I tried to get the petition read. They got relief to go to the courts, but they refused to go to the courts, and now come here for a new bill. The bill was asked to be put off because it had not been fully considered.

Mr. POLAND. I do not know whether the gentleman is addressing his inquiry to me or to the chairman of the committee. As I understand it, these petitioners came to Congress in 1856 applying for the passage of a law like the one now reported, and it was passed in one House, but while pending in the other Mr. Yulee, a gentleman of whom we have all heard something—Mr. Yulee, in the interest of some adverse petitioners, not in the interest of these petitioners or their rights, but of those setting up an adverse interest—had a bill passed giving the privilege to the parties to go into the courts. I do not know these parties were called upon to commence litigation in the courts of Florida more than it was incumbent upon those who were represented by Mr. Yulee. There is as much ground to say the title of these parties is foreclosed in consequence of their failure to go into the courts of Florida as—

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Who is the occupant of the land?

Mr. POLAND. I understand these parties are in possession.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Then what do they want anything for unless somebody brings an adverse claim? If they are not in possession, why not bring a suit to get possession?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. When they have got an act of Congress allowing them to do so.

Mr. POLAND. I understand these persons have been in possession of the land all the while, but by the treaty these Florida titles required confirmation, and it is for that purpose, in order to remove a cloud upon their title, that this bill is introduced. Being in possession they could not commence a litigation, and nobody could commence a litigation against them.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. There is somewhere an act of Congress providing that where anybody occupies lands claimed by two parties either party may bring a suit to test his title.

Mr. ORTH. This is a case arising under the treaty of Florida, by which the United States agreed to confirm titles to all persons who held grants under the Spanish Government prior to that treaty, and it confirms them in their grants.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I inquire whether that ipse dixit of the treaty is not a confirmation, requiring nothing more?

Mr. ORTH. I can only answer that by stating that the practice of the Government has been invariably the other way. In all cases where lands have been owned by individuals prior to the cession of any particular territory, Congress has provided for the confirmation of the titles by special act. This applies not only to lands in Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, but in California and New Mexico. Time and again have acts of Congress been passed confirmatory of these titles. The practice, as I have learned during this session of Congress, has been about this: after a territory has been ceded to the American Government, we have required of the original owners of any portion of it the surrender of their title-papers that they might be recorded among the archives of this Government. Then upon the surrender of such title-papers an act was passed in the case of California for the establishment of land commissioners, and in the case of New Mexico for the establishment of the office of surveyor general in that Territory, and the duty in each case was to collect the titles which the parties had to the lands in controversy, and upon the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in pursuance of the act of Congress, a confirmation of title was made and a patent issued. That is all that is asked for in the present case, as I understand it. I therefore call the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. ORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say that the petition in this case sets forth in these words:

"That a bill was passed by said Congress [that is, in 1859] referring the matter to the district court of the United States for the southern district of Florida for determination; and that no action was had on this act up to this date."

Now, this Congress has passed an enabling act to allow these parties to go into court and litigate their titles. They slept upon them from 1859 to 1861, and then, after being interrupted by the rebellion, they slept upon them from 1865 to 1868. Now, why should we, without any knowledge of the matter, legislate the title into one man and out of another?

Mr. ORTH. We do not do that.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Does the treaty specify any mode by which we can confirm these titles?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not know that it does.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I understood that it provided it by act of Congress.

Mr. ORTH. No, not by any mode; but we have confirmed them by act of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The case stands in this way: here is a treaty some fifty years old or upward, and here is an attempt to establish rights under it after there has been an act of Congress allowing them to come into the courts. Now it is said that this case was examined by a committee of the Senate; that it was passed through the Senate, then that it came to this House and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and they did not see fit to report it.

Mr. ORTH. That is so.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That being so, I think this bill should go to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of having this question examined, because we have no report on this question.

Mr. ORTH. Oh yes; here is a report.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No report that has been read.

Mr. ORTH. But then there is a report.

Mr. POLAND. It seems to me that the argument that is put forth by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is entirely fallacious, and instead of being a reason why the bill should not pass it is the very reason why it should pass. These petitioners and the persons under whom they claim have been in possession of these lands for a great number of years. I do not understand that there is any law by which they can sue a man who sets up some claim to the lands, they being in possession. But for the purpose of removing any cloud upon their title they wanted the usual congressional confirmation. They came here to Congress for it and obtained it in the Senate. Thereupon Mr. Yulee, who was then a member of Congress and who represented some adverse interests, procured the passage of a law by which persons setting up an adverse claim might go into the courts of Florida and have the title settled. They have never seen fit to do so in this long lapse of time.

Mr. ORTH. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. BANKS. I do not know the merits of this precise claim. If it has the approval of the committee of this House, and has passed the Senate, I can believe that upon the facts it is equitable and just. But there is a question of public policy on which I wish to say a word. Where private rights have been claimed under a treaty, and the courts have not been able to award them under the treaty, or where the parties have been in possession and their claim has been resisted, it has been the uniform practice of the Government to pass acts of Congress to meet the facts so far as they were just in those cases.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I would ask whether where one party claims and another party claims against him they have ever come to Congress to have the question settled?

Mr. BANKS. Under the treaty of 1803 acts of Congress of this character have been passed up to 1867, settling the principles of interpretation by which the treaty was to be adjudicated. Under the treaty of 1818 there have been, and there must be, acts of legislation enabling parties to maintain themselves in possession or enabling the courts to decide the claims of parties under that treaty. This I judge to be a case of that sort.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Then pass a general law.

Mr. ORTH. I merely wish to say that this bill reserves the rights of these adverse claimants. It provides that this act shall not in any way prejudice the rights of any claimants under Underwood, or of any person or persons who may be entitled to preemption rights under the existing laws of the United States. I demand the previous question.

The question was put on seconding the demand for the previous question; and there were—ayes 59, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORTH, and BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was put on the passage of the bill; and there were—ayes 55, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORTH, and WASHBURN of Illinois, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 29.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WELKER and Mr. BUCKLAND asked and obtained leave of absence until Tuesday next.

Mr. MARSHALL and Mr. JOHNSON asked and obtained leave of absence for one week.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like to know how many leaves of absence have been granted.

The SPEAKER. Five this morning and seven yesterday.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 486) to facilitate the settlement of certain prize cases in the southern district of Florida, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relating to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House, and the bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 780) for the relief of Martha N. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones.

ABELARD GUTHRIE.

Mr. WINDOM asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, leaving copies, the papers of Abelard Guthrie, in the case of the Wyandotte claim.

IRON-CLADS.

Mr. PILE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the House the report of Captain James B. Eades on the iron-clads of Europe and of this country.

CLERKS, ETC., OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the disbursing clerk of his Department, relative to certain reductions from the amount estimated as necessary for clerks and watchmen in that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TEMPORARY CLERKS IN INDIAN BUREAU.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, asking for an appropriation of $29,600 for extra and temporary clerks in the Indian Bureau, for the year ending June 30, 1869; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GEORGE ABBOTT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the case of George Abbott, late provost marshal of the twelfth district of Illinois, to be relieved from certain responsibility for bounty money; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

RIGGS, BASS, AND PILKENTON.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report by the Adjutant General respecting the claims of J. B. Riggs, William Bass, and William Pilkenton; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DESTITUTE OSAGE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the destitute condition of the Osage Indians in Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not asked that those communications be printed, as it is so late in the session. Should any of these communications be of such a character as to justify their printing, the committees to which they have been referred can ask it.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the president of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, transmitting, in compliance with the act of incorporation, his annual report for the year ending January 1, 1868; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERHAM. There are some twenty or more House bills granting pensions, to which the Senate have made amendments. Those bills are now on the Speaker's table. It is too late in the session for them to be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions with any hope that the committee will get an opportunity to report upon them. The committee have informally examined those amendments, and have instructed me to ask that amendments to certain bills be agreed to, and that other amendments be not agreed to, but that a committee of conference be asked. No debate will be required, and I ask unanimous consent that those Senate amendments be acted upon at this time.

No objection was made.

ALMIRA WYETH.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 411) for the relief of Almira Wyeth was then taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, in these words:

That the name of Almira Wyeth, widow of James M. Wyeth, late a private in company I, seventy-fifth regiment Illinois volunteers, be placed on the pension-roll in pursuance of existing law in such cases, commencing on the 5th day of March, 1863.

And in lieu thereof insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Almira Wyeth, widow of James M. Wyeth, late a private in company I, seventy-fifth regiment Illinois volunteers, on the pension-roll, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 5th day of March, 1863, to continue during her widowhood.

The amendment was agreed to.

JAMES S. TODD.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 523) granting a pension to James S. Todd was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

And to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the passage of this act, and to continue during his natural life.

The amendment was agreed to.

ELIZABETH KANEDAY.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 671) granting a pension to the widow of Henry Kaneday was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment was to make the bill read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Kaneday, the widow of Henry Kaneday, late a private in company I, fifteenth regiment Iowa infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing May 5, 1862.

The amendment was agreed to.

REBECCA JANE KINSEL.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 775) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Erastus Kinsel were taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendments were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca Jane Kinsel, the only child under sixteen years of age of Erastus Kinsel, late a private in company A, one hundred and twenty-fifth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing April 7, 1863, and to continue until she attains the age of sixteen years.

Also to amend the title so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to Rebecca Jane Kinsel."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PERHAM. As to the other pension bills on the Speaker's table the Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

JEREMIAH T. HALLETT.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 525) granting a pension to Jeremiah T. Hallett was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment was to insert after the word "infantry" the words "and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jeremiah T. Hallett, late a member of company I, first United States infantry, and to allow and pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, commencing March 10, 1864.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

MAHALA A. STRAIGHT.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 373) to place the name of Mahala A. Straight upon the pension-roll of the United States were taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendments were to strike out "A" after "Mahala;" and insert "M;" to insert after the word "deceased" the words "late a private in company E, one hundred and twenty-ninth regiment Illinois volunteers;" to insert after the words "United States" the words "and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 5th day of September, in the year 1862, and to continue during her widowhood;" also to amend the title by striking out "A" after "Mahala" and inserting "M."

The amendments were non-concurred in.

JOHN W. HUGHES.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 825) granting a pension to John W. Hughes was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment was to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was non-concurred in.

WILLIAM H. McDONALD.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 773) granting a pension to William H. McDonald was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment was to insert after the word "volunteers," in line seven, the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was non-concurred in.

JOHN D. LAY.

Mr. PERHAM. I move the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the pension bills just acted on by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise for the purpose of moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869. Before making that motion I desire to move that when the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, all general debate shall terminate in twenty minutes, leaving only the five-minutes debate pro and con. on amendments.

Mr. BANKS. Without making any objection to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to give notice, that on next Tuesday, after the morning hour, I shall move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the Alaska bill, the vote having been ordered to be taken on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Chair will regard the Alaska bill as postponed in Committee of the Whole until next Tuesday morning after the morning hour, that bill now having priority by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I wish to understand what is now the order of business in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The first business in order in Committee of the Whole is the deficiency bill.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Illinois propose to take up that bill?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. No, sir; I desire to have considered first the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill, as it is desirable the bill should go to a committee of conference as early as possible.

Mr. SPALDING. Are there not two small appropriation bills pending in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. There are; but they are not general appropriation bills, which have priority in Committee of the Whole over all other business.

Mr. SPALDING. But I had an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he would give way to allow those bills to be taken up.

The SPEAKER. No understanding can change the order of business in Committee of the Whole unless it is the understanding of the committee itself or of the House.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that when the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole all general debate upon the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill terminate in twenty minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill, (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that this bill be laid aside. My object is to have the committee take up two bills making appropriations for benevolent institutions in this District.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. We have entered, Mr. Chairman, upon a new fiscal year, and the last appropriation bill to provide for its expenditures has been reported and is now before the House. The occasion seems a fit one for a brief survey of our financial situation and for a pertinent answer to the many misrepresentations so industriously set afloat in regard to governmental expenditures. A very labored attempt has been made throughout the country by certain parties and partisans to create the impression that the expenditures of this Congress are on a scale of heedless and reckless extravagance. I propose to show that such is not the fact, but that, on the contrary, the expenditures are made with far more regard to economy than distinguished the last Democratic administration that was in power in this country. The question is one of figures and not of argument, and hence I proceed at once to the figures.

It is important at the outset, to a clear understanding and clear comparison of Government expenditures at the present time and the period immediately preceding the war, to distinguish between those expenditures which were the inevitable consequence of the rebellion, and therefore unavoidable, and those which may be to a certain extent controlled by the discretion and the fidelity of Congress. Of those expenditures, which are the direct outgrowth of the rebellion, I count the interest on the war debt and the pensions and bounties to soldiers and sailors. These are expenditures which are not discretionary but are imperatively demanded, unless the nation is prepared on the one hand to defraud its creditors, or on the other to turn its back on the brave men who risked everything that the Republic might survive.

The annual interest on the public debt amounts to one hundred and twenty-nine million six hundred and seventy-eight thousand seventy-eight dollars and fifty cents. The pension-roll for the year will be thirty million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and the bounties due and payable will require about thirty million dollars. These three items, which are not discretionary, amount to the large aggregate of nearly one hundred and ninety million dollars, well nigh two thirds of our total outlay for the fiscal year upon which we have just entered. The fact that so large a proportion of our expenditure is the result of the war, and is unavoidable unless we repudiate our obligations to our public creditors and our heroic soldiers, cannot be too often repeated or too thoroughly impressed on the public mind; for it is idle to denounce these expenditures as extravagant unless we are prepared to withhold them; and whoever proposes to withhold them proposes thereby to put the nation at the same time under the doubly disgraceful stigma of repudiation and ingratitude. If the Democratic party choose to assume that position it is welcome to all the glory of it.

For the ordinary expenditures of Government for the fiscal year which has just begun the appropriations are as follows:

Executive, legislative, and judicial, embracing all Department salaries and expenses.....	$17,480,000 00
For the Army.....	33,081,013 10
For the Navy.....	17,500,000 00
West Point Military Academy.....	302,000 00
Consular and diplomatic service.....	1,206,434 00
Post Office Department.....	2,500,000 00
Indian bureau, treaties, &c.....	2,500,000 00
Rivers and harbors.....	4,700,000 00
Collecting the revenue.....	9,969,000 00
Sundry civil expenditures connected with the various Departments.....	6,020,000 00
Miscellaneous expenses of all kinds, including cost of certain public buildings throughout the country, expenses of reconstruction, expense of closing up Freedmen's Bureau, &c.....	9,000,000 00
Deficiencies of various kinds in the different appropriations.....	2,560,000 00
Making a total of.....	$108,818,447 10

I differ in some items from the recent statement of the honorable chairman of Ways and Means, for I think he included in the expenses of this year a deficiency of thirteen million dollars resulting from the Indian war of 1867; which amount was appropriated and spent last year and has no proper connection whatever with the expenditures of the current fiscal year. And he also includes, incorrectly I think, some twenty-four million appropriations overlapping from the year which has closed to the present. I say incorrectly, because this amount will be offset by a similar amount which overlaps from this year to the next, about the same amount going over each year, and this from necessity owing to the mode of disbursement. I have also made the amount for bounties ten millions less than the chairman estimates, because a large proportion which he includes in this year will necessarily be paid in the ensuing year, when it is hoped the whole matter will be closed, the last soldier honorably paid off, and the Treasury relieved from further obligation in that direction.

Adding together these ordinary expenditures, as I have above, the sum total is found to be one hundred and six million eight hundred and eighteen thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars. If Congress can be accused of extravagance, the accusation must be made good on these figures, or else abandoned, for the other expenditures, as I have already repeated, lie without the pale of congressional discretion or control. A clear estimate of the character of these expenditures may be gathered by comparing them with the outlays incurred under the last Democratic administration. For example, in 1857-58 the same class of expenses in Buchanan's administration were over seventy million dollars in gold, whereas the one hundred and six million eight hundred and eighteen thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars above named are in paper. It must be observed, moreover, that in 1857-58 the population of this country was under thirty millions, whereas to-day it is well nigh forty millions. Adding forty per cent. premium on gold, to bring the expenditures of the two eras to the same standard, and we find the outlays of Buchanan were at the rate of over ninety-eight millions in paper to-day. To this add one third for increase of population, and we find the Buchanan expenditures, adjusted to the scale of to-day, would amount to one hundred and thirty million dollars for the same items that we are paying less than one hundred and seven millions. And in this calculation I have said nothing about the increased military and naval force of the present day, which adds immensely to the account in favor of present economy.

This calculation, stated in these general terms, is far more striking and suggestive when you come to examine details. The Army, for instance, cost during the four years of Buchanan's administration, by the official statement of the Treasury Department, which I hold in my hand, the large aggregate of $86,307,575 55, making an average of well nigh twenty-two millions each year in gold. And at that time the Army consisted in all of nineteen regiments; so that each regiment cost considerably over a million each year in gold. The Army at present contains sixty regiments, and yet the whole appropriation asked for by General Grant amounts to little more than thirty-three millions, a trifle more than half a million per regiment each year in paper. In other words, the Army under the peace establishment of a Democratic administration immediately preceding the war cost per regiment largely more in gold than the Army now costs per regiment in paper under the peace establishment as administered by General Grant. The same scale of expenditure indulged in under the administration of Buchanan would make our present Army cost over seventy millions in gold or a hundred millions in paper; and until the latter figure is exceeded the Democratic partisans of Buchanan can have no ground to charge that Army expenses are extravagant. When we look at the actual amount spent for legitimate Army expenses, we see good ground for the high compliment bestowed by President Johnson when, a few months since, he publicly proclaimed "General Grant's judicious economy as the direct cause of saving many millions to the Treasury." With General Grant's election to the Presidency and the final pacification of the southern States, our Army will at once be reduced and the expenditures of the War Department will be brought to a point so inconsiderable as no longer to be felt as a burden to the tax-payer.

The comparison in regard to naval expenditures at the two periods I have named, are equally suggestive and striking. For the four years of Buchanan's administration the Navy, by the official records, cost fifty-two million six hundred and forty-five thousand nine hundred and ninety-eight dollars and eighty-nine cents—showing an average of more than thirteen millions per annum in gold coin. With a much larger Navy, and with the disadvantage of paper money and high prices, our appropriations this year are a trifle under eighteen millions. Taking the difference in the size of the Navy at the two periods and the disparity between gold and paper and we should be authorized, if we followed the Buchanan standard of expenditure, in appropriating well nigh forty millions for the year's service. These facts are certainly suggestive and instructive.

In our Post Office expenditures, as compared with those of the Democratic regime, the difference is, if anything, more striking than in the relative expenses of the Army and Navy. Besides using up all the postal receipts, the Post Office Department for the three last years of Buchanan's administration made drafts on the Treasury to the amount of over five millions a year, in one year running up to nearly seven millions. During the whole time the Republicans have been in power, the drafts on the Treasury for the support of the postal service have not averaged two million dollars per annum, and with this moderate expenditure we have been enabled to carry on the immense mail service in the interior of the continent and to the shores of the Pacific, through all our remote Territories and sparsely peopled sections, and have also been able to maintain a superb line of mail steamers from San Francisco to Hong Kong and from New York to Rio Janeiro, none of which extraordinary enterprises and expenditures were levied on the Department during Buchanan's administration.

These comparisons might be quite indefinitely continued, exhibiting in each item the same result, and demonstrating with mathematical certainty that when we take into account the vast increase of population and the rapid and unprecedented development of our country during the time the Republican party has been in power, and when we take into further account the fact that we have been all the while subjected as a necessity of the war to the disadvantage of high prices resulting from paper money; taking, I say, these facts into account, I assert and defy contradiction that large as our expenditures have necessarily been they have yet been on a scale of economy and fidelity quite unknown during the last Democratic administration that afflicted the country. And I assert further, and I call both political friend and foe to the witness stand in support of my declaration, that whenever and wherever General Grant has been able to control governmental expenditure, economy, integrity, fidelity, and rigid retrenchment and reduction have been the unvarying result.

Consider further, Mr. Chairman, that while the Republican party has been providing the means for these expenditures, they have been at the same time effecting immense reductions in the public debt and continually and largely reducing taxation. Within the three years that have elapsed since the war closed and the Army was mustered out, we have reduced the public debt between two and three hundred million dollars, and at each session of Congress, while this reduction of the debt was going on, we have taken off millions upon millions of taxation from the productive industry of the nation. At the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, the first that convened after the close of the war, taxes were removed that had the preceding year yielded a revenue of sixty million dollars, and at the second session of the same Congress forty-one millions more of taxes were promptly repealed. The Fortieth Congress has not been behind the Thirty-Ninth in this respect, for we have already repealed taxes that last year gave us a revenue of ninety millions. And to-day the taxes of the Federal Government are so wisely adjusted, and collected from such few sources that no man feels them burdensome, oppressive, or exacting. Demagogues may misrepresent and partisans may assail, but the people know and feel that to-day the taxes levied by the Federal Government are not an oppression to the individual and not a hinderance to the development of the industrial resources of the land.

The history of the Republican party, Mr. Chairman, is indeed a proud record. Inheriting a bankrupt Treasury, a dishonored credit, and a gigantic rebellion from the traitorous Administration which preceded their advent to power in 1861, the Republicans heroically and successfully grappled with and conquered all these obstacles to the life and progress of the nation. They replenished the Treasury; they redeemed our credit; they subdued the mightiest rebellion that ever confronted civil power since Governments were instituted among men; they struck the shackles from four millions of human beings, and gave them every civil right under the Constitution and laws. And while accomplishing these herculean tasks, the Republican party administered the Government so wisely that prosperity has been all the time abroad in the land; great business enterprises have been undertaken and successfully prosecuted; factories have been built; the forest subdued; farms brought under cultivation; navigable rivers improved; thousands of miles of railway constructed; the continent spanned by telegraph wires; the two oceans well nigh connected by a road of iron; the emigrant protected on the remotest frontier; Territories carved out of the wilderness domain; and new States of promise and power added to the national Union.

What other party in the history of this country ever confronted such difficulties? What other party ever gained such victories? But great as its achievements have been, its work is not yet finished. Out of the fierce conflicts of the recent past, conflicts indeed still raging, order and harmony, conciliation and friendship, are yet to be evoked; not, indeed, by unwise concession and timid compromise, but by that firm policy which is based on Right, and under the leadership of one, who, so terribly earnest in war, is yet to-day the embodiment of peace, the conservator of public justice, the hope of the loyal millions!

The CHAIRMAN. All general debate is now closed.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that there is no truth in the remark of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] that the Republican party put down the rebellion. Had not the Democrats shouldered their muskets and gone into the ranks the rebellion would never have been put down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move pro forma to amend the first amendment of the Senate, my object being to say that the Senate has made two hundred and twenty-seven amendments to this bill. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in about fifty of the amendments and non-concurrence in the remainder, so that they may go to a committee of conference for adjustment. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

First amendment:

On page 3, after the word "dollars," in line forty-four, insert, "clerk to Committee on Appropriations, $3,220."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

On page 3, in line fifty-two, strike out "$864" and insert "$1,000;" so that the clause will read: One special policeman, $1,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

In the paragraph for the compensation of the clerks, &c., of the Senate, make the total $100,920 80, instead of $98,704.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so the paragraph will read:

For contingent expenses of the Senate, namely; For stationery, $10,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Strike out the words "For newspapers, $5,000," and in lieu thereof insert the following: For newspapers and stationery for seventy-four Senators, to the amount of $125 each, $9,250.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Strike out "second" and insert "third," so the paragraph will read:

For reporting and printing the proceedings in the Daily Globe for the third session of the Fortieth Congress, $15,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh and eighth amendments:

Strike out "three thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred," and strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten;" so the paragraph will read:

For paying the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, according to the number of copies taken, one cent for every five pages exceeding fifteen hundred, including the indexes and the laws of the United States, $10,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

Strike out "$3,500" and insert "$1,000;" so the paragraph will read:

For packing boxes for Senators, $1,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

Strike out "$11,520" and insert "$6,520;" so the paragraph under the head of the House of Representatives will read:

Twelve messengers during the session, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, $6,520.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

Strike out the following:

Capitol police:

For the Capitol police, $64,000.

And in lieu thereof insert:

For one captain, $2,088; two lieutenants, at $1,800 each, $3,600; thirty privates, at $1,584 each, $47,520; twelve watchmen, at $1,000 each, $12,000; one superintendent in the crypt, $1,440; uniforms, $4,600; contingent expenses, $500; making in all, $71,748; one half to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate, and the other half into the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. COBB. I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment. I move to strike out the words "one superintendent in the crypt, $1,440," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For thirteen watchmen, including the superintendent in the crypt, at $1,400 each, $18,200.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let this be non-concurred in by the House, and let it go to a committee of conference, and they will have control of the whole matter. I think it likely his amendment is a good one. The section was non-concurred in to be sent to the committee of conference, in order that it may be made more perfect.

Mr. COBB. I hope, then, that the gentleman from Illinois will give my amendment his attention.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not know that I will be on the committee of conference. I have no doubt it will be made more satisfactory in the committee of conference.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Twelfth amendment:

Strike out "three thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred;" so the paragraph will read:

For paying the publishers of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, according to the number of copies taken, one cent for every five pages exceeding fifteen hundred, including the indexes and the laws of the United States, $9,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirteenth amendment:

Strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-two;" so that it will read:

For folding documents, including materials, $42,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

Strike out "twelve" and insert "five;" so that it will read:

For laborers, $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifteenth amendment:

Strike out "seventy" and insert "fifty;" so that it will read:

For miscellaneous items, $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

Strike out the following:

For newspapers, $12,500.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

For stationery and newspapers for two hundred and fifty members and delegates, to the amount of $125 each, $31,250.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

Strike out "$16,000" and insert "$6,720;" so that it will read:

For twenty-five pages and three temporary mail boys, $6,720.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

Strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen;" so that it will read:

For stationery $15,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Nineteenth amendment:

After the word "dollars" insert the following:

Provided, That the salary of the foreman of binding in the Government Printing Office shall hereafter be $1,800 per annum.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twentieth and twenty-first amendments:

Strike out "four" and insert "three;" strike out "$3,456" and insert "$2,592;" so that it will read:

For three laborers, at $864 each, $2,592.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Twenty-second and twenty-third amendments:

Strike out "two" and insert "three;" strike out "$2,880" and insert "$1,320;" so that it will read:

For three assistant librarians, at $1,440 each, $4,320.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth amendments:

Strike out "three" and insert "five;" strike out "three" and insert "four;" so that it will read:

For Botanic Garden, grading, draining, procuring manure, tools, fuel, and repairs, and purchasing trees and shrubs, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $5,400.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh amendments:

Strike out "seven" and insert "eleven;" strike out "$374 96" and insert "$296;" so that it will read:

For pay of superintendent and assistants in Botanic Garden and Greenhouses, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $11,296.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

Insert the following:

For the expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign Governments, as provided by resolution approved March 2, 1867, $1,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no judgment of said court for any sum exceeding $5,000 shall be paid out of this appropriation.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the committee will not concur in that amendment of the Senate. The House inserted this proviso, and if it is stricken out some judgment will take the whole amount of the $100,000 appropriated for these judgments in the Court of Claims, and there will be no money left for small claimants.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it falls to my lot to represent the Committee on Appropriations on this question.

The Committee on Appropriations thought that when a claimant had been through the Court of Claims, established his loyalty, established the justice of his claim, and got a judgment, it would not be right then to say that he should not have that judgment paid, whatever might be the size of the judgment. The justice of a judgment does not depend upon its size, and if we undertake to restrict payments to $5,000, there is no reason why we should not restrict it to $3,000, $2,000, or $1,000. We must leave it to the court, if we leave anything to them, to say what shall be the amount of the judgment, and after that judgment has been found by the court which we have established then it is not right and proper that a claimant who has struggled through and established the justice of his claim should be shut off. The Committee on Appropriations, therefore, recommend that the amendment shall be concurred in, and whoever shall vote for concurrence will vote in accordance with the unanimous report of the committee of the Senate, the action of the Senate and the report of the Committee on Appropriations—I will not say how nearly unanimous, because I am not allowed to say it.

Mr. PETERS. I would ask the gentleman whether the sum appropriated was not presumed by the committee to be sufficient to cover large and small judgments?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is what we meant to do, sir.

Mr. SPALDING. I merely wish to remark that if we limit the sum to be paid out of this appropriation to $5,000 we virtually limit the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to $5,000. No member of this committee wishes to do that. We do not expect to cut down the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to $5,000. And if not, why should we limit the payments of money which they adjudicate to be due to within that sum? It seemed to the majority of the Committee on Appropriations that there was no propriety in it at all, and we therefore recommend concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the facts of the case. The Committee on Appropriations and the House of Representatives originally agreed to this proposition unanimously. They appropriated $100,000 for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, and the effect of this provision was to say that the $100,000 should not be gobbled up by any one man who had a great judgment, but should be divided among men who had smaller judgments, under $5,000. I think it is just and right and proper that we should non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to oppose the amendment. This proposition strikes me as simply a stay-law in favor of the United States. It is a confession that the United States is not able to pay its just judgments or its creditors, provided we owe them over $5,000 each. A creditor who presses his demands through this court to judgment can have his money provided the Government does not owe him over $5,000, but not otherwise. By this arbitrary rule the small creditor will have his pay, while the man who credited the Government to the extent of twenty, fifty, or one hundred thousand dollars, perhaps with his all, shall have nothing. Is there any justice in this? Is there any honor in it? Is there any equity in it? Is there any common sense in it? I cannot see that there is, and I shall vote to concur with the Senate amendment in striking out this proviso.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I renew the amendment to the amendment, for the purpose of saying that I cannot see what anybody can expect to gain by striking out this proviso: that is, if we mean to pay our debts. If we do not mean to pay our debts, but propose to go upon the stealing principle, it may be possible that we can commit petty larceny and get along in that way for some years. When this court of claims was originally established, Congress provided that the judgments of that court should be reported to Congress, who made appropriations or not to satisfy those judgments as they chose. But that was found to be a very bad plan. Congress then passed a law making the findings of the Court of Claims conclusive. And now Congress every year makes appropriations, not extravagant, of what is supposed may be necessary to satisfy the judgments of the Court of Claims against the United States. This year we have put the amount very low, at $100,000. Now, what is the use of a Court of Claims, or of providing by law that the findings of that court shall be conclusive, if the amount is to be frittered away, and $5,000 paid to one, and $5,000 to another, &c., the judgment of the court still standing, to run for twenty years it may be? I can see no kind of judgment—I will not use a harder term than that—I can see no kind of judgment in such conduct. The Court of Claims find judgments, and find them conclusively. Instead of asking the claimants to wait until Congress meets at another session, we put into the hands of the Treasurer a certain amount to be paid to them after they have gone through all the expense of collecting in vacation time. Is there anything but what is decent and proper in that? Is there anything but what is just in it? I cannot possibly see why this two-penny system should be adopted. It reminds me of a man I once heard of, about whom it was said that if he owed a dollar he would not pay it all at once, but in ten installments; that he would pay ten cents at one time, and then ride seven miles the next day to pay another ten cents, and so on, because he did not want to pay out too much at once. This is very much like the practice of that old uncle of mine, old uncle Abel. I hope, therefore, that no such system as this will be adopted, but that we will pay what we owe.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to add a single further suggestion which has occurred to me, and to which I do not see the answer. The House some three years ago adopted an amendment to an appropriation bill, in which the Senate concurred, to the effect that no judgment of the Court of Claims should be paid until it was revised by the Secretary of the Treasury. Thereupon the Supreme Court insisted that they would not entertain any appeal from the Court of Claims, because there was a restriction upon the judgment of the court, and they did not intend to adjudicate upon cases of appeal which, when they had given their final judgment, somebody else was to revise; and they dismissed all appeals upon that ground at that time. It therefore became necessary, at the very next session, to repeal that law. And I am not at all certain but what we are going to get into a similar difficulty by putting this restriction upon the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOAN. I desire to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Appropriations have so far investigated this matter as to satisfy themselves that $100,000 will be sufficient to pay all the judgments of the Court of Claims during the coming year?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; this is expected to be enough, with the balance that still remains from former appropriations.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to strike out $5,000 and insert $4,000. There is a peculiar propriety in placing funds at the disposal of this Court of Claims to pay the small creditors of the Government who establish their claims in that court. But Congress has never been willing to give that court unlimited jurisdiction of funds to pay all the large judgments that may be obtained there.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Let me say that so far as the jurisdiction of the court goes Congress has now authorized—it does not every year appropriate the money—the placing in the Treasury of the funds necessary to pay the judgments of the court when rendered.

Mr. KELSEY. We by this bill authorize the placing the sum of $100,000 for this purpose—

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I do not refer to this bill, but to a former law.

Mr. KELSEY. We authorize the appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of paying these creditors whose claims are not large; and there is this reason for it: the man who has been put to the expense of establishing his claim, and has obtained a judgment in the Court of Claims for $5,000 or less, has been put to all the expense that he can bear in obtaining his claim from the Government. Not so with the man whose claim reaches hundreds of thousands of dollars; and this court has jurisdiction of claims to an unlimited amount. But I suppose that the House, in passing the bill in its original form, intended to say that while they were willing that these small judgments should be paid when rendered by the court, they were not willing to give the court the control of the funds to pay these large judgments until Congress had reviewed and passed upon that question. That was the law but a few years ago, when all judgments of that court had to be reported to this House that appropriations might be made, if Congress saw fit, for their payment. I think that that is the proper course to be pursued now with respect to these large judgments. But such a rule would operate oppressively upon the men who obtain small judgments against the Government. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to adhere to the bill as originally passed by the House, that being the best shape in which we can put this matter for protecting the interests both of the Government and of the suitors in the court.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KELSEY.] I think the Senate has evinced good sense in striking out this provision. When we have established a court for the purpose of passing upon these claims there appears to be a propriety in having its judgments carried out. If the court is unworthy of our confidence it should be abolished and some better tribunal established. I know of no reason why a person having a large claim against the Government is not entitled to have that claim paid as well as a man having a small claim. I think there is a propriety in leaving this matter with the court and paying the judgments which they render. But I can see very well that this does not suit the theory of my colleague, [Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois.] His theory is to hoard all the Government funds, and convert them into gold for the purpose of paying the bondholders, while the people who have debts due from the Government may wait. If men have furnished supplies to the Government during the progress of the war to put down the rebellion, and have been kept out of their money for four or five years, the gentleman's theory—and I suppose that of his candidate—is to say to such men, "Stand back, you who have claims against the Government; we have got to convert all our means into gold for the purpose of paying the bondholders, and in the mean time we will draw in the currency; we will subject to financial pressure the poor people of the country; we will hoard our gold as much as we can, that we may turn it into the hands of the bankers and the bondholders." That appears to be the theory of my colleague. All the honest claims of men who have been knocking at the doors of Congress for years receive uniformly the opposition of my colleague; but whenever there is anything that favors the bondholders or the bankers, whenever there is anything that tends to withdraw the people's money from circulation and to impair their ability to pay the onerous taxes which are bearing them down, my colleague is for it. I am very sorry that he is running his presidential candidate into this groove. I hope that when the 4th of July shall have passed by we shall have a candidate to whom the people can look for help in this time of emergency.

Mr. KELSEY. I withdraw my amendment.
Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I renew the amendment. I simply wish to say in reply to my colleague [Mr. Koss] that I do not propose to enter into the question which he has discussed. My position is sustained by my constituents, while his constituents, I believe, have thrown him overboard. [Laughter.] I withdraw the amendment.

On concurring in the amendment of the Senate, there were—ayes 26, noes 23; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rules, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, of the committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-two, noes not counted.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Thirtieth amendment:

On page 13 strike out the following:

For compensation to the Private Secretary, assistant secretary, short-hand writer, clerk of pardons, three clerks of fourth class, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, $18,800.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

For compensation to the Private Secretary, one clerk of class four, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, eight $5,200: Provided, That so much of the fourth section of the act of July 23, 1863, making appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, as authorizes the President of the United States to appoint an assistant secretary, a short-hand writer, a clerk of pardons, and two clerks of the fourth class is hereby repealed.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-first amendment:

Strike out "$353" and insert "$720;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation to the laborer in charge of the water-closets in the Capitol, $720.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

Strike out "$16,080" and insert "$19,296;" so the paragraph will read as follows:

For compensation of a foreman and twenty-one laborers employed in the public grounds, $19,296.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-third amendment:

Strike out "nine" and insert "eight;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation of two watchmen at the President's House, $1,800.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-fourth amendment:

Strike out "$720" and insert "$1,000;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation of the doorkeeper at the President's House, $1,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-fifth amendment:

Strike out the following:

For compensation of assistant doorkeeper at the President's House, $720.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-sixth amendment:

Strike out the following:

For compensation of one night watchman at the public stables and carpenter's shops south of the Capitol, $1,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-seventh amendment:

Strike out "$3,600" and insert "$5,000;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation of five watchmen in reservation No. 2, $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

Strike out "five," and insert "seven;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation of draw-keepers at the Potomac bridge, and for fuel, oil, and lamps, $7,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$720" and insert "$864;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation of furnace-keeper under the old Hall of the House of Representatives, $864.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I understand the furnace-keeper under the House of Representatives does not get as much pay as the one under the Senate. I should like to know how that is. Our employes should receive as much as the employes of the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. We recommend non-concurrence in order to inquire in relation to the compensation of the employes of the two Houses.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. We have a deficiency appropriation bill, which is the proper place for equalizing all those salaries.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fortieth amendment:

Insert: "and Supreme Court room;" so the paragraph will read:

For compensation of the person in charge of the heating apparatus of the Library of Congress and Supreme Court room, $1,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-first amendment:

Insert: "Second Assistant Secretary of State and examiner of claims;" so it will read:

Department of State:
For compensation of the Secretary of State, Second Assistant Secretary of State, and examiner of claims, &c.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does this authorize a Second Assistant Secretary of State?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The Committee on Appropriations refused to appropriate for this officer and this examiner of claims, but the Senate put it in. The committee did not think there was any necessity for this officer.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-second and forty-third amendments:

Strike out "$57,350" and insert "$63,880," as the appropriation for the compensation of the employes of the State Department.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Forty-fourth amendment:

Add the following:

Provided, That the third section of the act of August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act requiring foreign regulations of commerce to be laid annually before Congress,' approved August 16, 1842, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-fifth amendment:

Under the head of "Treasury Department" strike out "five" and insert "eleven;" so it will read, "eleven clerks of class four."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

Strike out "eleven" and insert "twelve;" so that it will read, "twelve clerks of class three."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

Strike out "six" and insert "fourteen;" so that it will read, "fourteen clerks of class two."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

Strike out "six" and insert "fifteen;" so that it will read, "fifteen clerks of class one."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$66,004" and insert "$100,008."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

After the word "dollars" insert "for one chief clerk, $2,000."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

Strike out the words "declared to continue" and insert "continued;" so that it will read, "is hereby continued in force until July 1, 1869."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The next amendments from fifty-two to sixty-six, inclusive, are all of the same character; and the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence. I hope there will be no objection to acting upon them in gross, according to the recommendation of the committee. They relate to the increase of clerks.

No objection being made, the following amendments, in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence, were considered in gross:

Fifty-second amendment:

Insert "six clerks of class four."

Fifty-third amendment:

Strike out the words "in all, $32,940," and insert the words "and for temporary clerks $9,000, in all, $52,700."

Fifty-fourth amendment:

Strike out "seven" and insert "twelve;" so as to read, "twelve clerks of class four."

Fifty-fifth amendment:

Strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read, "twenty clerks of class three."

Fifty-sixth amendment:

Strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-eight;" so as to read, "twenty-eight clerks of class two."

Fifty-seventh amendment:

Strike out "six" and insert "twenty-one;" so as to read, "twenty-one clerks of class one."

Fifty-eighth amendment:

Insert "twelve copyists."

Fifty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$71,470" and insert "$137,000."

Sixtieth amendment:

Insert "three clerks of class four."

Sixty-first amendment:

Strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read, "six clerks of class three."

Sixty-second amendment:

Strike out "seven" and insert "nine;" so as to read, "nine clerks of class two."

Sixty-third amendment:

Strike out "$31,320" and insert "$42,700."

Sixty-fourth amendment:

Strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read, "four clerks of class four."

Sixty-fifth amendment:

Strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read, "six clerks of class two."

Sixty-sixth amendment:

Strike out "$5,360" and insert "$9,360."

In accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, the foregoing amendments were non-concurred in.

Sixty-seventh amendment:

Strike out the following:

And the clause of the act of March 14, 1864, authorizing fifteen clerks of class three, fifty clerks of class two, and one hundred and forty clerks of class one, in the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, is hereby continued in force until the 30th day of June, 1869, and no longer.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-eighth amendment:

Insert the following:

Also one clerk of class four, four clerks of class two, four clerks of class one, one copyist, and two laborers, to be employed as a temporary force.

The committee recommend non-concurrence: The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The amendments from seventy to seventy-eight are all of a like character, and I hope they will be acted upon in gross.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to say that I hope the amendment No. 70 will be allowed to remain. There is an increase of expenses in the money-order office of the Post Office Department, and in the last year there has been a net revenue to the Government of $53,753. Money orders were given last year to the amount of $15,500,000. The number of money orders were eight thousand. Now, there is great necessity for an increase of clerks in consequence of the large amount of business done in that branch, especially as that branch will pay for itself and a great deal more.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask to have these amendments considered in their order.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to concur in amendment No. 70.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have not reached that yet.

Sixty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$49,920" and insert "$64,220."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventieth amendment:

In line four hundred and eighty-seven strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof "nine," so that the clause will read:

For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury, for the Post Office Department, chief clerk, nine clerks of class four, (additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk.)

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-first amendment:

In line four hundred and eighty-nine strike out "twenty-four" and insert "forty," so that the clause will read:

Forty clerks of class three.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-second amendment:

Strike out the words "four of them transferred from Third Auditor's office."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. MAYNARD. I dislike this mode of legislation. It cannot be that all these amendments are wrong. There ought to be some discrimination exercised. This mode of proceeding simply throws the whole legislation on matters of this kind into the hands of a committee of conference. That is the practical effect of it. It does seem to me that the Committee on Appropriations might be able to give us a reason why we should reject an amendment, or why we should not reject it. But a wholesale proceeding of this kind, and to bolster it up by telling us that the committee of conference can fix it, is a mode of disposing of it which I do not think is either very wise or very safe.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will state to the committee, for the satisfaction of the gentleman, exactly why many of these amendments were non-concurred in, while some of them, perhaps, would have been concurred in. They all refer to the number of clerks to be employed in the various branches of the Departments, and in order that the committee of conference might have the whole subject under their control so that they could allow some clerks to go in here and some to come out there and endeavor to arrange it for the best of the public service, after full discussion the committee unanimously came to the conclusion that it was best to non-concur in all, so that these matters could be arranged between the House and the Senate; otherwise the committee of conference would find themselves tied up by a concurrence in this amendment and a non-concurrence in others, and the necessary clerical force in the several Departments could not be adjusted. That is why we recommend what appears to be this wholesale non-concurrence which has attracted the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, and I do it for the purpose of saying a word in answer to the very sensible question of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] as I think, in reference to this particular paragraph, I can give a more specific answer than was given by my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] The Senate amended the paragraph in the manner that has been read, and the Committee on Appropriations non-concurred in their amendments in gross. I received from the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury some inquiries about this matter, and I gave him some memoranda, and this morning he addressed me a note, to be laid before the committee, in which he says:

"From the tenor of your note to Mr. McGrew I fear there is still some misconception in reference to the Senate amendments relating to this office. We have asked for no increase of force, but simply that those clerks, twenty-six in number, that have been transferred from other offices and assigned to duty here, should be placed permanently upon our roll. So far from being an extra charge on the Treasury it is a positive reduction of expense to the extent of the whole twenty-six clerks, the business upon which they are engaged, the money-order system, producing a net income more than sufficient to defray the whole charge. In reference to this point, I beg to refer to the accompanying statement of Mr. Lynch, the very able clerk in charge of that branch."

The following is the statement of Mr. Lynch:

Whole number of orders issued in 1868.....	803,846
Whole number of orders issued in 1866.....	243,709
Increase.....	560,137
Amount received for orders issued in 1868.....	$15,555,327 74
Amount received for orders issued in 1866.....	3,977,259 28
Increase.....	$11,578,068 46
Amount fees received in 1868.....	$117,784 98
Amount fees received in 1866.....	85,799 98
Increase.....	$31,985 00
Amount of expenses allowed in 1868.....	$63,940 47
Amount of expenses allowed in 1866.....	28,664 27
Increase.....	$35,276 20
Net revenue accrued in 1868.....	$53,844 51
Net revenue accrued in 1866.....	90 82
Increase.....	$53,753 69

So that this office a great deal more than pays for the salaries of the clerks necessary to carry it on, and all they wish is that the House shall concur with the Senate in making these clerks a part of their permanent working force.

Mr. SPALDING. I cannot for the life of me see the force of the argument of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] Because the money-order service brings in a slight revenue into the postal department therefore you must increase the number of clerks.

Mr. BLAINE. Not at all; no increase is asked for.

Mr. SPALDING. That is the argument. Now there is an increase of deficiencies in other branches of the Post Office Department, and therefore this increase of revenue should go to make up for that deficiency as far as it goes. The only reason why these clerks are to be made permanent in this Auditor's office of the Post Office Department is that there is some additional profit, from year to year, as the business increases, upon the postal-order system; that is the whole argument. Now, if there be anything in that argument, then we must increase the number of clerks from day to day, from month to month, and from year to year, as the money increases that is received in the money-order branch of the service.

Mr. ROSS. So as to use it up.

Mr. SPALDING. So as to consume it all; that is the idea. Now, I see no earthly necessity for taking this amendment out of the ordinary course. Let it go with the rest to a committee of conference, to see if there is any necessity for this increase. That is the course we have decided to pursue in regard to the other bureaus of the Treasury, and I see no reason for any different course being pursued here. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last three words. I desire to say that the money-order system was put in operation without any clerical force to carry it out. They borrowed clerks from other bureaus. The system was an experiment; it was entered upon with a great deal of distrust. Being an experiment no permanent provision was made for it. It has grown to be a success. But up to this time it has been carried on with a sort of borrowed force, so to speak. This proposition is to provide the requisite force to carry on the system, as it has proved to be absolutely a source of revenue to the Government. It is merely proposed to provide the necessary clerks—and if the business continues to increase in future probably more will be necessary hereafter—to be paid out of the receipts of the bureau. Now, I care nothing at all whether the amendment of the Senate be concurred in or whether it be sent to the committee of conference. But as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] has so captiously explained my motion, I did desire that the grounds upon which I made it should be distinctly understood.

Mr. PAINE. I would inquire of the gentleman if these borrowed clerks are paid under some other appropriation? If they are from some other bureau it is not impossible that in some other part of the bill there is an appropriation to cover them.

Mr. BLAINE. We have cut down enormously in some other parts of the bill.

Mr. PAINE. If the gentleman informs me that the appropriation for these clerks has been cut out from its proper place, so that they will not be paid upon the rolls of the bureau to which they properly belong, then there may be some propriety in making an appropriation for them in this place. But if it be true that they still stand on the rolls of the bureaus to which they properly belong, then it would hardly be proper for us to double the appropriation for their payment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAINE. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate, so as to increase the number of clerks by one. In my opinion the clerical force at present in the several Departments is numerically too great, but the clerical ability is not too great. If we had fewer in number of men, and more ability and capacity than a great many of them possess, and would pay them accordingly, my opinion is that the clerical service in the several Departments would be much better, and would be more efficiently performed than it is now. The condition in which this bill is presented leaves us no alternative but to accept the amendment of the Senate or to reject it as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, and when the bill goes to a committee of conference let them dispose of it as they may think best under all the circumstances. As, however, we have frequently heretofore had the subject of clerical compensation before us when there was no opportunity to debate it, I take this occasion to say that I think it would be more just to the employes of the Government, as well as more conducive to the efficiency of the public service, if the number of clerks were reduced and their compensation increased. We should thereby get more work for the same amount of money, and the employes in the several Departments would be much better compensated than they are now. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to say that, so far as the Departments generally are concerned, I concur in what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has just said. Probably numerically there is a larger force in the different Departments, with the exception of the Post Office Department, than is necessary. While the business of the other Departments has diminished since the close of the war the business of the Post Office Department has been largely increased, as every gentleman must know, by the reopening of mail service in the insurgent States, the appointment of additional postmasters, the keeping of accounts with their various offices, the establishment of new mail routes, &c. The force of clerks in that Department has not been increased in proportion to the increased labor thrown upon the Department, and is not at the present time sufficient for the performance of that labor. As regards the other Departments—the War, the Navy, the Treasury, the State Department, &c.—what the gentleman from Tennessee has said is undoubtedly true.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Seventy-second amendment:

Strike out in line four hundred and ninety, after the words "sixty-four clerks of class two," the words "four of them transferred from Third Auditor's office."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-third amendment:

In line four hundred and ninety-one strike out "thirty" and insert "seven;" so as to read, "seven clerks of class one."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-fourth amendment:

Strike out in lines four hundred and ninety-four and four hundred and ninety-five the words "including additional to two clerks of class three transferred to class four."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-fifth amendment:

Strike out in lines four hundred and ninety-five and four hundred and ninety-six the words "$191,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$229,160;" so as to read "$229,160."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-sixth amendment:

In line fifty-four strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, assessors, assistant assessors, revenue agents, inspectors, and superintendents of exports and drawbacks, together with the expense of carrying into effect the various provisions of the several acts providing internal revenue, excepting items otherwise estimated for, $33,000,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-seventh amendment:

In line five hundred and fifty-eight strike out "one" and insert "two;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws or conniving at the same, in cases where such expenses are not otherwise provided for by law, $290,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-eighth amendment:

In line five hundred and sixty-seven, strike out "ten" and insert "one hundred;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and the several bureaus, including copying, labor, binding, sealing ships' registers, translating foreign languages, advertising, and extra clerk hire for preparing and collecting information to be laid before Congress, and for miscellaneous items, $100,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-ninth amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line five hundred and sixty-seven, add the following:

But the Special Commissioner of the Revenue shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, act as superintendent of the division in the office of said Secretary, created by the thirteenth section of the act approved July 20, 1866, entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes," and called the Bureau of Statistics; and the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint one division clerk at the same salary as the head of division in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall act as deputy to the said Special Commissioner of the Revenue in respect to said bureau, and exercise in his absence all power belonging to him as such superintendent, except the franking privilege, and the office of director of the Bureau of Statistics is hereby abolished.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, with an amendment adding the words "after the 1st of January, 1869."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. The committee agreed to report another amendment to the amendment of the Senate. It has been omitted by mistake. It was to add near the beginning of the amendment, after the words "but the Special Commissioner of the Revenue shall," the words "after the 1st of January, 1869." I move that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. BLAINE was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Eightieth amendment:

Insert the following:

For temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, $150,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to classify the clerks according to the character of their services.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighty-first amendment:

Insert "private land claims and surveys;" so the paragraph will read:

General Land Office:

For Commissioner of the General Land Office, recorder, chief clerk, three principal clerks of public lands, private land claims, and surveys, three clerks of class four, twenty-three clerks of class three, forty clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one, draughtsman, assistant draughtsman, two messengers, three assistant messengers, two packers, seven laborers, and eight watchmen employed in his office, in all, $178,200.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighty-second and eighty-third amendments:

Strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" and strike out "thirty-four" and insert "fifty-eight;" so the clause will read as follows:

For compensation of additional clerks in the General Land Office under the act of March 3, 1855: For one principal clerk as director, one clerk of class three, four clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one, and two laborers, $58,640.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendments were severally non-concurred in.

On the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations the committee non-concurred in the following amendments from the eighty-fourth to the ninety-ninth, both inclusive:

Strike out "$2,500" and insert "$6,300;" so the paragraph will read:

Surveyors general and their clerks:

For compensation of the surveyor general of Minnesota, $2,000, and the clerks in his office, $6,300.

Strike out "$4,000" and insert "$6,300;" so it will read:

For surveyor general of Kansas, $2,000, and the clerks in his office, $6,300.

Strike out "$4,500" and insert "$11,000;" so it will read:

For surveyor general of California and Arizona, $3,000, and for clerks in his office, $11,000.

Insert "and two," and "and seventy-two cents;" so it will then read as follows:

For surveyor general of Nevada, $2,502 72, and the clerks in his office, $14,000.

Strike out "$1,000" and insert "$6,300;" so it will then read as follows:

For surveyor general of Nebraska and Iowa, $2,000, and the clerks in his office, $6,300.

Strike out "three" and insert "four;" so it will read:

For surveyor general of Montana, $3,000, and for the clerks in his office, $4,000.

One hundredth amendment:

Insert the following:

For services of the clerk of the district court of the northern district of Mississippi, as keeper of the records and files of the land office at Pontotoc, Mississippi, from June 4, 1866, to June 4, 1868, $500; and it is hereby made the duty of said clerk, on the passage of this act, to transfer the records and files aforesaid to the register of the land office at Jackson, Mississippi; and the nineteenth section of the act of March 3, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The Committee on appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

By unanimous consent the amendments one hundred and one to one hundred and forty-three, inclusive, were considered in gross, the Committee on Appropriations recommending non-concurrence.

One hundred and first amendment:

Strike out "four" and insert "seven;" so as to read, "seven clerks of class four;" also, strike out "$7,200" and insert "$12,600."

One hundred and second amendment:

Insert:

For four clerks of class three, $6,400.

One hundred and third amendment:

Strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to read: "Eight clerks of class one."

One hundred and fourth amendment:

Strike out "$7,200" and insert "$9,600."

One hundred and fifth amendment:

Strike out "one" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class four.

One hundred and sixth amendment:

Strike out "$1,800" and insert "$5,400."

One hundred and seventh amendment:

Strike out "one" and insert "nine;" so as to read: Nine clerks of class three.

One hundred and eighth amendment:

Strike out "$1,600" and insert "$14,400."

One hundred and ninth amendment:

Strike out "twenty-six" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Forty clerks of class one.

One hundred and tenth amendment:

Strike out "$31,200" and insert "$48,000."

One hundred and eleventh and one hundred and twelfth amendments:

Strike out "four" and insert "nineteen;" strike out "$6,400" and insert "$30,400;" so as to read:

For nineteen clerks of class three, $30,400.

One hundred and thirteenth and one hundred and fourteenth amendments:

Strike out "seven" and insert "forty-two;" strike out "$9,800" and insert "$53,800;" so as to read:

For forty-two clerks of class two, $53,800.

One hundred and fifteenth amendment:

Strike out "three" and insert "four;" strike out "$5,400" and insert "$7,200;" so as to read:

For four clerks of class four, $7,200.

One hundred and sixteenth amendment:

Strike out "two" and insert "one;" strike out "$3,200" and insert "$1,600;" so as to read:

For one clerk of class three, $1,600.

One hundred and seventeenth amendment:

Insert the word "each;" so as to read:

For thirty clerks of class one, at $1,200 each, $36,000.

One hundred and eighteenth and one hundred and nineteenth amendments:

Strike out "four" and insert "fourteen;" strike out "$5,600" and insert "$19,600."

One hundred and twentieth and one hundred and twenty-first amendments:

Strike out "eight" and insert "twenty-four;" strike out "$9,600" and insert "$28,800;" so as to read:

For twenty-four clerks of class one, $28,800.

One hundred and twenty-second to one hundred and twenty-ninth amendments, inclusive:

Strike out "one" and insert "two;" strike out "$1,800" and insert "$3,600;" strike out "one" and insert "two;" strike out "$1,600" and insert "$3,200;"

strike out "two" and insert "four;" strike out "$2,800" and insert "$5,600;" strike out "four" and insert "twenty-five;" strike out "$4,800" and insert "$30,000;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

Office of the Surgeon General:

For two clerks of class four, $3,600; for two clerks of class three, $3,200; for four clerks of class two, $5,600; for twenty-five clerks of class one, $30,000.

One hundred and thirtieth to one hundred and thirty-sixth amendments, inclusive:

Strike out "three" and insert "four;" strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,000;" strike out "four" and insert "two;" strike out "four" and insert "five;" strike out "$5,600" and insert "$7,000;" strike out "three" and insert "five;" strike out "$3,600" and insert "$6,000;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

Office of Chief Engineer:

For four clerks of class four, $7,200; for four clerks of class three, $6,400; for five clerks of class two, $7,000; for five clerks of class one, $6,000.

One hundred and thirty-seventh to one hundred and forty-third amendments, inclusive:

Strike out "one" and insert "four;" strike out "$1,800" and insert "$7,200;" strike out "four" and insert "eight;" strike out "$5,600" and insert "$11,200;" strike out "seven" and insert "twenty;" strike out "$3,400" and insert "$24,000;" strike out "two laborers at $720 each, $1,440;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

Office of Chief of Ordnance:

For four clerks of class four, $7,200; for one clerk of class three, $1,600; for eight clerks of class two, $11,200; for twenty clerks of class one, $24,000; one messenger, $1,000.

The foregoing amendments, from one hundred and one to one hundred and forty-three, inclusive, were non-concurred in, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

One hundred and forty-fourth amendment:

Insert after the words "building occupied by Paymaster General" the words "corner of F and Fifteenth streets."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and forty-fifth amendment:

Strike out "$12,000" and insert "$15,000;" so as to read:

For superintendent, watchmen, rent, fuel, lights, and miscellaneous items, $15,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and forty-sixth amendment:

Insert Solicitor and Naval Judge Advocate General, $3,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the committee will not concur in that amendment. It is a departure from the rule which the committee has acted on in every other case, and I desire for a moment or two to call attention to the facts. On the 2d of March, 1865, we passed an act authorizing the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for service during the rebellion and one year afterward, an officer in the Navy Department to be called the Solicitor and Naval Judge Advocate General, at an annual salary of $3,500. This was passed before the close of the rebellion, on the 2d of March, 1865, for the purpose of continuing the office for one year. It expired one year after the close of the rebellion. At the last Congress we continued this office by making an appropriation of $3,500 for the salary of the solicitor. When the Committee on Appropriations came to consider the matter this session they found that there was no such office; that it had expired by its own limitation, and they very properly refused to make an appropriation.

The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate put in this amendment to pay a man whose office has expired for another fiscal year, the year ending June 30, 1869. Now, sir, I hope the committee will not depart from the rule which it has adhered to in all these cases. Where we found that clerks had been appointed to continue one year after the rebellion, we refused to make appropriations for the reason that there were no such officers to be paid; and I object to continuing an office for which there is no law, and for which I contend there is no necessity. I recollect very well when this office was established, and I have the debate here. It was put upon the ground that it was only required during the rebellion, and nobody asked for it for any longer period of time than one year after the rebellion.

Now, sir, it is said that there is very great necessity for this office. I never knew an instance in which a man wanted an office, when gentlemen could not devise reasons enough why the office should be established and could not show that there was very great necessity for it. I believe the gentleman who holds this position, Mr. Bolles, is an extreme Radical and agrees with me in politics. He is an able lawyer and an honest man, and if we are to have an officer of this kind, I should be very glad to vote to have him receive the appointment. But believing such an office not to be necessary, knowing that it was created for a specific purpose, and that it was stated in the debate that its continuance would not be asked for more than a year after the rebellion, I do hope the House will refuse to concur in the amendment of the Senate, and that we will not at this time commence inaugurating new and useless offices.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would ask my colleague whether he thinks it possible to get rid of an office after it has once been ingrafted on the Treasury?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That will depend on the committee. I hope we shall refuse to concur in the amendment of the Senate and exclude it from this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It becomes my duty once again to represent the Committee on Appropriations in the Committee of the Whole upon this bill. The Committee on Appropriations, with singular unanimity, voted to concur in this amendment. The Committee on Naval Affairs, both of this House and of the Senate, have unanimously concurred in a resolution to continue this office because of its necessity, and it is only because they have not had an opportunity to report, that that resolution has not been before you.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, who says:

"The law which created the office, authorized it 'during the rebellion and one year thereafter,' but the services of a solicitor, or proper law officer for this Department, and I may say for the other Departments, also, are so obvious that I trust it may not be dispensed with. Important questions, some of them requiring laborious legal investigation, are constantly arising, and if there be not a solicitor to give them attention, special counsel must be employed, whose fees in the aggregate would exceed the salary of the solicitor."

I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of War who says:

"I concur with the Secretary of the Navy in the opinion that the discontinuance of the office of Solicitor and Naval Judge Advocate General, would be prejudicial to the interests of the public and of the naval service."

I hold in my hand a letter from General Grant, addressed to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] in which he says:

"General Bolles is brother-in-law of General Dix, our able minister to France. He is a gentleman whom I can vouch for."

"As to the matter of business he wishes to speak about I can say, that in my opinion, the office which he holds in the Navy is of the same importance as the office of Judge Advocate General in the Army."

Now, sir, we have this state of facts: every gentleman knowing this office concurs in the necessity for the office; every gentleman concurs in the ability, propriety of conduct, and legal attainments of the one who holds the office. I am only sorry that my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] has seen proper to introduce this officer to the House as a good Radical, because I am afraid that was a bid on his part to catch some Democratic votes against him. He is a brother-in-law of General Dix. And while I have no doubt he is—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Was not that a bid to catch votes for him?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is a little antidote to a great deal of poison attempted to be put in this case. There are over a thousand cases of court-martial in the Navy; and this gentleman is the only man in the Navy Department with legal attainments to supply the same want that creates a necessity for the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Mr. ROSS. Is this for past services, or for services hereafter to be performed?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. For services to be performed from the 1st day of July (yesterday) until the 30th of June, 1869. The proposition is simply to give him $3,500 a year to carry on this office during the coming fiscal year. My friend from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] asks if we can ever get rid of any of these officers. The Committee on Appropriations have cut off some hundred of them in this very bill, and they are still at the work. We propose where we find a good and necessary officer to keep him, and where we find one that is not necessary to get rid of him.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] admit that this office is no longer legally in existence?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By no means.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I yield assent to a great deal the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has said in regard to this solicitor of the Navy; but I cannot assent to the suggestion that he has said anything which should induce this Committee of the Whole to keep this item of appropriation in here. I object to this way of perpetuating officers without law. If the gentleman is in favor of this principle, why did he strike out these thousands of clerks with their little salaries of twelve, fifteen, or eighteen hundred dollars a year?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They were not wanted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Neither is this man wanted. We never had such an officer in the Navy Department before 1865, and I undertake to say that this office was created at that time merely to give this man a place. We had a solicitor in the War Department, and we discarded him as being utterly unnecessary, and there is no solicitor whatever in the War Department to day. Now, I object to this thing, after the proposition is got through the House, upon the ground that this was got through the House in 1865; I object to coming in at this time and continuing this officer a year longer in this way. If we are to have a solicitor of the Navy Department, then let the Committee on Naval Affairs, who my colleague on the Committee of Appropriations [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts] says recommends this matter, bring in a bill to create the office and to define the duties of the office and fix the salary; and not let them call upon us every time Congress meets here to make an appropriation for the compensation of this man. Mr. Rice, of Massachusetts, who was then chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, and who engineered the proposition through the House at that time, made some remarks which I ask my colleague on the Committee of Appropriations [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts] to listen to as I read them. Mr. Rice then said:

"It will require a year to finish the business which will have accrued in the Department. We desire that he shall continue no longer than his services are necessary."

In the same debate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] said:

"When this subject first came before the Committee on Naval Affairs I was opposed to it in toto. On consultation with the Secretary of the Navy I found that he was compelled to pay out four times the amount to attorneys; and I was willing to agree to it if the office was made temporary. It is only to continue during the rebellion and on year afterward, and to pay the officer $3,500, instead of attorneys four times that amount."

Mr. SPALDING. I ascertain now that it will cost four times as much as the salary of this officer to employ attorneys.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what authority my friend from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] has for making that statement. I do not know what duty this solicitor of the Navy Department has to discharge. I do not know that he has any duty that cannot be discharged as it was discharged prior to March 2, 1865, by an intelligent and competent clerk of the Navy Department. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. TWICHELL. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, it is well known that the Committee on Appropriations have struck out every amendment they could possibly strike out in this bill. This amendment they could not agree to strike out; and I am very glad that they did not. The Senate has adopted this amendment, the Committee on Appropriations have recommended concurrence, and I trust that the House will concur. The Senate has inserted an appropriation of $3,500 for the salary of this officer; and by the adoption of this amendment we shall undoubtedly save to the Government ten times the amount; I know the important duties which this officer performs. The Secretary of the Navy, as well as the Secretary of War, and the General of the Army, testify to the value and importance of his services; and if the gentleman from Illinois has no confidence in any of these officers it is time that he had confidence in somebody.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to say that I have a great deal of confidence in all these men; but neither the opinions of the General of the Army nor the opinions of any other man can influence me to vote against my judgment in this House.

Mr. TWICHELL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment of the Senate; and I would oppose it, if for no other reason, because it is an attempt to revive by legislation in an appropriation bill an office which is no longer in existence. If the Committee on Appropriations of this House had reported this bill with such a provision in it, it would have been, on a point of order, struck out as independent legislation providing for an office not in existence.

Mr. TWICHELL. Let me say to the gentleman that the Secretary of the Navy, in making his estimates, has estimated for the salary of this very officer.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The Secretary of the Navy does not create offices by the estimates which he makes. The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury estimate for all conceivable allowances and officers that they have ever had.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will permit me to say that the rules provide that anything is in order which is necessary to carry on any Department of the Government.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, there is no kind of doubt that any provision contemplating the creation of a new office would be ruled out of order as independent legislation. Therefore the House could not have put it in. The Senate, having different rules, has legislated a new office into this bill, an office which has expired by limitation of time. We are constantly being asked by the Senate to concur in this kind of independent legislation. As my colleague [Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois] has well said, if this officer is necessary why not let the Committee on Naval Affairs report a bill providing for the continuance of the office?

Mr. TWICHELL. The gentleman will permit me to say that this subject has been before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and they unanimously recommend making this office permanent.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Why, then, do they not report a bill to that effect? No such office as this is now in existence. We propose now to provide for the pay of this officer, thereby reviving the office and continuing it for another year.

Mr. TWICHELL. Let me ask the gentleman one question: is there any law providing for the continuance of the Naval School at Annapolis? Do we not continue it by merely making the regular appropriations from year to year?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly; there is a law continuing that school. There is a law establishing a naval school, but the law limits this to one year after the rebellion. I ask the gentleman whether the rebellion has not expired?

Mr. TWICHELL. Not yet, so far as the importance of retaining this officer is concerned.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If that is so, if gentlemen are really of the opinion that the rebellion is not yet over, I cannot hope to convince them. For myself I will not vote to concur in the amendment of the Senate creating this office. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 49; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WASHBURNE of Illinois, and Mr. TWICHELL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 52; no quorum voting.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Allison, Archer, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Boyer, Brownwell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cake, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Covode, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferriss, Fields, Finney, Fox, Glosbrenner, Golladay, Gravelly, Haight, Hamilton, Harding, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Knott, Ladin, Lincoln, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Peters, Phelps, Pile, Polsley, Prayn, Robinson, Root, Schenck, Seofield, Selye, Stokes, Taffe, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Akenman, Robert T. Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation, and finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called and directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 411) for the relief of Almira Wyeth;

An act (H. R. No. 775) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Erastus Kinsel;

An act (H. R. No. 671) granting a pension to the widow of Henry Kaneday;

An act (H. R. No. 523) granting a pension to James S. Todd; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relative to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. There are one hundred and eight members present, and the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TWICHELL] that there will be a vote in the House on this amendment.

Mr. TWICHELL. Very well.

The amendment was non-concurred in, only twenty-five members voting in favor thereof.

One hundred and forty-seventh amendment:

Strike out under the head of "Navy Department" "six" and insert "four," so it will read, "four clerks of the fourth class, $7,200."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and forty-eighth amendment: Insert under the same head "four clerks of the first class, $4,800."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and forty-ninth to one hundred and eighty-seventh amendment, inclusive. By unanimous consent the above amendments, in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence, were considered in gross and non-concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-eighth amendment: Strike out "fifth" and insert "first," so as to read, "First Auditor of the Treasury Department."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and eighty-ninth amendment:

Insert: And revised and certified by the First Comptroller according to law.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and ninetieth amendment:

Strike out "three" and insert "five," so as to read, "for purchase for library, laboratory, and museum, $5,000."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-first amendment:

Strike out "five," so as to read, "for purchase of new and valuable seeds and labor in putting them up, $20,000."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-second amendment:

Strike out "five" and insert "twelve," so as to read, "for grading, forming roads and walks, and improving the grounds, $12,000."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. The reason for the reduction of the amount appropriated for seeds by the Senate from $20,000 to $5,000 is that they proposed to transfer that appropriation and add a little more to the present appropriation upon which the vote is now to be taken, namely, "For grading, forming roads and walks, and improving the grounds, $12,000." The Senate struck out the greater part of the other appropriation for seeds with the expectation of transferring it to this. I therefore hope the amendment of the Senate to increase this appropriation will be concurred in. It only increases the appropriation a very little. It was with that view that I assented to the reduction in the other case. Otherwise I would have opposed it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I think the gentleman had better leave this to the committee of conference to adjust.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I would prefer to concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-third amendment:

Insert the following: Department of Education: For compensation of Commissioner of Education, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class four $1,800, and one clerk of class three, $1,600. For stationery, blank books, freight, express charges library, miscellaneous items, and extra clerical help, $10,600, in all $20,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. SPALDING. I move concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a perfect waste.

Mr. SPALDING. I believe we ought to concur in this. I yield the floor to my colleague.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am exceedingly sorry to hear that the majority of the committee have recommended non-concurrence in this amendment. The Department of Education was established in March, 1867. An exceedingly small amount of money was required to carry it on. I am not as well informed as to what it has accomplished as I would be glad to be and as I presume some other gentlemen here would also like to be, but I am perfectly certain that no one appropriation of the amount of money provided for in the law creating that Department could be applied more advantageously than for the purpose indicated in that act. If any gentleman will look into it, I believe he will find that no act involving no larger amount of money than was involved in that has met with a more favorable response throughout the country and throughout the civilized world than the act of the last Congress establishing this Department. The Government of Great Britain has undertaken within the last eight months to establish a department of education. The moment suffrage was extended to eight hundred thousand Englishmen that moment every thinking man in the kingdom recognized the necessity of immediately providing for a more comprehensive and thorough system of education throughout Great Britain to make suffrage intelligent. A bill was introduced almost the first day of the present session of Parliament to establish a department of education, making the head of it one of the advisers of the queen, to have a seat in the cabinet as one of the regular ministers of the Crown. That bill has been advocated by some of the very best minds in England, and although it is postponed for the present there can be no doubt of its ultimate adoption.

I hope it will not be considered improper if I ask to have the following letter from John Bright read. It was addressed to the United States consul at Sheffield, and was recently sent to me.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCHDALE, January 4, 1868.

DEAR SIR: I write to thank you for sending me a copy of General GARFIELD'S speech on education. I have read it with much interest.

The Department now to be constituted at Washington will doubtless prepare statistics which will inform the world of what is doing in the United States on the education question; and the volume it will publish will have a great effect in this country, and, indeed, in all civilized countries.

You will have observed the increased interest in education shown in England since the extension of the suffrage. I hope some great and good measure may be passed at an early period.

I am, very truly, yours,

JOHN BRIGHT.

GEORGE J. ABBOT, esq., United States Consul, Sheffield.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only introduce this letter to show the importance attached to this subject by our friends in Europe. The statistics given in the preliminary report of the Commissioner of Education are an earnest of what the Department may accomplish if continued and vigorously administered.

It will be remembered that General Grant, in his report as Secretary of War ad interim, recommended that that part of the Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs that referred to education should not perish with the bureau, but should be transferred to the Department of Education, and that a clause of the bill for the temporary continuance of the bureau, which is now in the hands of the President for his signature, carries out that recommendation. I ask gentlemen what they are going to do with it—if they are going to abandon all further efforts to aid the freedmen and the States of the South?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$10,000."

There never was any occasion, whatever, in my humble judgment, for the establishment of this Department of Education; and I am glad to see that the Committee on Appropriations recommend a non-concurrence in the extravagant appropriation of the Senate. There is no analogy between Great Britain and this country in connection with the manner and modes of education. England is a centralized Power, and the question belongs directly to Parliament, whereas in this country the system of education is exclusively controlled by the States and paid for within the States by the people, and there is no justification whatever for this extravagant appropriation. We were told when this bureau was established that it would not cost over five or six thousand dollars.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken. The original bill itself provided for $13,500.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, $13,500; I accept the correction, and here we have an appropriation asked for of $20,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. No, $20,000. Now, let us cut off this appropriation before this incubus is fastened on the Government. The education of our children is best left to the States, and I hope the amendment of the Senate will not be concurred in.

Mr. DONNELLY. I oppose the amendment to the amendment. I think I may say that, in the judgment of every gentleman of this House, the interest of education is the most vital and the most precious involved in our institutions, because our institutions rest upon the theory that the people are intelligent enough to judge of the questions submitted to them for their suffrages, and upon that intelligent judgment rests the very life of the nation. This is an acknowledged fact.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have in the last few years extended to the people of the South lately in a condition of slavery the right of suffrage. We have given that right of suffrage to an immense number of men. We find, if the reports that are published in the papers are to be believed, that a large number of those men just snatched from a condition of slavery are now found voting upon the side of the very men who made rebellion against this Government, and who made that rebellion to keep them in slavery. If the reports in the newspapers are true, in one State thirty thousand men have so voted. Mr. Chairman, if such be the fact, this general suffrage will prove a calamity to the country.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman if this appropriation will educate a single one of those thirty thousand men to whom he refers, in the State of Mississippi, I presume?

Mr. DONNELLY. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It will not educate anybody.

Mr. DONNELLY. I say this state of things will be a calamity, if the ignorance of these men is to furnish a weapon and an instrument to endanger the life of this country. We cannot send suffrage to these people unless we send education to accompany it. And how can we do that? Our system of Government does not permit us to undertake directly the education of the people of the State of Mississippi. But if we have here in this capital of the country an institution which is, as it were, an eye watching the condition of that whole country, in an educational point of view, we shall have reached a great end. We can thus stimulate education there. Nay, more, if education falls short in any of these States, that fact is brought to our notice, and to the notice of the people of the entire country; and the public opinion of the entire country is turned upon the section so defaulting. We ask here for an appropriation of $20,000. Compare that with some other items of appropriation in this bill. We appropriate $40,000—double the amount here asked—for the purpose of publishing the laws of Congress in the States and Territories of the United States. We appropriate $42,000 for the Capitol grounds and for the Botanical Gardens. We appropriated $32,000 for the Congressional Library. It is true, these are all valuable interests, interests that I would not oppose. But how do they compare for a moment with this great, this gigantic interest which will reach over this whole country; and upon which I say the very life of this nation may depend. For where the destinies of this country rest upon the suffrages of an ignorant and unenlightened horde, the safety of this country has ceased, and its institutions are in daily peril.

One more point, and I have done. This Department has been in operation but one year. Why this attempt to massacre it in its very cradle? Why not give it an opportunity to manifest what it can do?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying what I can to aid the Committee on Appropriations to get rid of this excrescence that has grown up on this appropriation bill. There is not to-day, and there never has been, any more reason for having a Department of Education in the city of Washington, than there is for having here a department of music, or a department of architecture, or a department of religion, or anything else of the kind that might be named.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] says that we want an eye here. Well, sir, this is but a glass eye; it has no sight in it; it has no power; it cannot inspect the system of education anywhere in the United States. This Department cannot appoint a superintendent or a teacher anywhere, nor can it recommend a school-book and carry it into any school. It cannot do anything, except to sit here and draw the salaries of its employés and compile such statistics as the State superintendents of schools may see fit to send them without any requirement of law whatever. The reason I want to strike this out now is that it is only a year old. By the time it gets to be three years old it will want at least $100,000 a year; and how much it may want when it comes to be of full age I do not know. Sir, the sooner we turn from this system of legislating upon everything that does not concern us, and devote our attention to those things which we should attend to, the better for the people and the Government. This is a barnacle that has grown on the ship of State, and the quicker we scrape it off the better for the Government and the people.

Mr. PHELPS. It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that much of the opposition to this Department of Education arises from a misunderstanding of the object and purposes for which it was created; and in my judgment this misunderstanding is largely due to the title which has, I think, unfortunately been given it. I think there ought never to have been an attempt to create what is called a "Department" for the purposes contemplated by the act of Congress which established this institution. If the powers and duties which are devolved by law upon the Commissioner of Education, at the head of the so-called Department of Education, had been devolved upon a clerk in the Interior Department, or if even an officer designated a Commissioner of Education had been provided for, with the same powers and duties contemplated by the law heretofore enacted, without any attempt to create a separate Department of the Government for that purpose, I think a great part of the objection and the clamor to which this institution has been subjected would have been obviated. For my part I am not to be imposed upon by mere names. I have examined carefully and repeatedly the act of Congress which established this Department, and I have not been able to find in it anything which is not in my judgment perfectly consistent with the Constitution, and entirely in accordance with the spirit and purposes of a Government such as ours.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman where this Department is located?

Mr. PHELPS. Where all the other Departments are located—at the seat of Government, where it ought to be located.

Mr. RANDALL. In which one of the public buildings?

Mr. PHELPS. If the gentleman had taken the trouble to find out, he would not ask me such a question.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not been able to find out.

Mr. PHELPS. I presume the gentleman has not taken the trouble to inquire.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir, I have; and because I have not been able to find out I make the inquiry now.

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot give the gentleman any more of my time. It is easy enough for him to ascertain where this Department is located. With regard to the fruits accruing from this institution, it certainly could not be expected that in the short period of time which has elapsed since the inauguration of this Department it could have sprung to full fruition. Time must be consumed in breaking the ground and sowing the seed before the harvest can be reaped.

Some unfavorable intimations have been made as to the qualifications of the gentleman who has been assigned to the control of this Department. When this subject was heretofore under consideration in the House, I took occasion to call attention to the character of this gentleman, and to the high and unquestionable testimony with regard to his qualifications. I had read here an extract from Kent's Commentaries, in which Chancellor Kent himself, a quarter of a century ago, spoke in terms of the highest commendation with respect to the educational labors of the gentleman who has been assigned by the President to the control of this Department. From the time when he was thus favorably noticed by Chancellor Kent in the fourth edition of his Commentaries to the present moment, this gentleman has been undeviatingly devoting himself to the cause of education, both in this country and abroad.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POMEROY. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I believe this matter of encouraging education is not a new thing with Congress. If I am correctly informed, it has been the habit of Congress from the earliest days of our Government to make liberal contributions for promoting education in the States and Territories. I know that in my own noble State we are greatly indebted to the munificence of Congress for our system of common-school education. In every township one section of land was appropriated by Congress for school purposes; and the sale of those sections has given to us the greater portion of our common-school fund. I understand that at this moment the young State of Minnesota has a more prosperous common-school fund than any other State in the Union, not excepting old Connecticut; and this has arisen from the liberal donations of public lands by Congress. All the new States have received donations of lands from Congress for the promotion of common-school education. But where will you go to ascertain what has become of these donations, what they have amounted to, what their situation is in each of the States? I ask this question for the purpose of telling you that this is one of the purposes for which this bureau of education was created here in Washington, that the gentleman at the head of it might form a report of the statistics of education in the different States of the Union, and lay that report from time to time before Congress, so that the people of the States might be benefited by it.

I understand the gentleman now at the head of the bureau, who is one of the best instructors in America, confessedly one who has greater experience and capability than any other man who can be named in connection with this subject—I understand he has been diligently employed in gathering this information from the States and Territories and is preparing to lay it before the people of the United States, so they may have the benefit of it. This is one great object in creating the bureau of education. I want to inquire what is Congress coming to? Gentleman say we must wash our hands of the charities in the District of Columbia, not a dollar to go for benevolent purposes. And now when the Senate has appropriated a small pittance of $20,000, under a law enacted twelve months ago, and a law which has found favor throughout the civilized world, where we are commended for it, we are now so niggardly we propose to strike out that appropriation of $20,000, and say there shall no longer be this bureau of education to foster a great interest of the country. I deprecate the policy which would strike down this appropriation as I would deprecate the policy which ties our hands against administering to the charities of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I was somewhat taken by surprise this morning to find the friends of the different schemes have agreed on a scheme with which to carry out this Department of Education. It passed the very night Congress adjourned last year. It had been defeated by my casting vote; but my learned friend from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] came and asked me to withdraw it. I did so. I did not think it was to be taken up and passed immediately. It was passed, and a man about whom I could speak that which would place him in a different position from that which he now occupies, was appointed instantly to this place. When we came here not a dollar had been appropriated to pay him. They asked for a deficiency to pay him; this House refused to pay a dollar for the purpose. They refused to consent to an appropriation for the next fiscal year. I like to hear education eulogized. I have sometimes taken pride in advocating it; but whoever thought of educating the people at the top rung? Whoever, sir, thought of educating the negroes to vote by teaching them Greek and Latin. My friends here are preparing them for freedom by giving them, not a common-school education, but by giving them a high scientific polish. Gentlemen, study your "Hildreth" and your arithmetic a little more, and say how long it took you to get educated. The services of the bureau of education will be lost so far as the negroes are concerned.

What is the bureau of education? It is the gathering up of these facts by a worn-out man, who embodies them in his report. We are told the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] on this subject was much applauded. I have no doubt it was. It was a great speech, but wherein would that help the mass of the people in teaching them how to govern the nation? We have before the House two bills for common-school purposes. I thought we had agreed to that. One of them repeals this educational bureau and substitutes common schools in this District in its place. These common schools would be of some use. We now pay for a portion of the education of the people of this District. We pay a part and the people of the District pay the balance. I ask seriously, do you advocate this measure merely for the purpose of making a glorious speech on the subject of education, or do you make it for the purpose of fitting freemen for the ballot-box? I think no one can doubt what the answer to that should be. I should be ashamed to vote against educating the people. I would track them from the lowest man or boy who could be taught to read and write upward until the sciences would become germane to their condition. But I would be ashamed to begin at the top and establish a school like Oxford or Cambridge, or like the bureau of education, as one of the samples of the efforts of this nation on the subject of education.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by adding one dollar. I do not know, if I were disposed, that I could say anything about the gentleman at the head of this Department that is not known to the members of the House or to the country. It is proper, however, to say that what I do know of him is to his credit, and that I know nothing to his discredit. I rose, however, not for the purpose of general discussion, but for the purpose of suggesting a thought in connection with the condition of education in that part of the country that we are now engaged in politically reconstructing. One of the measures going hand in hand with political construction is educational reconstruction. In my own State—as some of my colleagues know, for they were parties concerned—the inauguration of an improved school system was one of the first things that met them when the Government was reorganized after the close of the war. They are aware how much they lacked of information respecting the state, not of the higher schools, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] says, but of the lower, the primary, the rudimentary schools; how much they needed of the sort of information, to collect and disseminate which I understand to be one of the principal objects of this Department of Education. It seems to me, in view of the condition of affairs in that whole region of country where the establishment of a system of common education to reach all classes of society is a very important part of the processes that are now going on, we need especially, if we ever did, some central agency by which the experience and the results of systems in other parts of the country, where common education has been more highly organized, might be collected. We need it especially and peculiarly, and in that point of view, leaving out every other aspect of the question, it seems to me that this very inconsiderable appropriation of $20,000 might be permitted to stand.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, and come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order, all debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto terminate in fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have failed yet to hear any gentleman tell the committee what it is proposed to accomplish by having this Bureau of Education. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] talked about the danger to our institutions without it. How the safety of the country is to depend upon it he did not tell us. He spoke of the Commissioner of Agriculture and of the importance of that Department of the Government. He spoke of the importance of educating the freedmen so that they might vote intelligently. But how he proposes that the Commissioner of Education, located in some office in Washington—over a restaurant on the avenue, as I believe he holds his office now—is going to educate the freedmen in Mississippi and South Carolina to vote he failed to tell us.

Mr. DONNELLY. I simply desire to say that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has fully answered that question in stating that this institution was necessary to collect information called for by those freedmen.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. We have had a speech from the gentleman from Tennessee, but he did not tell us precisely how this was to be done. The collecting of statistics and publishing them in a book is not going to educate the freedmen. You cannot send out education as the Commissioner of Agriculture does seeds, done up in parcels. You cannot put it up in that way. Education must start from the root, from the home, with the primer and the spelling-book. Education must be patronized by the States, by the establishment of schools, colleges, and institutions of learning. They must be the custodians of the education of the children of this country and of the children of a more advanced age, the freedmen. A Department of Education located here in Washington cannot be the custodian of education; nor can such a department, it seems to me, be of any sort of advantage to the country. You might as well have a department of commerce, a department of mechanics, a department of the Christian religion, or a department of shoe-making; for it is quite as important that the soles of our feet be well protected as that our souls be cultivated; it is quite as important that the understandings which we tread on should be good as the understanding with which we legislate; and you might just as well, it seems to me, have departments of all these different subjects as a department of education here in the city of Washington. It would do as much good. Now, I would like some gentleman to tell us the ways and means, the particular manner in which the Commissioner of Education is going to educate the freedmen how to vote, and the poor children ~~out~~ in the district of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] how to read their Bibles? Perhaps the gentleman can tell us.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] has given an illustration just before he asked his question that seems to me very striking. He says he would like to know whether we need a department to improve the understanding upon which we tread. Now, I do not know but that we need just such a department as that.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. As I do not make speeches for the purpose of getting the opinion of John Bright or of spreading them in the Globe the gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, I will excuse the gentleman of course.

Mr. SPALDING. We have no department of grammar here yet.

Mr. PIKE. The reporters fix up all that.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, to be serious about this matter, I want gentlemen to understand that when the ordinance of 1787 was passed it was one of the fundamental conditions that of every township of land ceded to the United States one sixteenth was to be set apart forever as sacred to the purposes of education.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Was not that for the education of the common people and not of the nabobs of the country?

Mr. GARFIELD. One township at least in every State was set apart for establishing universities, and there were universities established. Gentlemen of this Congress will understand that not all Congresses have been unable to see any importance in fostering the interests of education.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one other thing in regard to this bill. It is not claimed that we should take any control of education in the States. It is not claimed, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] would indicate, that we advocate the study of Latin and Greek to teach the negroes how to vote. But it is claimed that there are seventeen States in this Union that, until a very recent period, had no system of education. The States of the South, with perhaps two or three exceptions, never had a system of education. And next to the love these people just released from slavery have for liberty itself is their love of knowing how to read and write—for entering into the fields of knowledge. They have asked to be educated more earnestly than they have asked any other boon since they obtained freedom. I have in my possession a letter from a man who is nominated for commissioner of common schools in one of these States begging that this department of education may give his State all possible aid and counsel in organizing a system of common schools.

And all through the southern States they want, not teachers merely, but they want to know what the best systems of education are in the various States of this Union, and it is precisely that kind of information which the Department is furnishing, and was established to furnish. We are sending out one hundred and sixty thousand tons weight of agricultural reports every year, and gentlemen send them to their constituents, loading the mails with them, to teach the people better how to sow and hoe and reap. Will you not expend the small amount appropriated by this bill for this Department, in telling the people of this country how best to educate their children and how best to fit them for the high duties of citizens? I shall feel that a wound has been inflicted on the honor of America if this Department shall be stricken down just when it is beginning to live. It was established at the request of the teachers of the country—a body of men who are silently but certainly molding the destinies of the future generations. Shall their modest request for national recognition once granted be so soon denied? I am unwilling to believe that this House will strike down this Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker resumed the chair to receive

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1077) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 318) to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 159) relating to the western Pacific railroad;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 152) to extend the time for the completion of the west Wisconsin railroad; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 154) to admit certain persons to the Naval Academy.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The amendment of the Senate in relation to the Department of Education was under consideration.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to show to the Committee of the Whole that the Senate have put in this amendment which we are asked to agree to $4,300 more than was estimated for.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose they were satisfied that not enough had been estimated for.

Mr. WELKER. I do not propose to discuss the general question of education in this country in the few remarks I propose to make in reference to the amendment of the Senate. I agree with gentlemen who have already made remarks on this subject, as to the great importance of the educational interests of this country. But I do not concede that the establishment of this Department of Education is to furnish the means by which and through which the people of the different States of this Union are to be educated. But I will not discuss this question now. I wish to make a few remarks in relation to the efficiency of this Department of Education, since this Congress created that department of the General Government. Since I have been in Congress I have been connected with the Committee for the District of Columbia. I have taken a great deal of interest in the cause of education in this District. And my venerable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has been chairman of a committee on the subject of a system of common schools for this District. A year ago, in conjunction with a colleague, I introduced a resolution calling on this Department of Education for certain statistical information connected with the educational interests of this District, from which I expected, as I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Public Schools for this District expected, to gain a great deal of information in reference to what plan of education should be adopted in this District. That resolution was passed a year ago; but I have never heard a word by way of report in answer to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. That report has been set up in type for several weeks past.

Mr. WELKER. It may be set up in type; but I have never heard of it, though the resolution was passed a year ago. Now, if this Department is to control the educational interests of this great country, it seems to me that if there was any efficiency in it it could have answered those inquiries in regard to this District within a year after the resolution was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Did not the resolution require the Department to make a complete census of this whole District, which has been done very completely and thoroughly?

Mr. WELKER. It was to furnish a census of the District, together with such other information as would enable us to get up a system of common schools for this District.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. We have three other census bureaus now.

Mr. WELKER. No report has been made. I speak of this to show the efficiency of this Department.

Mr. PIKE. I think there is a minute or two left of the time allowed for debate on this proposition. I wish to remind the Committee of the Whole of the argument of the senior member from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] which is the most plausible I have heard.

Mr. SPALDING. Does the gentleman call me the senior member?

Mr. PIKE. I think the gentleman is older than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELKER] who has just spoken. The gentleman referred to the system of land grants for the support of common schools. Now, I have no doubt the State systems of common schools have worked well. But is it worth while to spend $20,000 a year on this Department of Education, besides the expenditure necessary for paper and printing, in order to ascertain that fact, when the records of the various States will exhibit the facts to any gentleman or any association that desires them, and will send for them through the proper channels?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-fourth amendment:

In lines eleven hundred and forty-three and eleven hundred and forty-four strike out "$6,500" and insert "$9,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of the director, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, chief coinier and engraver, assistant assayer, and seven clerks, $39,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-fifth amendment;

Add after the word "dollars," in line eleven hundred and forty-four, the following:

Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1868, the annual compensation of the weighing clerk shall be $2,500, and the compensation of the calculating, accounting, and warrant clerks shall be $2,000 each.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-sixth amendment:

Strike out "$150,000" and insert "$191,000;" so as to make lines eleven hundred and sixty and eleven hundred and sixty-one read as follows:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $191,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-seventh amendment:

Amend so as to make lines eleven hundred and sixty-two, eleven hundred and sixty-three, and eleven hundred and sixty-four read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, repairs and wastage, in addition to available profits, $69,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-eighth amendment:

Add after the word "dollars," in line eleven hundred and sixty-four, the following:

Provided, That hereafter all the "available profits" of the United States Mint and branches shall be covered into the Treasury, to be expended only by a specific appropriation.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-ninth amendment:

Add after the word "dollars," in line eleven hundred and ninety-nine, the following:

And after the 30th of June, 1868, the annual salary of the Assistant Treasurer at Charleston shall be $1,000, and that amount is hereby appropriated, $22,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Two hundredth amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line twelve hundred and three, strike out "$20,500."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that amendments numbered two hundred and one to two hundred and twenty-one, inclusive, in all of which the committee recommend non-concurrence, be non-concurred in without reading.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that will be done.

There was no objection; and amendments two hundred and one to two hundred and twenty-one, inclusive, were non-concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-second amendment:

Add after the word "dollars," in line thirteen hundred and forty-eight, the following:

And that the district attorney for Nevada shall receive a salary for extra services of $200 per annum, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to audit and pay out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the salaries of the present incumbent and his predecessor, R. M. Clark, at the rate of $200 per annum for their services.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, in consequence of an oversight—the district attorney of Nevada has heretofore received a salary less than that received by all the other district attorneys of the United States. This amendment of the Senate is designed—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will state, if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, that the committee had some doubt about this subject, and hence recommended non-concurrence. I have since consulted with the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. ASHLEY,] as well as one of the Senators from that State; and I now think this amendment is right. I have conferred with the committee, who are now in favor of concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-third amendment.

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of section ten of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1867, be, and they are hereby, extended to one additional newspaper in the District of Columbia from the date of the approval of said act, the same to be selected by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is strange, it seems to me, that the Committee on Appropriations should have recommended a concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The committee first recommended a non-concurrence, but the committee had a meeting this morning, and I do not know what they did.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the printed report non-concurrence; but in the amended report the committee recommend a concurrence.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It was alleged a mistake had been made, and on examination it was found to be true, and this morning it was corrected.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The law now provides advertisements shall be published in two papers selected, I think, by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Two papers having the largest circulation in the District.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does not this refer to advertisements from the Departments?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I am speaking of another section after this.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If I am right, this is the same section which the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads reported a bill to amend, which passed this House unanimously, cutting off a portion of the advertisements which are being published now, as well as the different advertisements from the Executive Departments, in two papers in the District of Columbia, the Chronicle and Star, a morning and evening paper. They publish under this law every conceivable advertisement, from the sale of quartermasters' stores in Nevada—

Mr. SPALDING. That is all remedied.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The evil of publishing in three papers instead of two is not remedied. Why is it necessary to publish in three papers in the city of Washington instead of two?

Mr. SPALDING. Because they are Republican papers.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then I understand the object is to give it to the National Intelligencer, or some other Democratic newspaper.

Mr. SPALDING. No, sir.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. They are published in two Republican papers. Do you want them published in three?

Mr. SPALDING. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Illinois call the "Star" a Republican paper?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Certainly. This is adding fifteen or twenty thousand dollars to the expense.

Mr. BLAINE. Taking this and a following section and it takes off a large amount.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Why not cut off the third paper in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman cannot ask for too much reform in one day.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This is saving at the spigot and letting it run at the bung-hole.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Do not let us starve the Republican papers before next December.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-fourth amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts authorizing the publication of the debates in Congress are hereby repealed from and after the fourth day of March next, and the joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and required to invite proposals for the publication of the actual proceedings and debates in Congress, upon a plan and specifications to be previously published by them, and shall also ascertain the cost of such publication by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and shall report as soon as practicable such proposals and estimate of cost, together with a bill to provide for the publication of the debates and proceedings of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee make no recommendation in regard to this amendment.

Mr. PHELPS. I would be in favor of the proposition embodied in the first four lines of the Senate amendment, because I am in favor of stopping altogether verbatim reports of the debates which take place in both Houses of Congress. I have always thought, sir, the system was a vicious one and an extravagant one, bad in itself and bad in its consequences; but I am opposed to the proposition to transfer away the reporting of the debates of Congress from the hands in which it has been heretofore reposed to those of the Superintendent of Public Printing.

I have heard no reason alleged, either in point of utility or economy, that should induce us to consent to any such change. I shall freely vote for a proposition to entirely dispense with the verbatim reports of the debates; but I am opposed to any proposition to transfer the business from the hands of those to whom it is already confided, and who have done it generally so well.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to say that I am authorized by the proprietors of the Globe to say that so far as they are concerned they would like to have this amendment adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "next," in line four, as follows:

And the joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and required to invite proposals for the publication of the actual proceedings and debates in Congress, upon a plan and specifications to be previously published by them, and shall also ascertain the cost of such publication by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and shall report as soon as practicable such proposals and estimates of cost, together with a bill to provide for the publication of the debates and proceedings of Congress.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

And hereafter no publication of the debates in Congress shall be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. And keep the people in ignorance?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not make this proposition because the committee are unwilling to give the people $20,000 worth of information on the subject of general education, though I might make a comparison of the value of these two appropriations to the people, and might truthfully say that they will learn far less from the Globe than they would from what might be given them by the Department of Education. It is not for that reason, however, that I make this motion. I make it in good faith. I have had lying in my desk for a number of months a proposition touching this subject which I desired some time to submit to the consideration of the House. I believe the newspaper enterprise in this country would publish at their own expense just as good a report of what is said in this House and in the Senate as the people care to read. I believe, moreover, if the Congressional Globe were abolished it would make the debates in this House far more valuable. We would have far less talk for the sake of talk, far less essay writing and essay publishing than is now done. We would save an immense expenditure to the Government, and our debates would be real, legitimate debates. Now our whole system has, in a great measure, reduced congressional debating to essay writing and essay reading, and if any man shall hereafter have the curiosity and patience to wade through the vast masses of these printed volumes and find here and there scattered valuable thoughts; it will only be as the geologist finds coprolites embedded in the strata of the earth. I trust we shall hereafter agree that there shall be no publication of our debates at the cost of the Government. The same thing that I propose is done in England. That Government does not pay for printing the debates in Parliament.

Mr. BLAINE. And never did.

Mr. GARFIELD. And never paid for them, and yet they have very full reports made by the London Times and collected in the volumes of Hansard. I make this suggestion for the consideration of the House. It may not be impossible that we place a much higher value on what we say here than the people do. The Journal of the House shows all resolutions and bills, and our votes on all questions. I think it quite doubtful if the people willingly pay $500,000 a year for our arguments.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to close debate on the pending amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Allow me to say a word?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not withdraw the motion.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I merely rise to inquire of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] whether his latter speech was not the tail end cut off from the bureau of education, [laughter;] and whether he did not intend to have added, after he got the bureau of education pretty well established, that no child should read a newspaper or that no debate in Congress should ever be published so that it could be read, unless it were in Greek or Latin? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw it to allow the gentleman to renew it.

Mr. BLAINE. I renew it. The gentleman from Ohio brings up the English practice. If he wants to bring in a proposition here by which a few gentlemen who occupy front seats or who have accidentally or otherwise a more favorable position, shall have their speeches reported, while Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones are never noticed in the reports anywhere at all; if he wants that kind of a system introduced I do not think he will find a majority here in favor of it. But I desire to say this—and I say it after some degree of examination—that there is no representative assembly in the world that begins to compare for the accuracy and value of its reports of its proceedings with the American Congress. There is no single thing connected with the American Congress that stamps responsibility so much as that everything a man says and every motion he makes goes into the permanent record of the official Globe. I say that if you should abandon that you will have removed one of the strongest possible chains of responsibility connecting the Representative with the constituents, and which is worth three times what it costs, that every man shall be held to account for what he says here to-day, to-morrow, and for the remainder of his public life.

Mr. GARFIELD. The papers will give us all the reports necessary.

Mr. BLAINE. You have that now. If you abolish the Congressional Globe, you will get no more from the Associated Press than you get now. You will get precisely what you get now and not a particle more.

Mr. DONNELLY. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the amendment of the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now in order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope that will be voted down.

The question was taken on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY. I now move to add to the amendment of the Senate the following:

And from and after the 4th day of March, 1869, unless it be previously otherwise ordered by Congress, the proceedings and debates of the two Houses shall be published daily at the Congressional Printing Office, the reports thereof being furnished by reporters provided by each House for itself, in such manner and under such regulations as it may prescribe.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. I submit that that amendment is not in order. It proposes to change existing law.

Mr. DONNELLY. The amendment is germane to the amendment of the Senate. It provides for the very contingency contemplated by the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois. The amendment is germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. DONNELLY. The amendment proposed by the Senate provides for doing away with the existing system of publishing the debates by the proprietors of the Globe. It furthermore provides that the joint Committee on Printing shall invite bids and shall report a proposition to Congress. It does not, however, provide for the contingency which very probably will arise, that Congress, before the 4th of March next, may not have agreed upon any system of reporting, so that when we come here in the following December, we shall have dismissed the proprietors of the Globe from their task and provided no other means for publishing the debates.

Mr. BLAINE. Allow me to correct the gentleman. If there is anything done, it will be done by the Globe.

Mr. DONNELLY. The provision of the Senate is, that all acts and parts of acts authorizing the publication of the debates of Congress shall be repealed from and after the 4th day of March next. And we are told by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] that the proprietors of the Globe do not desire to continue to publish these debates.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg pardon; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. DONNELLY. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. BLAINE. All I said was that the proprietors of the Globe desired to have this amendment agreed to by the House. I have no doubt they do desire to continue to publish the debates of Congress; but they are willing to take their chance, under a new contract, in competition with all others.

Mr. DONNELLY. That is to say, the Senate amendment proposes to dismiss the proprietors of the Globe, and they desire to be dismissed.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not say that.

Mr. DONNELLY. What their wishes are is of no moment to us. We should provide for any contingency that may arise, and not be left at the mercy of the Globe proprietors. My proposition is that in the event that no new arrangement is made by Congress the debates shall be published in the Congressional Printing Office until otherwise ordered.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the committee now rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say something on this proposition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will move that debate be closed in three minutes; and I will give that time to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.]

Mr. PHELPS. I desire two or three minutes' time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 605, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 347) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SITGREAVES asked and obtained leave of absence for ten days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that when the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Senate amendments to the legislative appropriation bill, all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments thereto shall terminate in three minutes.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 30.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were twenty-two in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being one fifth of a quorum) tellers were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Before the tellers are appointed and take their places I desire to suggest that we can probably get through these amendments in ten minutes more. Then I shall ask that the House meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow, in order to take up the deficiency bill, so that if we can possibly get through it we need have no session on Saturday.

Mr. HIGBY. Why not make that proposition now, and then adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suggest that we finish this bill to-night, meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and take up and go through with the deficiency bill, and then adjourn over to Monday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I object. I do not want to finish this bill to-night.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ROSS. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I will withdraw the objection to meeting to-morrow at eleven o'clock if we can adjourn now. I do not want to go any further with the legislative bill to-night.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WASHBURN] objects to my whole proposition, to go through with this legislative bill to-night, meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and take up and go through with the deficiency bill, and then adjourn over to Monday. I understand, however, that he does not object to the last part of my proposition; and as there seems to be an indisposition to continue longer in session this afternoon, I will ask unanimous consent that the House meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock, finish this bill, take up and go through with the deficiency bill, and then we can adjourn over until Monday.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to change the hour of meeting.

No objection was made.

PRINTING TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the tariff bill be printed for the use of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DRIGGS asked and obtained leave of absence till Monday next.

RAILROAD, ETC., IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 1016) granting lands to the State of California for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Vallejo to Humboldt bay be ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the order will be made.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order with reference to the action just taken by the House in regard to business to-morrow. I wish to know whether the morning hour can be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. It can, by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I object to dispensing with the morning hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects to the morning hour to-morrow being dispensed with. If that objection be insisted on, the House cannot go into Committee of the Whole till after the morning hour. All these appropriation bills are made special orders after the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It was a part of my proposition that the House should meet at eleven o'clock, and at once go into Committee of the Whole on the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modified his proposition to meet the views of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WASHBURN;] and the Chair stated that the hour of meeting to-morrow morning would be eleven o'clock.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I am willing that the House shall meet at eleven o'clock; but to-morrow being private bill day, I am not willing to give up the morning hour.

Mr. BLAINE. Is not that objection entirely too late?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not, because in putting to the House the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois the Chair did not state that if it were adopted the morning hour would be dispensed with.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, at any rate, we gain an hour by meeting at eleven o'clock. I move the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House (at five o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BANKS: A memorial from William Cornell Jewett, urging payment for Alaska as a national measure to protect the national honor, and as a people's appreciation—without regard to party—of the life-long public services of Hon. W. H. Seward, and his foresight in acquiring territory near American Pacific possessions, destined to surpass the Old and New World in civilization, commerce, and cities.

By Mr. FERRY: The petition signed by over 10,000 of the business citizens of New York city, respectfully asking for speedy action in the passage of the bill and the appropriation for the construction of the building for the new post office and United States courts in that city, and recommending the adoption of the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, submitted to the honorable House of Representatives June 16, 1868.

By Mr. JUDD: The petition of Z. M. Hall, asking the refunding of tonnage tax paid in error.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of Thomas Stanger and 47 others, glass-workers in Glassboro, New Jersey, complaining of the depression of industry, and praying for such additional protective duties as will revive manufactures and restore prosperity to the country.

By Mr. PAINE: The petition of James Hinds, for enactment of a law for distribution of arms to militia.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 3, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

ADJOURNMENT FOR FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, to-morrow being the anniversary of the birth of the nation, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday at twelve o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I take it that motion ought not to be put until there are more members present.

Mr. JOHNSON. We always adjourn over the Fourth of July.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not always. I remember that Congress met together on the last Fourth, and I think we were in session all day.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let the motion lie over for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the motion to be withdrawn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WELCH presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Florida, praying an appropriation for the purpose of opening the mouth of the St. John's river, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. YATES presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that pensions be granted the soldiers and sailors and the widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER presented the memorial of William Cornell Jewett, protesting against that portion of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment proposing to rank the mission to Austria second class, and that to Belgium and that to Holland as first class; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BUCKALEW presented petitions of journeymen cigar-makers and manufacturers of cigars of the first and second congressional districts of Pennsylvania, praying that a tax of five dollars per thousand be imposed on domestic cigars, and that the tariff on imported cigars may remain unchanged; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the memorial of Junius Boyle, commodore United States Navy on the retired list, praying to be restored to the active list; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the memorial of Z. Jackson, of Colorado, in relation to the charges on freight on the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. McCREERY presented a memorial of citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, protesting against the prohibition of the export of distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PEONAGE IN NEW MEXICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a proclamation of the acting Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, in relation to holding peons in bondage and involuntary servitude in violation of the laws; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 532) to incorporate the Uniontown and Washington City Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported a bill (S. No. 589) to establish certain post roads; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HOWARD. I am directed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 78) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the city of Lawrence, in the State of Kansas, to the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, in the direction of the city of Guayamas, on the Gulf of California, to report it with amendments. In connection with that bill I ask the Senate to receive and order to be printed a copy of a bill now pending in the congress of Mexico for the construction of a railroad through that republic, so as to connect with the line mentioned in the bill which I have just reported. I move that it be printed for the information of the Senate:

The motion was agreed to.

FUNDING AND TAX BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, with amendments. The amendments will, of course, be printed; and now, in order to fix the order of business, I submit the following order:

Ordered, That on Monday next at one o'clock Senate bill No. 207, and also House bill No. 1284, shall be the special orders, and continue as such from day to day until they are disposed of.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand one of those to be the tax bill. What is the other?

Mr. SHERMAN. The funding bill. It is to make the funding bill and the tax bill special orders. I desire to do it so as not to have any struggle about the order of business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to facilitate business, I ask the Senate to allow me to take up for a moment Senate bill No. 207, with a view to have the amendment that I offered the other day to the civil appropriation bill printed as an amendment to that bill, as Senators may want copies of it. I ask that Senate bill No. 207 be taken up for a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 207) for funding the national debt and for the conversion of the notes of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the substitute that I offered to the bill, and offer the following in lieu of it, which I ask to have printed:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form and of such denominations as he may prescribe, redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty, thirty, and forty years, respectively, and bearing the following rates of yearly interest, payable semi-annually in coin, that is to say: the issue of bonds falling due in twenty years shall bear interest at five per cent.; bonds falling due in thirty years shall bear interest at four and a half per cent.; and bonds falling due in forty years shall bear interest at four per cent., which said bonds shall be exempt from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority, and the same and the interest thereon, and the income therefrom, shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties to the United States, other than such income tax as may be assessed upon other incomes; and the said bonds and the proceeds thereof shall be exclusively used for the redemption, payment, or purchase of, or exchange for, an equal amount of any of the present interest-bearing debt of the United States, other than the existing five per cent. bonds and the three per cent. certificates, and may be issued to an amount, in the aggregate, sufficient to cover the principal of all outstanding or existing obligations as limited herein, and no more, but not to exceed $700,000,000, shall be of the issue redeemable in twenty years.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That there is hereby appropriated out of the duties derived from imported goods the sum of $135,000,000 annually, which sum, during each fiscal year, shall be applied to the payment of the interest and to the reduction of the principal of the public debt, in such a manner as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, or as Congress may hereafter direct; and such reduction shall be in lieu of the sinking fund contemplated by the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes, and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the holder of any lawful money of the United States, to the amount of $1,000, or any multiple of $1,000, may convert the same into bonds for an equal amount, authorized by the first section of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and any holder of any of the bonds provided for in the first section of this act may present the same to the Treasurer of the United States and demand lawful money of the United States for the principal and accruing interest thereon, and the Treasurer shall redeem the same in lawful money of the United States, unless the amount of United States notes then outstanding shall be equal to $400,000,000; and such bond shall not be so redeemable after the United States have resumed the payment of coin for their notes.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That any contract hereafter made specifically payable in coin shall be legal and valid, and may be enforced according to its terms, anything in the several acts relating to United States notes to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, from the joint select Committee on Retrenchment, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That four thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment upon the diplomatic and consular service of the United States be printed for the use of the Senate.

JOHN SEDGWICK.

Mr. COLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 96.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue third district California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third district of California, the sum of $3,500, or so much thereof as the proper accounting officer shall, from satisfactory vouchers, determine necessary to secure him a salary of that amount for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, in addition to the amount he necessarily paid out, in currency, in the discharge of his official duties for that year.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN STEAM LINE TO EUROPE.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 939.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 939) to provide for an American line of mail and emigrant passenger steamships between New York and one or more European ports.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. At the conclusion of the reading of the fourth section,

Mr. CONNESS. At this point I desire to say that I should like to have that bill laid over at least for a day. It was reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads when I did not happen to be present. Perhaps that is my own fault, though when I am able I am generally at my post.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator will allow the reading of the bill to be concluded, then, if he desires it, it may go over.

Mr. CONNESS. It is scarcely worth while to consume any more time with it if we desire it laid over for examination. It presents at least a very complicated scheme of putting an American line of ships upon the Atlantic ocean. There is no man in the Union more in favor of having our mails carried in our own ships than I am; but this is a peculiar measure, and I want an opportunity to consider it before it is further acted upon. I move that it be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator will withdraw his motion and let the bill be read, it is all I ask to-day.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well; I will do that.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is but a section or two more to read.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator from California is right. I do not think it is worth while to spend the time of the Senate in reading this bill now. I move that its further reading be dispensed with, and that it be postponed.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the bill will be read through.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. POMEROY. Now, if the Senator from New York or the Senator from California wishes to look further into it, I am willing that the bill shall lie over, and I move to postpone its further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE IN BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor, have directed me to report it back and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Navy to detail two competent and impartial officers of the Navy, and the Secretary of War to detail a competent and impartial officer of the engineer corps, who shall compose a commission, whose duty it shall be to make careful examination of the harbor of Boston, and to report to Congress, at its next session, in what manner the commerce of that harbor and the interests of the United States in the navy-yard at Charlestown will be affected by the construction of a bridge over the water between the main land in the city of Boston and East Boston in the manner provided in an act of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts entitled "An act to incorporate the Maverick Bridge Company;" and it provides that no bridge shall be erected by that company across that water until the assent of Congress shall be given thereto.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Maine reported that resolution, I understand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. A suggestion was made to me by a party in interest that there should be two commissioners appointed by the War Department as well as two by the Navy Department. By the resolution there are to be two from the Navy Department and only one from the War Department. It was thought by this gentleman that the interests of all concerned would be better consulted if there were two from each Department. I should like to submit that suggestion for the consideration of my friend.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think if the Senator reflects he will see that there can be no importance attached to that for this reason: that there are no adverse interests represented by possibility on this commission. The commission is to represent the War Department and the Navy Department. They can have but one interest, which is the general interest of the Government, and they are of course, in presumption of law, entirely disinterested; and then it is the examination of a general fact with reference to the interests of the Government and the interests of commerce.

Mr. SUMNER. I will not make any motion against the desires of my friend.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope not.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAX COMMISSIONERS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 564. It is in reference to the direct tax commissioners in Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 564) for the relief of Hulings Cowperthwaite and Enoch H. Vance, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, in these words:

That all the acts and proceedings of the said Hulings Cowperthwaite, and the said Enoch H. Vance, as such tax commissioners for the State of Arkansas, and all acts and proceedings done by them or either of them under color of authority under said act of June 7, 1862, or acts amendatory thereof, or of their assessments as such tax commissioners, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and legalized, and shall have the same force and effect, and be valid in all respects and for all and every purposes, as if said acts and proceedings had been done and performed by a board of three commissioners properly appointed and constituted and acting in conjunction as contemplated by said act.

And in lieu thereof inserting:

That the acts and proceedings which have been had or performed by any two of the tax commissioners in and for the State of Arkansas, shall have the same force and effect as if had and performed by all three of said commissioners.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the preamble stricken out. I do not know whether that comes after the passage of the bill or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is now in order.

Mr. STEWART. I move, then, to strike out the preamble, in these words:

Whereas Hulings Cowperthwaite and Enoch H. Vance, direct tax commissioners for the State of Arkansas, under the act of June 7, 1862, acted as such tax commissioners from January 1, 1865, until May 25, 1865, without the presence or concurrence of a third commissioner as contemplated by said act, and the Government of the United States recognized their acts as such commissioners during said period: Therefore.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill concerning the tax commissioners of the State of Arkansas."

JUDGES OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 487.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 487) to disapprove an act of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory redistricting the Territory and reassigning the judges thereto was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to disapprove the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, approved January 25, 1868, entitled "An act defining the several judicial districts of the Territory and assigning the judges thereto."

Mr. DAVIS. I should like the Senator from Oregon to give some reason why that measure of the territorial Legislature should be disapproved, why we should pass this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I supposed the honorable Senator was informed on that subject, as the bill has been considered and reported by the Committee on Territories, of which he is a member; but perhaps he was absent at the time. I will simply state that the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory have passed an act by which they have put pretty much all the Territory into one judicial district with the design to legislate so far as practicable the other judges out of office. It is entirely inconvenient to the people and unjust to the other judges. It was produced by some feeling of personal heat or political prejudice, or something of that kind, and the act of the Legislature ought to be disapproved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT FOR FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. JOHNSON. I renew the motion I offered a few minutes ago, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next, to-morrow being the anniversary of our independence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that motion will not be agreed to at this time. There is important business on the Calendar which, if not finished to-day, I shall ask the Senate to sit to-morrow and finish. At a later stage in the proceedings possibly I should have no objection; but now I hope the motion will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before this vote is taken, I wish to appeal to my political friends, to ask them not to adopt this motion at this time. We are coming near to the end of the session. There is important legislation of a political character on the table, which is to be considered to-day, I hope, which may not be finished. There are many other bills that ought to be considered to-day or to-morrow, in charge of my friend from Iowa, [Mr. HARRIS.] On Monday the tax bill and the funding bill will be upon our tables, and we shall be crowded with those. I think we have legislation before us of a character which will justify us in sitting on the Fourth of July to consider it, and dispose of it, if it be necessary. When we have reached near the end of this day's proceedings we can then determine whether it is wise to adjourn over to-morrow or not. Congress has frequently sat on the Fourth of July, and I do not think it will injure us to sit on the same day that a convention of Democrats is to meet in the city of New York. If the Fourth of July is good for one purpose it is for the other.

Mr. POMEROY. If there was not a special order for Monday I should be willing to adjourn over. It is possible that we may complete the business which it is desirable to complete to-day, so that we can adjourn over to-morrow; but as we have a special order for Monday, which will take until the last of the next week, and there are, as the Senator from Vermont has observed, very important measures that ought to be completed to-day or to-morrow, I cannot, at this time, vote to adjourn over. I may be able to do so in the course of the day. If we are to complete our legislation any time this summer, and adjourn before the election, I think we ought to commence our legislation and stick to it day after day until it is completed. There is nothing like completing a subject when we have once begun it. Last year the Fourth of July was a national holiday as much as this year, but we met and held a session.

Mr. JOHNSON. We adjourned directly.

Mr. POMEROY. We held a short session. Congress came together on that day. It was the beginning of the session. If the measure to which the Senator from Vermont has alluded can be got through to-day, there may be good reasons for adjourning over; but I cannot vote for it now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator who submitted this motion to let it lie over until toward the close of the day, and then probably we shall be able to come to a unanimous result upon it. I am satisfied we shall not do anything to-morrow if we do meet. We have met on several Fourths of July since I have been here, but never accomplished anything by it.

Mr. JOHNSON. We sat but once.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir. I have been here three times, I think, on the Fourth of July. I recollect that on one occasion a Senator not now in the body said we should not do any business, and we did not. He objected to everything that was brought forward. I recollect that at another time we met and adjourned without doing anything; and in all probability it would be so to-morrow. But I suggest that we allow this motion to lie over until the close of the day, and then take a vote upon it.

Several SENATORS. Let us dispose of it now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senate will allow this motion to remain to a later period of the day. I think this is akin to a proposition to begin the Fourth of July now. If the Senate holds it under consideration with a view to the consideration to-day of an important measure that is before it, I have no doubt we can finish that bill; but if it is settled now that we are going to take a holiday to-morrow it will begin now.

Mr. CONNESS. I am very sorry to hear the Senator from Maine intimate here that our friends, the New England Senators, would begin the holiday now if this motion should be agreed to. I presume he means them, because he is best acquainted with their habits.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly; as well as the others.

Mr. CONNESS. Senators from our part of the country, where the people are of more steady habits, intend to work this day out, even if this motion should be agreed to, to the end. Now, sir, I am in favor of making to-morrow a holiday,* and I am very sorry to find my friend from Vermont protesting against this holiday above all others—the Fourth of July.

If we should meet here to-morrow we should do no business. We adjourned one session on the Fourth of July, but it was a day of adjournment, which was a kind of holiday. We certainly should not do any business if we met to-morrow, and I hope we shall adjourn over.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think it important to the nation that this day should forever be honored, and that it is becoming the Congress of the United States to honor it by adjourning over, even if the result is that we are obliged to stay here one or two days longer in summer. I expect to be detained here myself, and the only reason why I want to adjourn over is because I think we ought not to treat this day as we do all others on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Corbett, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, McDonald, Morgan, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Ross, Tipton, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wade, Welch, Wiley, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Conkling, Edmunds, Harlan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pomeroy, and Williams—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Cattell, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Trumbull, and Wilson—22.

So the motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating correspondence relative to an alleged practice of the Danish authorities to banish convicts to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 590) to establish the assimilated rank of the staff officers of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD REPORTS.

Mr. HOWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate the annual reports of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the several railroad companies connected therewith, setting forth as required by the twentieth section of the act of 1862:

1. The names of the stockholders and their places of residence, so far as the same can be ascertained.
2. The names and residences of the directors and all other officers of the company.
3. The amount of stock subscribed and the amount thereof actually paid in.
4. A description of the lines of the road surveyed, of the lines thereof fixed upon for the construction of the road, and cost of such surveys.
5. The amount received from passengers on the road.
6. Amount received for freight thereon.
7. A statement of the expenses on said road and its fixtures.
8. A statement of the indebtedness of said company, setting forth the various kinds thereof.

MEDICAL AND SURGICAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate of the condition of the appropriation made by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses," &c., approved July 28, 1866, for five thousand copies of the first volume of the Medical and Surgical History of the War, and for five thousand copies of the Medical Statistics of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, and how much of said appropriation remains unexpended, how much has been expended, and for what purpose, together with the dates and particulars of the expenditures.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 554. It is a short bill, and will take but a few moments.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant to the State of Minnesota, for the purpose of aiding that State in constructing and completing a lock and dam at Meeker's island, (so called,) in the Mississippi river, in that State, and thereby facilitating the navigation of the Mississippi river between the Falls of St. Anthony and the mouth of the Minnesota river, two hundred thousand acres of public lands, to be selected in alternate odd numbered sections by an agent to be appointed by the Governor of the State, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The lands granted are to be selected from the public lands lying within the limits of the State of Minnesota, not more than one section to be selected in any one township; and the selections are not to be made from any lands containing mines of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, nor from any lands to which rights of preemption or homestead have attached. The lands granted are to be subject to the disposal of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota for the purposes mentioned, and no other; and the lock and dam shall be and remain forever a public highway, free from any toll or charge of any kind whatever; and the Legislature is to have power to pass all needful rules and regulations that may be necessary to fully carry out the purposes of the act.

The work is to be done under the direction of the engineer department of the United States according to the plan and estimates submitted by Major General Warren; and if the lock and dam are not constructed within two years from and after the date of the acceptance and disposition of the grant by the Legislature of the State the lands granted are to revert to the United States.

At any time after the selection of the lands, and subsequent to the completion of the lock and dam, the lands granted are to be open for settlement by actual settlers upon paying to the State of Minnesota a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre for the same, which shall be paid by the State to the company who may construct the lock and dam. If at any time prior to the completion of the lock and dam the Government of the United States shall make an appropriation in money sufficient to construct the lock and dam, the grant of lands made by the bill is to revert to the United States. The bill is to have no effect on lands already granted for railroad purposes.

The Committee on Public Lands proposed to amend the bill by adding as a new section:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Minnesota, the further quantity of one hundred thousand acres of public lands, subject to the same restrictions as to selection and sale as are hereinbefore named, the proceeds whereof shall be used in making such improvements in the Mississippi river at the Falls of St. Anthony as may be deemed necessary by the Legislature of said State to protect and secure the existing navigation immediately above said falls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I should like to hear some explanation of this bill. I find that Minnesota has received more lands than any other State or Territory in the Union. I do not know but that this is all as it ought to be and a proper donation of public lands; but still I should like to have it explained so that the Senate may understand it. I find that we have already given Minnesota seven million seven hundred and eighty-two thousand four hundred and three acres of land—more than to any other State. I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. RAMSEY] will make it all plain and clear, and I should like to hear from him.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator from Vermont rather flatters me; but, Mr. President, this is a bill that comes from the Committee on Public Lands, and not from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I have no doubt the chairman of that committee [Mr. POMEROY] will be able to explain what I shall leave unexplained in regard to this bill.

The proposition contained in the bill is a very simple one. The bill was passed by the House of Representatives after thorough consideration, and was well understood there. It almost explains itself. It is an appropriation of two hundred thousand acres of public land, to be selected by sections, one section in each township, and not more than one to a township, so that it avoids the objection of accumulating a great quantity of lands in a body to the exclusion of settlers upon any township of the State. It scatters the selections all over the State.

The improvement for the benefit of which this appropriation of land is made was estimated for by General Warren, known to all the members of the Senate, an officer of the engineer corps of the United States, who was detailed by the Secretary of War under an appropriation made, I think, in July, 1866, for the survey of the Mississippi river. He recommends, with a view of carrying the complete navigation from St. Paul to the mouth of the Minnesota river as far up as the Falls of St. Anthony, that a lock and dam be constructed at what is called Meeker's Island, half way between the mouth of the Minnesota river and the Falls of St. Anthony, and he estimates the cost of that work, in a report bearing date April 8, 1868, at $226,000. It would properly fall within the province of Congress to make a money appropriation for this work; but inasmuch as the liberality of Congress is taxed pretty largely in that way, it was thought advisable to ask the General Government simply to give us lands within our own State. We thought we would not encroach upon the Treasury of the nation to that extent, but would ask the General Government to let us make selections of public lands within our own limits. We thought that in this very unobjectionable form we should be able to get a measure passed providing means for executing this work which otherwise the nation might be under some obligation to do out of the money of its own Treasury. The lands, as Senators will perceive, are to be sold to actual settlers upon the completion of the work.

It is true, Mr. President, that a large body of lands have been appropriated to the State of Minnesota for railroad purposes; but the people of the State have no very direct or immediate interest in them and very little in any way until those roads are completed. That is coming to pass, though slowly. We have probably four or five hundred miles of railroad now completed in the State of Minnesota, the area of which, as the Senator from Vermont will recollect, is as large as that of the two great States of Pennsylvania and New York, so that an appropriation of seven million acres, although seemingly a very large amount of land, is nothing when you consider the great territory upon which these roads are to be constructed. At any rate those grants are in no larger proportion than the grants which have been given to other States of the West. It is a matter of very little consideration, when you take into view the immense amount of country that is to be accommodated by these railroads.

But, sir, not to consume the time of the Senate, I will State briefly that the work for which this bill provides has been estimated for by the engineers of the United States, and it is to be constructed under the charge of those engineers, so as to guard you against any possibility of a waste of the fund. It is a work essential to the improvement of that river, one of the great rivers of the country. The Falls of St. Anthony furnish an immense water-power. The people, not only of Minnesota, but of the whole valley of the Mississippi, are interested in their preservation, and in the completion of the navigation up to the very falls. The falls are utilized almost to their full extent at this time. Lumber is sawed there and shipped to the States below us; flour is being ground there; woolen goods are being manufactured, and the water-power is applied to many other pursuits.

I trust the Senate will not have any difficulty in passing the bill as it came from the House of Representatives with the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not expect to retard the passage of the bill; but I would suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that if he has anything else he wants to pass now is a capital time. I think he could pass a bill granting a million acres as well as three hundred thousand. I observe that this bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, made a grant of two hundred thousand acres of land, and our Committee on Public Lands have added another hundred thousand acres.

Mr. POMEROY. Not for the same work.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But for a different work, and that I have not heard explained.

Mr. RAMSEY. That is to prevent the recession of the Falls of St. Anthony. I have here a letter from General Warren, giving a full explanation on that point. Unless the Falls of St. Anthony are saved by some work of this kind, they will recede and be lost to us entirely. I will read the letter of General Warren:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, expressing the solicitude felt in regard to the breaking away of the rocks and recession of the Falls of St. Anthony, and asking my views concerning the formation of the falls, the danger of their destruction by successive floods, and the injury to navigation above the falls that would result from their destruction.

A brief description of the structure of the rocks at the Falls of St. Anthony is as follows:

The rock forming the bed of the river at and just above the falls is a stratum of hard magnesian limestone, having a well-marked jointed structure, so as to readily separate into large blocks from fifteen to thirty feet square. Immediately in contact with limestone, beneath it, is a layer of clay at about three feet in thickness, nearly or quite impervious to water.

Beneath this clay stratum is a very soft silicious sand rock, easily worn away by the water, and extending downward an unascertained depth, into which the water washes deep holes below the falls. The hard capping rock is thus being undermined, especially in flood stages, and falling off in large blocks, which are subsequently broken up into smaller pieces and carried away by the current.

This is the case with nearly all our waterfalls, but the receding action is much more rapid at the Falls of St. Anthony than at any other existing fall with which I am acquainted.

It is obvious to an observer that at a distant period the falls were at Fort Snelling, the present junction of the Minnesota river, and that they have receded to their present position in the manner before described a distance of about seven miles.

Did this same formation of rock extend indefinitely above the present falls along the river the continued recession might only be considered as endangering the dams and mills in their present location and not to concern the question of navigation. And, as a consequence, the prevention of this wearing away by the water might be considered a mere local interest, and to be provided for by those specially concerned.

But it so happens that the stratum of hard magnesian limestone thins out and rises entirely above the surface of the river a few hundred feet above the present crest of the falls, and further on the soft sand rock alone is to be found in the bed of the river, so that when the action of the stream has destroyed all that remains of the hard layer but a few days will be necessary to lower the bed and produce a continuous rapid far above, not merely destroying the present water-power, but a long reach of navigable channel.

The Water-Power Company at Minneapolis expended in 1866 between thirty and forty thousand dollars in an unavailing attempt to stop this wearing away. The undertaking is a difficult and expensive one, and it is but fair that the protection and extension of the river navigation should lend its aid to that of the Water-Power Company in effecting a common object.

The danger which threatens the destruction of the Falls of St. Anthony requires prompt attention.

The present condition of the falls is further exhibited by the annexed diagram.

On this diagram the banks of the river are represented in green, the water blue, the soft sand-rock yellow, the magnesian limestone brown, and the clay bed pink.

The section is constructed to cut the dam at the point furthest up the stream, from which point the dam inclines downward toward each shore. This apex of the dam is at the upper end of the magnesian limestone, above which the bed of the river is twenty feet deep.

The water is represented falling over the lower edge of the magnesian limestone in two places, four hundred feet apart; the lower one is at the place where the crest of the falls was in 1866, at which time the Minneapolis Water-Power Company put in the apron below the falls to protect them from further wear; the upper place is where the crest of the falls was left after the flood of July, 1867, four hundred feet having been washed away in one flood, notwithstanding the attempt to prevent it. One more like freshet would probably destroy the falls, for only one thousand feet of the magnesian limestone remains, and its thickness diminishes as the recession goes on; it was eighteen feet thick at the crest in 1866, and at the present position of the crest of the falls it is about eight feet thick; hence the present pressing emergency.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. K. WARREN,
Brevet Major General United States Army,
Major of Engineers.

His Excellency Hon. WILLIAM R. MARSHALL, Governor of Minnesota.

Surely nothing need be added to show the importance of prompt action to preserve this great water-power.

Mr. POMEROY. I am glad the Senator from Vermont has called the attention of the Senate to this bill, because it is novel in its character in some respects. It is not exactly in harmony with the general class of bills which have been passed by this body disposing of the public lands. The bills we have passed heretofore with which I have had anything to do, have only given alternate sections, and we have doubled the price of the remaining sections reserved by the Government, so that really the grant was not a donation. I know that the Senator can show that on paper the grants to Minnesota are some seven million acres. That would be the extent of the grants if none of the lands were occupied; but practically, and, in fact, portions of the lands are occupied by settlers, so that perhaps the real grant would only be about half that much.

But, sir, I was saying that this is different from the other grants, because here we propose to allow the State to take one or two sections in each township where there are public lands, without doubling the price of the other lands. In that respect it introduces a new feature, and I wanted particularly to call the attention of the Senate to it. I will state in a word how the committee justified it.

We have been in the habit of making appropriations of money to improve the Mississippi river year by year in some places. The engineer reports, and the committee have evidence, that the Falls of St. Anthony are about to be destroyed. The river has worked back so far that it is believed by the citizens there that one freshet will destroy the falls, so that the water-power and the navigation of eighty miles above will be ruined. They came to Congress wanting some appropriation of money to aid in protecting the Falls of St. Anthony. Now, in the first place, it is difficult to pass a bill making an appropriation of money; and, in the second place, an appropriation of land of this character will answer every purpose, because it will give the State a credit and facility by which she can raise the money with which to improve and save the falls.

There are two grants in the bill now. The first is what was in the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives, to enable the State to extend a canal up to the foot of the falls for the benefit of the lumber interest there. All the citizens on the line of the river below are interested in getting lumber from this section of the country from the immense mills there located. That water-power is an immense power, and is used in preparing lumber for market, and without the canal being built they are unable to run the mills at this time on account of the falls receding year by year, breaking off. The formation is a blue limestone placed over sandstone, and the sandstone wears out under and then the limestone falls, and the falls recede from year to year, until they are now nearly to the head of the rapids.

To obviate the necessity of a donation of money to improve the navigation of the Mississippi river, the committee were induced to report this bill. I want the Senate to understand what it is, and then they can pass it or not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask my friend from Kansas whether he does not think, as the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, he is setting a very bad precedent? Will not other States having public lands be sure to quote this as a precedent, and come here and ask appropriations of land for the improvement of rivers and falls and various other things?

Mr. POMEROY. That matter was a good deal considered by the committee. In the first place, there are no other States that we know of that have got any St. Anthony's Falls to protect and save. There are other States that have rivers the navigation of which they would be glad to have aided; but this is peculiarly important, not simply to Minnesota, but to the whole region of country below, and we thought it very desirable to save the Falls of St. Anthony. I do not want to take up time this morning. I merely desired to have the Senate understand exactly what the bill is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was not present when this bill was considered by the Committee on Public Lands, but I am glad that they reported in its favor, and especially am I glad that they reported the amendment. The destruction of the Falls of St. Anthony would be one of the greatest losses to the northwestern country, not only a loss of the most remarkable water-power perhaps to be found in all that region, but probably the destruction of the navigation of that portion of the river above the falls, so that I think if there be any national work to which we can appropriate a small portion of the public lands this bill provides for such a work.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish simply to say that if it is established that this is a great improvement I shall have no hesitation in voting for this bill. That being taken for granted, as I understand it is, one thing is very certain, that either money would be appropriated out of the Treasury to accomplish it or lands must be given. As it is very certain that the only way in which the whole country can have any benefit from the public lands is by appropriating them to national works, I am very glad to see it take that turn, and I should be glad to get some small share of the public lands for other parts of the country in that way. I think it would be a very great improvement on the present system of disposing of them. They will be sure to go for local purposes entirely unless they are used in this way.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning-hour having expired the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate, being the joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized.

Mr. HARLAN. I think, under the rules of the Senate, there is a prior special order. If I remember the rules correctly, when two special orders conflict, the one assigned first is to take priority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The unfinished business of the preceding day always overrides special orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business overrides any special order.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask then that that joint resolution be passed over informally for the purpose of taking up some district bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot consent to that. This is a measure of great importance, if there is any value at all in it, and if not it ought to be disposed of adversely. After the fate it has had I cannot consent to have it postponed.

Mr. HARLAN. Then I move that it be postponed for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of bills pertaining to the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HARLAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to what the question is, and to state to the Senate that if they postpone this measure, with a view to proceed to the consideration of local business of the District of Columbia, I shall take it as an evidence that the Senate do not desire to consider it and shall give it up. That is all I have to say.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not wish to have the question put with any such understanding. It is probable that I shall vote for the measure of the Senator from Vermont when it comes to be considered; at least I do not wish to pledge myself by an adverse vote to continuing its consideration now, to vote against it on its merits; but I hope this question will not be decided by any such consideration.

Congress has exclusive jurisdiction of the District of Columbia. It is the only legislative body that can make laws for the people of this District. It has been usual heretofore to assign several days during each session of Congress for the consideration of District business. During this session, a protracted session, the Senate has seen proper not to give this committee a single day thus far, and although a day was assigned heretofore, an important bill was permitted to press the consideration of District business from the attention of the Senate; and if the measure in charge of the Senator from Vermont should now supersede the District business, I should hardly have a hope that we could dispose of that business during this session. If the Senate will sustain its previous action on this subject, this day having been formally assigned for District business, I will pledge myself to be as economical of time as possible, and only call up bills which are quite important, and which I think will not elicit very much discussion, and I shall hope to get through with them in the course of an hour and a half or two hours at the outside.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will take no more time to finish this measure now than it will on any other day; and if the Senator supposes that the District of Columbia business can never be considered unless it is considered now, the same may be said of the measure which is regularly under consideration. It will be crowded off, as the Senator from Ohio has given me notice that he will be obliged to insist on Monday upon the consideration of the tax bill and the other bills of that nature. If this measure is to be considered at all it must be considered now.

Mr. COLE. It seems to me the business of the District of Columbia ought to take its place quite at the foot of the Calendar of the business of Congress. It cannot be of so much importance as the business which relates to the whole country. It certainly should not be permitted to take precedence of a measure with regard to the votes of the Electoral College, on which may depend the election of President and Vice President.

Mr. CORBETT. I believe that the District business has been really at the foot of the list through the entire session. One day was set apart for that business, but our chairman gave way in order that another very important bill might be disposed of. This day again has been formally set apart, and I think that by going on with it we can dispose of that business very promptly, and elicit but little discussion. I think it ought to be done. I desire to give my support to the measure of the Senator from Vermont as I understand it, but I am still very anxious that we shall dispose of some of the District of Columbia business, which has been accumulating on our hands, and which it is very important should be disposed of. I hope the Senate will sustain that committee in having this day, which was set apart for its business.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very sorry, on this question of the order of business, to be obliged to vote against considering the measure of the Senator from Vermont; but as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I united with my colleagues there in an instruction to our chairman to move the Senate for a day this week in order to act upon the pressing business already reported by that committee. The Senate will bear in mind that the committee has not had a day during the present session, or at least for a long time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has had a great many bills passed.

Mr. SUMNER. It has had some few bills passed, but there is a great deal of urgent business that has not been attended to, and the Senate cannot forget that Congress has exclusive jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, and that, therefore, it has thrown upon it peculiar responsibilities. Under these circumstances, I do not think the Senator from Iowa ought to lose the precedence that he has gained for the business of his committee by having this day set apart expressly for its consideration three or four days ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He has not obtained any precedence. When that day was set apart every Senator present understood that, by the rules, if there was any unfinished business of yesterday it would be the first business in order to-day at one o'clock, standing first on the list of the special orders. We have made this same order a dozen times this season, and the unfinished business of the day before has been considered.

Mr. HARLAN. The spirit of the rule will not sustain the Senator from Vermont in insisting on taking up his bill. It will be remembered by the Senate that it was called up at the moment of adjournment last evening. It is not, therefore, in point of fact, the unfinished business. It was not before the Senate and being considered when the Senate adjourned. It was called up by the Senator with his usual adroitness, to which I take no exception, just at the last moment in the expiring hours of the session of yesterday.

Mr. SUMNER. In order to oust the District business.

Mr. HARLAN. I will not say for the purpose of ousting that business, for I suppose the Senator would have done the same thing if any other business had been assigned for to-day; but I wish to call attention to the fact that the spirit of the rule of the Senate will not sustain the position of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator forgets that this measure was under consideration before, and was once crowded out, and therefore it was perfectly just to get it on the Calendar again as soon as possible.

Mr. HARLAN. That can be said of a dozen bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Corbett, Davis, Fowler, Harlan, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McCreery, McDonald, Morgan, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Sumner, Tipton, Van Winkle, Vickers, Welch, Willey, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Conkling, Cragin, Drake, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Wade, and Williams—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Cattell, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Trumbull, and Wilson—20.

So the motion of Mr. HARLAN was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In pursuance of what I stated, I take this as an evidence of the disposition of the Senate not to consider the joint resolution, and I give notice that I shall not again ask the Senate to take it up.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 502.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 502) to incorporate the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church, of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill proposes to create Francis H. Smith, N. P. Chipman, Otis C. Wight, A. D. Robinson, Zenas C. Robbins, and their associates, who are now or may hereafter become members of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, in the District of Columbia, under the rules, regulations, or by-laws of the same, a body-corporate under the name of "The Congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington," with perpetual succession, who are to exercise and enjoy all such powers as are usually vested in corporations, and as may be necessary or incident to sustaining religious worship, Sabbath schools, missionary, and charitable enterprises in the District of Columbia, and no others. The corporation is to be exempt from any taxes to be assessed upon its corporate property under the authority of Congress or of the city or county of Washington; but the value of all property so exempt is not to exceed $200,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONNECTICUT AVENUE AND PARK RAILWAY

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 420.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By the bill Augustus B. Stoughton, John Little, John L. Kidwell, George H. Plant, Le Roy Tuttle, G. W. Hopkins, R. M. Hall, and their associates and assigns, are to be created a body-corporate, under the name of the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company, with authority to construct and lay down a single or double-track railway, with the necessary switches and turnouts, in the city of Washington, through and along the following avenues, streets, and highways: commencing at the intersection of Seventeenth street west and Pennsylvania avenue, along the west side of Seventeenth street to its intersection with H street north, thence along Seventeenth street west to its intersection with Connecticut avenue, thence along Connecticut avenue to Boundary street; also, from the intersection of Boundary street and Connecticut avenue along the county road from such intersection, thence on any road opened, or which may hereafter be opened, west of the Fourteenth street road, to within or through the proposed public park, or to the county line of Washington county, with the right to run public carriages thereon drawn by horse-power, receiving therefor a rate of fare not exceeding six cents a passenger for any distance on said road. Should a majority of stockholders so elect, the road, after reaching the intersection of Boundary street and Connecticut avenue, instead of continuing from that intersection up the county road now opened, may be constructed along Boundary street in the direction of Meridian Hill to any county road opened, or which may hereafter be opened, west of Sixteenth street west, and thence along that county road by the most practicable route to the terminus near, at, in, or through the proposed park, as before provided.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee the propriety of so amending this bill as to require the gauge of this road to be the same with that of the road on Pennsylvania avenue and other roads in the city. It is important to the people of the city for this reason, that they are now having their carriages constructed with a view to make them fit the track, run upon the track of the other roads. That is a matter of great convenience to the people. This bill allows the gauge of this road to be between four and six feet, and it would enable the company so to vary their gauge, even but very little, as to prevent the use of their track by the carriages, wagons, and vehicles of the city. These railroad tracks ought to be of uniform width, so that the people can have their carriages and wagons made to fit them.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I therefore move to so amend the bill as to provide that the gauge shall be the same with that of the street railroad on Pennsylvania avenue. I suppose that will accomplish the purpose.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill in section three, line thirteen, by striking out the words "Baltimore and Ohio railroad," and inserting "Washington and Georgetown railroad;" so that the clause will read:

And the carriages shall not be less than six feet in width, the gauge to correspond with that of the Washington and Georgetown railroad.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It seems to me the railroad company would make that provision anyhow in constructing the road, and it is unnecessary to send the bill back to the House if that is all the amendment that is necessary in the bill.

Mr. MORTON. Those other words were put in there for some purpose. They ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Some of the citizens of this District have spoken to me about this bill. They want to build the road this fall, and if the bill is amended it will go back to the House of Representatives, and it may not, perhaps, be reached there. That is the only objection I can see to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] that all the street railroads built now are built upon what is called the uniform gauge. The two roads that are built here have the same gauge, as I happen to know, as I drive over them very often, and wagons are generally built upon that gauge.

Mr. MORTON. This bill provides that it may be between four and six feet.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt that, as a matter of convenience in transporting their cars from the depot to the railroad, they will have the same gauge. I do not think the amendment necessary, and as it may embarrass the bill, I hope the Senator will withdraw it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The only objection I have to it is that it may possibly defeat the bill in the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not believe there is any doubt that such an amendment will be concurred in by the House, and the question being raised, it might be an object to the company to make this road of a different gauge for the very purpose of keeping the street free from carriages.

Mr. HARLAN. If the Senator will allow me, I think the gauge of the Georgetown and Washington railroad is required to be the same as that of the Baltimore railroad, and this bill requires the gauge of this road to be the same as the Baltimore road. That can be ascertained by looking at the law; and in order that the Senator from Indiana may have an opportunity to look at the charter of the Washington and Georgetown railroad to see if that is not so, I will ask that the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. MORTON. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that it would be safe in either case with this amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no personal objection to the amendment. I think the House will pass it.

Mr. MORTON. I think so. I think the amendment is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. TODD.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 503) for the relief William B. Todd.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to refund to William B. Todd, of the city of Washington, the sum of $319, for money paid by him to the United States, on the 27th of June, 1856, for certain land in the city of Washington, being the south half of lot No. 15, in square No. 636, which had been before sold and the United States paid therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON TARGET ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 344.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the "Washington Target-shooting Association" in the District of Columbia. It proposes to incorporate and make a body corporate of Charles Kloman, Frederick Huegler, Charles Ebel, John H. Stailey, Adolf Cluss, G. Dill, Gustav Hartig, B. Henze, John Kessel, Casper Kneessi, E. L. Schmidt, Richard Wallach, M. Michler, Lewis Clephane, and A. C. Richards, of Washington city, in the District of Columbia, and their associates and successors, by the name of the "Washington Target-shooting Association," for the purpose of establishing and maintaining, in the District of Columbia, a "park" designated and named the "Washington Schuetzen Park," the object of which shall be moral and social, and to acquire proficiency and skill as marksmen. The capital stock of the corporation is not to exceed $100,000, and the stock is to be divided into shares of twenty five dollars each.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest to the chairman of the committee whether there should not be some limitation on the amount of property authorized to be held by this corporation. The bill authorizes them to hold personal and real estate.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There should be a limitation providing that it should not exceed a certain sum.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to such an amendment, if the Senator will suggest it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have not the slightest idea what the amount ought to be. Perhaps the Senator himself is more familiar with those institutions, and can tell.

Mr. HARLAN. I will state to the Senator that I understand the whole purpose of the bill is to enable an association of gentlemen in this city to secure a deed for a piece of land that they may hold in common on which they have erected shooting galleries on the edge of the city.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Would $10,000 be sufficient?

Mr. HARLAN. I think not. I think the Senator had better put it at $50,000. Land is very valuable in that part of the District. I think the land cost perhaps twenty or thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose it is not exempted from taxation or anything of that kind?

Mr. HARLAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I only suggest that there should be a limitation.

Mr. POMEROY. Put it at $50,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to amend the bill by limiting it to $50,000.

Mr. POMEROY. "Not to exceed $50,000."

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert at the end of section four the following proviso:

Provided, That the amount of real property or estate to be held or owned by said association shall not exceed in value $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. I did not listen attentively to the reading of the bill. I will inquire of the chairman whether there is a special limitation in the bill that the property to be purchased by this company shall be held only for this purpose?

Mr. HARLAN. I think so.

Mr. MORTON. They have not a general right to buy real estate?

Mr. HARLAN. I think it is specifically limited to this object.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to hear that part of the bill read again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation shall have full power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they may deem needful and proper for the management of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the corporation, not inconsistent with the laws in force in the District of Columbia, to have and use a common seal; with the privilege of altering the same at pleasure; to purchase, take, and hold, by deed or otherwise, any property, real, personal, or mixed, and the same or any part thereof to dispose of at pleasure, and to execute such deed or deeds or other conveyances as may be necessary therefor; to issue stock, and make all suitable and necessary regulations for the purchase, sale, and transfer of the same; to borrow money; to impose fines upon the members, and collect the same as other small debts are collected; to expel members, &c.

Mr. MORTON. Is there nothing specifying the purpose for which they may purchase and hold real estate? Is it a general permission?

Mr. HARLAN. In the first part of the bill the object of the corporation is specifically set forth, as I think, and I suppose they would not have any more powers than those that are directly conferred in the bill itself.

Mr. MORTON. I believe it has been held that the definition in such a bill of the general character of a corporation does not limit and control the power to hold real estate, if that is general in its character.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to any limitation that the Senator may think necessary.

Mr. MORTON. Such a charter as that might be converted into a speculation. I offer an amendment such as I have suggested, and ask the Clerk to prepare it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by adding after the proviso just adopted the following:

And provided further, That the real estate and personal property of the said association shall be held for the purposes, and no other, expressed in the first section of this act.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to suggest to the Senator that, as the bill uses the expression "property real, personal, or mixed," he had better say "the said property." He does not wish to exclude what may be called mixed property, but to provide that all property shall be held for this purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If so changed, the bill would not probably read well. The first proviso would read contrary to the other. If there be no objection, however, the other proviso will be amended so as to read, "property, real, personal, or mixed." The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had, on the 25th of June, 1868, approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 426) for the relief of Thomas Crossley;

An act (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran;

An act (S. No. 450) relative to filing reports of railroad companies;

An act (S. No. 425) granting a pension to George Bennett;

An act (S. No. 280) granting a pension to Michael Hennessy, of Platte county, Missouri;

An act (S. No. 164) to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 377) to change the times of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee;

An act (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon;" and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena.

The message also announced that the bill (S. No. 534) relating to contested elections in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, having been presented to the President of the United States on the 16th of June, 1868, and not having been approved by him or returned to the Senate, in which it originated, within ten days, (Sundays excepted,) had become a law under the Constitution of the United States.

REGISTER OF DEEDS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 491) to provide for the appointment of register of deeds in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that from and after its passage the appointment of register of deeds for the District of Columbia shall be vested in the supreme court of the District, and the register so appointed, from time to time, is to hold the office during the pleasure of the court, and qualify and perform all the duties of the office as provided by law, and receive as compensation for his services such sum as may be fixed by the court, not exceeding the rate of $3,000 per annum, exclusive of the necessary expenses of the office. It is to be the duty of the register to employ, from time to time, subject to the approval of the court, a sufficient number of copyists to enable him to keep up the current records and indexes of the office with necessary and reasonable promptness, and, as the fees and income of the office will justify, to copy such of the records as have become defaced or obliterated, and to index the same. The copyists are to receive such compensation for services rendered by them, either by the piece or by the day, as the court may determine, not exceeding five cents per hundred words for copying, and not exceeding twelve cents per hundred words for indexing, or not exceeding three dollars per day for each faithful day's work of eight hours' duration to each of the copyists; but the salary of the register, compensation of copyists, cost of blanks, blank books, stationery, fuel, light, office rent, and all other necessary expenses of the office, are not in any case to exceed the aggregate fees and emoluments as provided by law.

It is also to be the duty of the register of deeds to receive all the fees and emoluments of the office, and to deposit them from day to day with the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, taking his receipt therefor. It is to be the duty of the clerk to give bond with approved security in such sum as the court may determine, to receive, receipt for, safely keep, and to pay out those funds, on orders to be drawn by the register of deeds, accompanied by vouchers approved by the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for the salary of the register, compensation of copyists, and other necessary expenses of the office, and at the close of each calendar year to pay over any surplus that may be in his hands to the treasurers of the city of Washington, of the city of Georgetown, and of the levy court of the county of Washington respectively, to be added to the school funds of the cities and county, and to be used for the support of schools, in proportion to the number of children to be benefited thereby in each of the corporations, the award to be made by the supreme court; but the clerk is authorized to retain for his services two per cent, per annum for all moneys received and properly accounted for under the act.

The filing of all instruments for record since the decease of ———, late register, and under the superintendence of ——— Flood, and so noted by him, are to be valid, to all intents and purposes, as though filed by an actual incumbent of the office of register of deeds for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following to come in as section one:

That from and after the passage of this act the style of the register of deeds of the District of Columbia shall be "recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to strike out in line three of the printed bill, after the word "that," the words "from and after the passage of this act." They are mere surplusage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. In line four I move to strike out "register" and to insert "recorder," and to make the same change wherever the word occurs throughout the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I now move to strike out the fourth section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the filing of all instruments for record since the decease of ——— late register, and under the superintendence of ——— Flood, and so noted by him, shall be valid to all intents and purposes the same as though filed by an actual incumbent of the office of register of deeds for the District of Columbia.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following sections:

And be it further enacted, That the legal fees for the services of said recorder of deeds shall be as follows, that is to say: for filing, recording, and indexing, or for making a certified copy of any instrument containing two hundred words or less, fifty cents, and fifteen cents for each additional one hundred words, to be collected at the time of filing and when the copy is made; for each certificate and seal, twenty-five cents; for searching records extending back two years or less next preceding current date, twenty-five cents, and five cents for each additional year, to be paid by the party for whom the search may be made; for recording a town plat, three cents for each lot such plat may contain; for recording a plat of survey five cents for each course such survey may contain; for filing and indexing any paper required by law to be filed in his office, fifteen cents; for each examination of title by the party or his attorney, fifty cents; for taking any acknowledgment, fifty cents.

And be it further enacted, That all deeds of conveyance, leases, powers of attorney, and other written instruments required by law to be filed and recorded, and all copies of instruments and records and certificates authorized by law, filed, recorded, made and certified by William G. Flood as acting register of deeds for said city since the death of Edward C. Eddie, late register, and which may be filed, recorded, made, and certified by the said William G. Flood up to the date or the appointment of a recorder of deeds under the provisions of this act, shall, and are hereby, declared to be legally performed, the same as if the said William G. Flood had been appointed and qualified as register; and the said William G. Flood is hereby declared to be entitled to all the legal fees and emoluments of said office for his said services which have hitherto been allowed the register of deeds, and which have accrued, or may accrue, during said period.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of a recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1279) in relation to additional bounties and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 550) providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reservation in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 347) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government;

A bill (H. R. No. 1027) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 318) to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 177) regulating the rights of property of married women in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the District of Columbia the right of any married woman to any property, personal or real, belonging to her at the time of marriage or acquired during marriage in any other way than by gift or conveyance from her husband to the prejudice of his subsisting creditors, shall be as absolute as if she were feme sole; but in the conveyance of realty her husband is to join her in the deed and if he refuse to do so, the supreme court of the District of Columbia is to have power, in its discretion upon her petition, to appoint a trustee to make the conveyance. If she die intestate, her personality is to vest in her husband; and if she die intestate, leaving minor children, her husband is to have an estate by the curtesy in her realty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to inquire of the gentlemen of the committee presenting this bill what change it makes in the existing law? It is rather important legislation.

Mr. HARLAN. It merely enables a married woman to hold a separate estate in the District of Columbia. That was the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Can anybody disturb her in her ownership of real estate in the District now?

Mr. HARLAN. I think so. I think her husband can control it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Without her joining in the deed?

Mr. HARLAN. He might not be able to convey it without her joining in it; but he would be able to control it. If the Senator wishes to examine the bill, I will ask to have it passed over and take up another.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not care about that. The general feature and purpose of making married women secure in their separate property, I sympathize with; but this bill did not strike me as being very carefully drawn.

Mr. HARLAN. I will state to the honorable Senator that the bill was drawn by some member of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and submitted by the committee to a member of that committee, Judge PATTERSON, of Tennessee, and he had it in his hands for some time, examined it very carefully, and reported that there could be no objection to its passage.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is one rather extraordinary provision, I think, in the bill; and that is, that if the husband declines to join in the conveyance necessary to pass the title the wife may apply to the court, and the court shall appoint a trustee for that purpose. I do not know whether I am willing to go quite that far to get up a lawsuit between husband and wife about her separate property whenever she wants to sell, and he does not agree that it is best to do so. I do not know whether that would be wise or not. I think that is a new provision in the legislation of the country.

Mr. HARLAN. If the Senator will oblige me by examining the bill carefully, I will ask to have it passed over for that purpose. I move that it be laid aside informally.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the bill will not be laid aside so as to lose its position here. I think it is a bill that ought to pass in this District.

Mr. HARLAN. I will call it up again, if the Senator will allow me, as soon as we act on another bill. I wish to give the Senator from Indiana an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to state that there have personally come to my knowledge one or two cases in the District of Columbia where married women had some little property which reckless husbands were dissipating and disposing of. I think it is the general tendency in all the States of late years to secure to married women their separate property, and to allow them to control it. I think there ought to be such a law in the District of Columbia. As to the particular provision which the Senator from Indiana refers to, authorizing a married woman to convey her real estate and requiring the husband to join in the deed, and if he refuses to do so allowing her to apply to the court for the purpose of protecting the sale, I see no objection to that. I think in some of the States married women are allowed to convey their real estate without the husband joining in the deed, and this is only an additional protection. It would only be in extreme cases that it would be necessary to apply to the court. There would be but very few such cases. I should be willing myself to vote for a law allowing a married woman absolutely to convey her estate without the husband joining in it.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois what necessity there is for requiring the husband to join, provided, if he refuses to join, the wife can compel him to do so? Why not provide that her own conveyance shall be sufficient? For my part, I should oppose that whole provision. I do not know of any State where a married woman can convey her real estate without the consent of her husband, or compel him to consent if he refuses, or have some other trustee appointed by a court. I think it is entirely new. I never heard of such a provision, and I do not believe it is for the benefit of married women at all. I am opposed to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know but that I should be willing, as I said, to vote for a bill that would allow a married woman absolutely to convey her property, without her husband joining; but the Senator from Indiana is certainly aware that as the law now stands a court of chancery would interfere to protect a married woman in property belonging to her, which the husband was squandering. You can imagine such a case.

Mr. MORTON. That is not the case I put.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The case that the Senator put was this: he was making an objection to calling upon the court to compel the husband to join. He can imagine a case, and so can I, where a court would compel a sale of the property of the wife to support the wife and children, and compel the husband to assent to it, or convey the title without his assent.

Mr. MORTON. That may be in the power of a court of chancery. But the protection of the property of married women is one thing. We have statutes in nearly every State to do that. We have very ample provisions in the laws of Indiana for the protection of the property of married women, and to prevent their husbands from squandering that property; but we have no provision, and I never heard of any in any State, that authorizes a married woman, upon her own will and judgment, to go and sell her real estate against the wishes of her husband. I think that would be a very unsafe provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open for amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out the provision that creates the estate by curtesy.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir; there is. I ask the Clerk to read the last part of the bill.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator from Indiana is right. That is in the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not so understand it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out at the end of the bill the following clause:

And that if she die intestate, leaving minor children, her husband shall have an estate by the curtesy in her realty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we have been advancing in the law beyond the estate by the curtesy.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When the wife dies owning real estate the law ought to give to her husband such part in that real estate in fee as he ought to enjoy, but if she dies leaving children there is no propriety in his having the whole of the estate for life, which is the curtesy. If, according to the laws of some of the States, he should have the fee as against the children of the one third, and they of the two thirds, that ought to be provided for; but the estate by curtesy is one that ought not to exist, in my opinion. It is being abandoned very rapidly in the States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let me suggest to the Senator from Indiana, suppose there are no children living; would he deprive the husband of the curtesy?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then he should have the whole of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There may have been children who have deceased before the wife?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then the husband should be the heir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator from Iowa who has charge of this bill if married women in this District can bring suits without the consent or concurrence of their husbands?

Mr. HARLAN. I think not. I think the doctrine of the common law prevails in this District.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that be so I think this bill would be objectionable. If the law does not allow a married woman to bring a suit to protect or recover any personal or real property without joining her husband, then to invest the property of the wife absolutely, as though she was a feme sole, would put the property where it could not be protected by litigation, it seems to me. According to the provisions of this bill, all property that she acquires, personal or real, is to be as absolute in her as if she were a feme sole.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That would allow her to sue. That would carry the other rights with it. If it is as absolute as if she were a feme sole, of course she would have the same right to protect it in court as a feme sole. The courts would so construe it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that altogether doubtful. If the law provides in this District as it does in many of the States, that the wife shall bring suits by joining her husband with her, this provision would not by intentment repeal that act.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Undoubtedly it would. There was the same law in my State.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me, I will move that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I think it should be considered by that committee.

Mr. HARLAN. I have no objection to that. The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia:

A bill (H. R. No. 1279) in relation to additional bounties and for other purposes; and A bill (H. R. No. 550) providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reservation in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan.

NATIONAL HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 366) to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 366) to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city. George H. Calvert, R. C. Weightman, James C. McGuire, Zeph. English, George H. Calvert, jr., and Charles B. Calvert, their associates, successors, and assigns, are to be created a body corporate and politic by the name of the National Hotel Company, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and by that name they are to be capable of taking, holding, managing, improving, purchasing, leasing, for the sole purpose of erecting and maintaining a hotel, real and personal estate within the city of Washington, not exceeding $500,000 in value. The capital stock is to be not less than $227,000 in shares of $500 each.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to incorporating a hotel in Washington, but there ought to be some provision in the bill as to what kind of a hotel the corporators are to keep. While the Senate are considering this bill, if we could make an amendment by which we could have a first-class hotel of character and standing, and make it obligatory on this corporation to keep it so that gentlemen could stop at it, I should be very glad to support the bill. [Laughter.] I do not think there is any object in incorporating a hotel company to run a hotel as the hotels here are now managed. I would not retard the progress of the bill if any importance is attached to it; but I do not believe there is any object in incorporating a hotel company in Washington if they are to keep a hotel like the hotels at which I have been obliged to stop here. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARLAN. I should like to inquire if the Senator thinks it will make it any worse to have it incorporated?

Mr. POMEROY. I would provide to make it better. It is to make it better that we incorporate it.

Mr. HARLAN. It is to be hoped that it will have that effect. We will try, if the Senate consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his opposition to this bill. It is of the utmost importance unquestionably that it should pass. I am surprised that any Senator, particularly a Republican, should stand up here, when this day has been devoted to the business of the District of Columbia and its suffering interests, that have been delayed so long by Congress not paying the attention to them that they deserve, and endeavor to clog legislation by objecting to a hotel bill. What is to be done, I should be glad to know, if the public interests are to be neglected in this way? It is true, some distant sections of the country that are a good ways off can be passed by in the hot weather; but if a hotel in Washington appeals to us, I am sure we ought not to have any opposition from any quarter. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WILLEY. With the permission of the honorable Senator from Vermont, I should like to inquire if there are any ladies concerned in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. As all the ladies have obtained the precedence in the Senator's committee, I dare say there will be ladies in the hotel; certainly if he is a boarder there. [Laughter.]

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORTON. We certainly very much need a first class hotel in this city. The only objection I see to this is, that the capital stock provided is certainly not large enough to construct such a hotel and furnish it.

Mr. CONKLING. How much is it?

Mr. MORTON. Five hundred thousand dollars, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any provision that it shall be free from taxation?

Mr. MORTON. No; I believe not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There ought to be! [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the papers in a pension case of Mrs. Kirby Smith. The reason why I ask it in this form is the fact that her petition was reported on during the last Congress adversely, and I learn from a letter which I hold in my hand from Governor Lane, of Indiana, who was the chairman of the Pension Committee at that time, that it was not intended to make an adverse report. As the rules require in such cases unanimous consent, I ask that consent, that Mrs. Smith may have leave to withdraw her papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent to withdraw the papers mentioned by him. Is there any objection. No objection being made, leave is granted to withdraw the papers.

CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HARLAN. I now move that the Senate take up Senate bill No. 102.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has heretofore been under consideration and has been read through. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill? Let us hear the title of it.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. No. 102) providing for the formation of corporations, and regulating the same in the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a matter of public interest. It ought to be read.

Mr. HARLAN. It has been read and discussed for several hours, and I permitted it to go over at the request of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON], who desired to look through it a little further; but I have since seen him at his desk and asked him if he had any objection to it, and he said he did not know that he had.

Mr. CONKLING. Is it not true, however, that in the mean time we have incorporated severally, one by one, everything that can be incorporated under this bill? A man cannot shoot at a mark here unless he is incorporated. He cannot drink lager beer unless he is incorporated. He cannot go to church unless he is incorporated. He cannot keep a hotel unless he is incorporated, nor sell ice nor meat, [laughter,] and my impression is that we have covered the ground so thick with special corporations that there will not be anything left for this bill to operate upon. I should hate to see the Senate make blank a motion, if the Senate has done so.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senate has acted on House bills only. We have Senate bills providing for corporations to act on still; but I shall not ask the Senate to consider any except those which are specially excluded from this bill, if the bill should be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARLAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I perceive that this is a very bulky bill and must necessarily contain a great many provisions. I do not remember anything about the contents of this bill, and I dislike very much to be called upon to vote for or against a bill of this description in utter ignorance of its contents. I believe a long time ago there was a bill of this description pending before the Senate, and various and sundry objections were made to it. How those objections were disposed of I cannot now remember. But to take up a bill consisting of thirty or forty pages and pass it without examination or discussion, it seems to me is proceeding with considerable rashness, to say the least of it; and I should like to know if it is absolutely necessary that this bill should pass at this time. I do not know that it is not all right; but I dislike to take the responsibility of voting for or against it without some knowledge. I understand this to be a general incorporation law for the District. I believe in the necessity of such a law; but there may be provisions incorporated in the bill that would be very prejudicial to the public as well as to private interests. If the Senator from Iowa has carefully examined this bill, and knows it to be entirely free from all objections, and is satisfied with it, and his committee are satisfied with it, of course I should have so much confidence in their judgment that I should not make any opposition.

Mr. HARLAN. I am very sorry to be compelled to say that I cannot meet the Senator's requirement. I know it is not free from all objections, because several Senators did object to several provisions contained in it when it was under consideration before; but I do think it is free from all reasonable and substantial objection. The bill was drawn up at the request of the Committee on the District of Columbia by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. WILLEY], who spent a very considerable time in preparing the bill. It was then carefully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and matured as fully as we could mature it. When read in the Senate some months since various provisions were objected to, and there was an attempt made to obviate as far as practicable the objections presented, and various amendments were then adopted. The bill was then read the third time, and at the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] I consented that it should go over at that time to give him additional opportunity to scrutinize it. As I before remarked, I conversed with him on the subject afterward, and he said he had no objection to my calling up the bill at any time; that he did not know that he had any objections to the passage of the bill. It excludes from its provisions, I may say, corporations for internal improvements and for churches, and covers the other ground, I believe, that is usually embraced in the general incorporation laws of the States, and nothing more.

I may, perhaps, be pardoned for saying, also, that I believe in every State of the Union—at least in the eastern and northern and western States—there are general incorporation laws for the safety of the people. There is an objection there to special charters, and consequently in most of the constitutions of the western States they have a provision prohibiting the Legislature from granting special charters, so as to avoid monopolies; and the committee have acted under that general idea which seems to prevail throughout the country. I think that this bill is as free from objection as similar laws usually are. At all events, it contains a provision that Congress may at any time modify or repeal it, or repeal any articles of agreement made under it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether this bill now contains a provision that will allow an incorporated company here to do business outside of the district, in States, elsewhere?

Mr. HARLAN. I think the Senator from West Virginia can answer that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does contain it. I remember it in the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLEY. There was an amendment incorporated in the bill which was designed to meet that objection at the instance of the Senator from Vermont; I do not recollect distinctly its terms. It was not the intention of the bill that it should have such operation; but if the Senate will take it up now I will suggest an amendment in the first clause of the bill. The objection may be obviated by inserting in the third line of the first section, after the word "corporations," where it now reads "corporations may be formed under this act," the words "whose operations shall be confined exclusively to the District of Columbia."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That would be better.

Mr. POMEROY. I suppose the amendment may be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I hope this bill will be considered at this time and for this reason, and I say it with some little feeling upon the subject. It has been my fortune, good or ill, as the case may be, to be upon the Committee on the District of Columbia in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, and I know what is known very well in the Senate here, that legislation which respects the District is anything but agreeable to the Senate or to the House of Representatives. Gentlemen are anxious to get on with the legislation that pertains to the whole country; and when they are asked for a day to legislate specially for the District, it is given grudgingly and generally with a great deal of opposition; so much of it that it has become offensive to the members of the committee even to ask for a day, and rather offensive to be on the committee because the legislation which pertains to the District is looked upon as rather irksome and disagreeable. In this case the object of the committee was to frame a bill by which to cover this general work of incorporating, the gentleman from New York says, every man who goes to church and every woman who makes a batch of butter or cheese.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Permit me to ask a question: then why do you take our time in passing all these private corporation bills instead of passing this general one?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Because they are excluded from this bill; and I will say that there are enough left—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should they be excluded? If there ought to be a corporation bill at all, if these corporations ought to be founded, why should they not be founded under general law?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I will say that the Senator from West Virginia had this subject particularly in hand, and I am not so familiar with it as he is; but it was thought by the committee, and especially by the Senator from West Virginia, that you could not very well include everything in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why have you specially excluded corporations, as my friend from New York described it, for shooting at a mark? Is there anything so dangerous in rifle-practice as to make it require the special interposition of Congress, while a banking corporation or a railroad corporation or a mining corporation can be incorporated under a general law?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Very likely some one thought the mark might be objectionable; he would get a living mark rather than a dead one. Perhaps that was the reason the Senator from West Virginia excluded that; I do not know. But what I want is that we shall pass a general law that will obviate this constant work on the subject of incorporations, so that we may not be called upon every twenty-four hours to pass an act which shall incorporate something or somebody. Let us do something that will cover the work, and have it out of the way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we have passed corporation bills on every conceivable subject almost already.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. If the Senator thinks so it is because his imagination is not so fertile as that of the people of this District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator please point out to us what class of corporations are within this bill if all those we have acted on already to-day are excluded from the bill? I ask really and seriously for information.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Banks—

Mr. HARLAN. I can answer the Senator's question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You do not allow banks to be incorporated under this general bill.

Mr. HARLAN. The bills we have passed are House bills; and there have only been two cases where the companies could be incorporated under this general bill; one the shooting company, and the other the hotel company.

Mr. WILLEY. Nearly all these bills we have passed would be embraced within the general operations of this bill; but then this bill is not a law, and it is very doubtful whether it can become a law at this session. These companies are urgent that they should have bills passed, especially House bills already acted on in the other branch of Congress, on which the action of the Senate would be final, and thus they can have a law at the present session. But, Mr. President, allow me to make this remark to show the necessity of some such bill: you have passed five or six corporation bills to-day; the majority of them were printed on one sheet. Here is a general corporation law, containing thirty or forty pages, I believe upward of fifty sections, if I remember correctly. And why are there so many sections in a general corporation law? They are as necessary to the perfection of every individual corporation bill as they are to the perfection of a general corporation law, because there is no special private corporation whose operation and regulation should not be as strict and as guarded as the provisions of the general corporation law. We have passed bills to-day that make no provision for the stock subscribed, that make no provision for the amount that shall be paid in, how it shall be paid in, when it shall be paid in, how the directors shall be appointed, what shall be their qualifications, nor in regard to the mode of their operations, all of which ought to be in these bills to make them perfect and secure in their operation both to the stockholders and to the community. The great advantage of a general corporation law, if it be properly drawn, is that it collects together as applicable to each individual corporation that shall organize under its general rules and regulations that ought to apply to every corporation.

It was objected when this bill was up before, by the Senator from New York, that it embraced too wide a scope. It is very easy to strike out just so much of the first section as includes within its operation matters to be incorporated as is deemed objectionable. I do not myself think it is too wide in its operation; I should be glad to have it passed as it is; but if that be the only objection—and that seemed to be the only objection remaining to the bill at the time it was dropped before—it may be very easily remedied by running the pen through just so much of the first section as describes the objects to be incorporated as may be objectionable to Senators.

There was a section included in the bill that destroyed my interest in it pretty much. Every individual incorporator under that bill is made responsible, besides his stock, personally to the extent of the stock subscribed by him. I did not think there would be many corporations organized under it, and therefore I lost my interest in the bill to a very great extent; but it is here, and if gentlemen see proper to organize under it let them do it.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, there have been a good many corporation acts passed, but the work is not done; there will be more to come in the future than we have had in the past. There is just as much necessity for a general incorporating act now as there ever has been. The time of Congress has been occupied a good deal since I have been here in passing little acts of incorporation for various purposes in this District, all of which ought to have been disposed of under a general act of incorporation and save the time of Congress. If this bill authorizes the creation of incorporations which will have power to do business in New York, Indiana, and all over the country, that part of it ought to be stricken out. We have no use for incorporations of that kind in the District of Columbia and we do not want to create corporations by the General Government having any such powers. Whatever may be necessary for this District should be provided for; not to enable companies to go abroad and do business all over the country under the guise of an act of Congress. We have no use for incorporations of that character.

And now, Mr. President, while I am speaking on this subject, allow me again to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of making some general provision by which a large part of the business presented here for the District can be done either by the city councils or in some other way. We are troubled here with business from day to day that can be better done by a board of county commissioners, and that is transacted by county commissioners in my State and yours, and every other State.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask the Senator why he does not introduce such a bill? I have heard him state that before, and I agree with him entirely; and I think as he is impressed with that idea, if he would introduce a bill appointing a commission it would pass Congress.

Mr. MORTON. There are several very good reasons why I have not introduced such a bill. I again call the attention of the committee to the superior importance of making some provision of that kind. The other day we were called upon to pass a bill here to provide for the inspection of hay and straw in this District, which was a mere police regulation, and ought to have been provided for by the city councils or local authorities here. The time of Congress is taken up, costing the nation heavily and putting the national business back to enact laws which belong to a board of county commissioners or township trustees, a batch of business of which we can know nothing, and we cannot do it properly for the want of local knowledge.

Mr. President, the government of this District is costing the nation heavily by taking up the time of Congress; and I respectfully submit to the able Senators on this committee that they can serve this District better and the country better by bringing in a bill making provision for some sort of local government here. This business that we are called upon to transact can be done better by a board of county commissioners, or by two or three persons appointed by the city councils, than it can possibly be done by the Senate. And yet it costs the nation hundreds of thousands of dollars to govern the District in regard to matters that ought to be disposed of by the local authorities here. Sir, it has got to be a great nuisance, it has got to be a great abuse; and I do hope that those whose business it is to look after the affairs of this District will endeavor to report some sort of a bill that will relieve Congress from these onerous and these petty duties.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to call attention to one or two matters in this bill. This is a bill which provides, in the first place, for the incorporation of persons for any purpose whatever, with certain exceptions. Those exceptions are contained in this clause:

But this act shall not be construed to authorize the incorporation of a bank of circulation, or of a company for the construction of any work of internal improvement, or of any church or religious denomination, or of any company, the object or one of the objects of which may be to purchase lands and resell the same for profit.

Anything else within the whole range of human transactions is within the purview of this bill. It was amended somewhat, I remember, for the purpose of narrowing its scope; but as it stands, despite the amendment adopted, I think, on the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] it permits the creation of incorporations which practically are to operate anywhere and everywhere. Under that section there must be something in the nature of a home office, something which would answer the idea of an object within this District; but unless I am mistaken the bill provides in so many words that meetings of stockholders may be held anywhere, and that stockholders may call a meeting anywhere, and that a small number of directors shall be a quorum to transact business, and a small proportion of stockholders a quorum of stockholders to transact business. Thus it is a bill which is to be used as an implement in the hands of men anywhere, who, under the laws of their respective States, could not operate. The laws on this head in the States have been greatly extended already, in all the States so far as I know.

I wish to make only one remark upon the bill before I take leave of it. It seems to me that step by step we are advancing a great way in the direction of absorbing the powers which belong to the States which ought to remain there. We hear of bills to create an insurance department; we have an educational department; we have a bank department; and we hear of various other bills to which I might refer, the purpose of which is to absorb one after another, not only matters pertaining to the States, but matters of detail pertaining, I might almost say, to the police of the States.

I think this bill is obnoxious in that respect, and therefore I shall vote against it; and my belief is that it ought not to be passed without a review in the light of amendments which were made, and made quite hastily according to my recollection in the Senate, at least to say that they are congruous and harmonize together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WILLEY] may be made by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection, and it is made. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Corbett, Cragin, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Vickers, Wade, Welch, Willey, Williams, and Yates—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Cole, Edmunds, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, and Trumbull—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Conkling, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doxitt, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, McDonald, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, Van Winkle, and Wilson—28.

So the bill was passed.

ALEXANDRIA STEAM-PACKET COMPANY.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 236.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 236) in addition to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Steam-packet Company," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to again extend and continue in effect for a further period of twenty years, commencing January 1, 1869, the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington, Georgetown and Alexandria Steam-packet Company," approved 3d March, 1829, and extended by the act in addition thereto, approved 26th February, 1849, Congress reserving the right to modify or repeal.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 192.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 192) to incorporate the Potomac Navigation and Transportation Company of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its provisions George W. Riggs, Matthew G. Emery, Fitzhugh Coyle, Ward H. Lamont, Moses Kelly, Henry D. Cooke, Samuel A. Peugh, Riley A. Shinn, Esau Pickrell, and George Hill, jun., and their associates and assigns, are to be created a body corporate and politic, under the name, style, and title of the Potomac Navigation and Transportation Company.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in line four of section one, to strike out from the list of incorporators the name of "Moses Kelly" and insert that of "George H. Plant."

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is that for?

Mr. HARLAN. I do not know how that occurred. Some one asked that it be done; but, perhaps, it would be better not to strike out Mr. Kelly's name and simply insert Mr. Plant's.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Iowa so modify the amendment?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "Washington," in line twelve of section two, to insert "to receive subscriptions, at which time and place a subscription book shall first be opened to the public, and;" and after the word "purpose," in line fourteen, to insert "thereafter;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the capital stock of said company shall not be less than $500,000 nor more than $2,000,000, to be divided into shares of $100 each; and whenever an amount not less than one thousand shares of said stock shall have been subscribed in good faith, and ten per cent. paid thereon to some person duly designated to receive the same, it shall be the duty of the aforesaid persons, or a majority of them, by public notice of at least twenty days, in one or more of the daily papers published in the city of Washington, to call a meeting of the stockholders at some suitable place in the city of Washington, to receive subscriptions, at which time and place a subscription book shall first be opened to the public, and for the purpose thereafter of electing not less than seven directors for said corporation, each of whom shall be a stockholder, and at least four of the number shall be residents of the District of Columbia; and at such election each share of capital stock shall entitle the holder thereof to one vote. The aforesaid, or any four of them, shall act as inspectors of said election, and shall certify, under the names of the directors thus chosen, and shall also notify the said directors of their election, and of the time and place of holding the first meeting of said directors; at which meeting the aforesaid persons shall deliver to said directors the books of subscription to the stock of said company, together with the amount paid thereon, after deducting all the expenses incident to said organization. The meetings of the stockholders of said corporation for the election of directors and for the transaction of other business shall be held annually, and at such other times and upon such notice as may be prescribed in the by-laws. The directors elected as hereinbefore provided shall hold their offices for one year, and until others are elected to fill their places; and a majority of said directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Mr. CORBETT. I propose to amend the amendment in line thirteen by striking out the words "first be opened," and insert "have previously been kept open;" and in line fourteen, after the word "public," by inserting "ten days;" and after the word "purpose," striking out "thereafter;" so as to read "to receive subscriptions, at which time and place a subscription book shall have been previously kept open to the public ten days," &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line ten, to strike out the word "may" and insert "shall;" in line eleven, after the word "pay," to insert "five per cent. at the time of subscription upon;" in line thirteen to strike out "at such time" and insert "they may make other assessments;" after the word "proper," in line fourteen, to insert "not exceeding ten per cent. for any one assessment, of which assessment there shall be given at least thirty days' notice;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the directors of said corporation shall, at their first meeting, elect from their own number a president and vice president; they may also, from time to time, appoint a treasurer and secretary, together with such other officers, agents, and employees as they may deem necessary, each of whom shall hold office or position only during the pleasure of said directors. The directors shall also have power to fill vacancies in the board that may be caused by the death, removal, or resignation of any of its members. They shall also require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay five per cent. at the time of subscription upon the amount by them respectively subscribed; they may make other assessments in such manner and in such installments as they may deem proper, not exceeding ten per cent. for any one assessment, of which assessment there shall be given at least thirty days' notice, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line nineteen, to strike out "reasonable" before "notice" and insert "such;" and in lines twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-six, to strike out the words "may forfeit said stock and all previous payments thereon for the use of said corporation, under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said corporation, or may sue for and collect the same in any court of competent jurisdiction;" and in lieu thereof to insert:

May proceed to sell at auction so much of said stock as will satisfy said assessments and cost of the sale of the same, of which sale ten days' notice shall be given in two of the principal papers in Washington city.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. I call the attention of the friends of the bill to the fact that in order to perfect the bill there must be some clause in it stating the purpose of the corporation and what powers it shall have. There is no designation of the purpose of the corporation except that which is contained in the name "The Potomac Navigation and Transportation Company of the District of Columbia;" nor is there any statement as to the powers this corporation shall have. I will read all there is on that subject which, upon its face, only appears to be incidental to something else that is not stated in the bill:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That said corporation is hereby authorized to purchase and hold lands, and may locate and construct wharves, docks, and railways into the Potomac river and in front of Mason's Island, so called, as may be necessary for the objects of said company.

Now, what are "the objects of said company?" They are not stated. Is it to be a company to run a steamboat line from Washington to Richmond, Virginia, or to Norfolk or to New York? That is not stated. It seems they may purchase and hold lands and construct wharves necessary for the objects of the corporation, but the objects are not stated and no powers are conferred.

Mr. HARLAN. That is a serious defect in the bill which escaped my attention. If the Senator has no amendments prepared, I ask that it be postponed.

Mr. MORTON. It is obviously imperfect. Mr. HARLAN. It is an oversight. I move to lay the bill aside.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I shall not ask the Senate to consider any further District bills to-day.

MATTHEW LOW.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 535.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 535) to reward the services of Matthew Low, of Nassau, New Providence, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Matthew Low, of Nassau, on the British island of New Providence, in the West Indies, or his legal representatives, of $2,000, in recognition of his services in carrying to the commander of the United States gunboat Tioga, the important information on which he acted in intercepting and capturing the blockade-runner Granite City on the 22d of March, 1863, near the port of Nassau.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEXT MEETING OF CONGRESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to take up the bill I introduced a day or two ago respecting the next meeting of Congress. I do not remember the number of it.

Mr. COLE. I hope the Senator will call up Senate joint resolution No. 139, relative to the electoral votes of the late rebel States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I assure the Senator that it will be perfectly useless to take that up at this time. Gentlemen wish to be heard on it. The minority, if there be a minority, have a right to be heard upon it fairly; and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] had the floor upon it the other day when it went over at the end of the morning hour. As a matter of honor to him, the Senate having decided that they would postpone the measure until to-morrow by their vote, I do not think it would be right toward that Senator to insist upon taking it up now.

I take a very deep interest in the measure the Senator from California names; I believe it essential to the peace of the country; but the Senate has chosen to attend to corporations rather than that, and I acquiesce with satisfaction, because I can bear it as long as the rest can. So I think we had better take up the bill relating to the next meeting of Congress, which has some relation, as the Senator from California will readily perceive, to these subjects, and provide for an earlier meeting of the regular session than the one that is now provided for by law.

Mr. COLE. I have but a word to say in relation to what has been said by the Senator from Vermont. I agree that the measure to which I referred is one of the greatest possible importance, and may be the means of saving us from difficulties that we can hardly anticipate at present. I do not know what arrangement exists between him and the Senator from Kentucky; but if there is such an understanding that the Senator from Kentucky is to discuss the measure before it passes, of course I would not urge it against his rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suggest there are a number of bills we can pass this afternoon which are not objected to, and that we ought not to take up a bill of a general character which will lead to debate. Half a dozen members sought the floor for the purpose of calling up bills, and I have no doubt we can go on with various fragments of matter for some time to come. This is a bill of a general nature in regard to the meeting of Congress.

Mr. ROSS. As the bill of the Senator from Vermont will undoubtedly lead to discussion, and I have a little bill here that I think can be passed in five minutes, I ask him to let it come up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I perceive that the temper of the Senate is not to attend to any matters of general interest to-day, and I withdraw my motion.

BRIDGE AT FORT LEAVENWORTH.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 355.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 355) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river upon the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia proposed several amendments to the bill.

The first amendment was in section one, line six, after the word "upon," to insert "or near;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be lawful for the Kansas and Missouri Bridge Company, a corporation having authority from the State of Kansas, to build a railroad, transit, and wagon bridge across the Missouri river upon or near the military reservation of Fort Leavenworth, and that when constructed all trains of all roads terminating at the Missouri river at or near the location of said bridge, shall be allowed to cross said bridge for a reasonable compensation to be paid to the owners thereof. And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction, or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines two to five of section two, to strike out the following words:

May, at the option of the company building the same, be built with a draw-bridge with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "length," in line nine of section two, to insert "in the clear."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out all of the second section after the word "river," in line ten, as follows:

And the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, and shall not be less than three hundred feet in length: And provided, also, That if said bridge shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining spans in the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length; and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark, and not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to the current of the river: And provided, also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same, but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains.

The amendment was agreed to.

The second section, as amended, reads:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall not be in any case of less elevation than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans be of less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, in the clear, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river.

The next amendment was to strike out of section three the following words:

That all railroads and wagon-roads leading to said bridge from either side of the river shall have the right of way through said Fort Leavenworth military reservation one hundred feet in width, with the right to use stone and timber and earth.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the use of all railroads leading to said bridge, from either side of the river, there is hereby granted a right of way through said Fort Leavenworth military reservation not exceeding three hundred feet in width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the close of the fourth section these words:

And that said bridge company shall have the right to take from said reservation, at such places as shall be designated by the Secretary of War, all stone, timber, and earth necessary to use in the construction of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have not had an opportunity of looking at the bill; and I desire to inquire of the Senator who has charge of it what the length of span is, and if it is a bridge with continuous spans or a draw-bridge.

Mr. ROSS. The bill specifies that the span shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length in the clear.

Mr. RAMSEY. The main span should be over the main channel of the river at low-water mark.

Mr. ROSS. I think the bill is sufficiently explicit.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think so important a bill as one providing for bridging the Missouri river at Fort Leavenworth on the Government reservation ought to be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. RAMSEY. I see that the bill as originally drawn provided that the main span should be over the main channel, but that has been stricken out. I move to reinsert that provision.

Mr. ROSS. If it is stricken out, I think that is a mistake in printing the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota is not now in order.

Mr. RAMSEY. I wish to invite the attention of Senators interested in the navigation of the Missouri river to this bill. In regard to the other rivers I believe the smallest span we allow is three hundred feet. Gentlemen who know more about the navigation of the Missouri river than I do may know whether two hundred and fifty feet there is enough. The general impression now is that the spans should be rather larger, instead of less than they have been heretofore. Instead of three hundred feet it is contended that there should be five hundred feet span. There is some doubt about that, but there is no doubt about the ability to build an economical span of three hundred feet. I doubt myself whether we ought to allow this departure from the rule, and I call the attention of Senators interested in the navigation of the Missouri river to it. I do not think there is any necessity for a two hundred and fifty feet span. I think with reasonable economy a bridge of three hundred feet span might be built.

Mr. ROSS. This bill provides for a bridge with a span of two hundred and fifty feet. There is no necessity on that river for a longer span, which would of course be more expensive. The commerce of that river is not like the commerce of the Ohio river, and it will be accommodated by a span of two hundred and fifty feet.

Mr. POMEROY. The spans of the bridges on the Missouri river should be of uniform length. There is a law providing for bridging the same river at Kansas City just below, where the span is two hundred and fifty feet, and also at St. Charles, which is the same. This bill is copied from those bills. All the bridges authorized on the Missouri river have a span of two hundred and fifty feet, or rather the provision is that the span shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet. This bill was not before the committee of which I am a member, but was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, but in that respect, so far as it relates to the span, it makes the same provision precisely as there is in regard to the Kansas City bridge, and other bridges on the same river. I do not know any reason why there should be a larger span at this place than below it on the same river.

Besides, this is not to be a pivot bridge. The one at Kansas City is authorized to be a pivot bridge, where there is to be a draw. This is to be a suspension bridge, high up, so that it is to be fifty feet above high-water mark. If it was a draw-bridge there might be some reason for requiring the span to be larger, because there is often delay in opening and shutting draws; and there are difficulties in that regard which require boats sometimes to have more sea room, as they call it; but I think as this is to be a suspension bridge, and as the span is exactly in accordance with the span provided by law for other bridges to be built on the same river, it is right as it is.

Mr. RAMSEY. I had no desire except to call the attention of those particularly interested in the navigation of the Missouri river. My attention having been called specially to the subject of bridges, from my connection with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I desire to suggest an amendment or two that ought to be inserted.

Mr. POMEROY. We ought to insert a provision that Congress may alter or amend the act.

Mr. RAMSEY. I was about to call the attention of that final clause which we inserted in the act of July 25, 1866, which provides for bridging the Mississippi river. The thirteenth section of that act declares—

"That the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of bridges is hereby expressly reserved."

I move that clause as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I think that amendment ought to be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I ask whether the amendment I suggested before has been made, requiring the main span of the bridge to be over the main channel of the river.

Mr. POMEROY. I think that should be inserted if it is not in the bill. Of course, they will have sense enough to make the main span over the main channel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Chair is informed these words were stricken out. They can be inserted when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not like to interrupt the progress of this bill; but I noticed one provision as it was read that seemed to me a little extraordinary, and which I would like to have explained. There is a provision for a right of way for all roads that may center at this bridge coming through the military reservation. It seems to me that that is a very loose way of granting a right of way, without expressing any points of the compass from which they are to come even, simply to say that a road starting from anywhere, if it only ends at this bridge, shall have the right of way three hundred feet. It is much more than what is necessary for a single road. It seems to me that that is a very loose kind of expression in defining a right of way. I merely call attention to this. It seems to me that all bills granting the privilege of building bridges ought to be committed to the same committee, ought to emanate from one committee, that they may be uniform, and that they may be carefully guarded in all respects.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will say to the Senator that this very provision is one in the interest of navigation, and one that on a little reflection I think he will see there is no ground of objection to. It is rather an advantage in the bill. It prevents a multiplication of bridges on the river, which of course is to be deplored. If all the other railroads desiring to cross in that vicinity are brought to this one bridge, it supercedes the necessity of multiplying bridges on the river within a short distance, and it is rather an advantage than otherwise. I really think the Senator on reflection will approve of this provision of the bill; otherwise we might have two or three bridges within a few miles.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But the Senator from Minnesota will see that three hundred feet is more than is necessary for the right of roadway, and that is to be granted to any road coming from any quarter if it only barely ends where this bridge is. I certainly never have heard of any grant of a right of way like that.

Mr. POMEROY. The reason why I suppose it was given to any road was that if the exclusive right of way was given to one particular road, that company might prevent any other company from enjoying it without paying an enormous price. They might prevent another company desiring to cross the river and make a connection from having the right of way. I apprehend the object of the committee in providing for giving it to any company was to prevent any one company having a monopoly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That would be sufficiently guarded by giving them all the right to cross at this bridge without giving the right of way clear through the reservation.

Mr. POMEROY. That provision is accounted for by the fact that there are at least two or three companies that have charters with rights to cross the Missouri river and cross this reservation, but there will probably be only one road. No one of them has built yet, and it is not known certainly which company will build, and this is arranged so that whichever company builds will have the right of way over this bridge. I think there will be but one road built.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why do you want a right of way more than one hundred feet wide?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It might be subject to very great abuse. Unquestionably there will be a town established near this bridge, and very likely one on each side of the river. If there should be a town established on each side of the bridge, then it would be in the power of any parties who obtained the right to build a road to get three hundred feet of this land, use as much of it as they wanted to build their road, and the rest of it for any other purpose.

Mr. POMEROY. Allow me to state to the Senator that on both sides of the Missouri river there is a military reservation, so that there can be no town built. Only one company will build a road, and it is not known yet which company will build; and hence the provision is that any company shall have the right of way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I notice by the reading of the bill that three hundred feet are not granted to each company, but to all these railroads together.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I thought it was for each one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; it is for all the roads together. If the Clerk will read it it will be seen that that is so.

The Chief Clerk read the following clause:

That for the use of all railroads leading to said bridge, from either side of the river, there shall be granted a right of way through said Fort Leavenworth military reservation not exceeding three hundred feet in width.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it would be well to put in a proviso that no one railroad shall have more than one hundred feet. That is the widest grant I have ever known, and it is all that is necessary.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is no railroad that needs three hundred feet; ordinarily, they need about thirty or forty feet.

Mr. POMEROY. This is a bridge to accommodate a wagon-road as well as the railroad.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What does any railroad or wagon-road want with more than six rods in width?

Mr. POMEROY. You cannot make a wagon-road right alongside of a railroad. It is not safe to bring them together, within a hundred feet. There should be a wider space than is simply sufficient for a railroad track, because there will be immense droves of stock passing on the wagon-road.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As it reads, several roads might combine, and if only one road were built that might take the three hundred feet.

Mr. POMEROY. The provision is for the railroads and a wagon-road, that together they may have three hundred feet, and I think they ought to have it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is this a bill for anything more than a railroad bridge?

Mr. POMEROY. It is a railroad bridge and a wagon-road bridge.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does it say "for a railroad and wagon-road"?

Mr. POMEROY. I think it does, but it can be read. A width of one hundred feet would be enough probably where there were no bluffs, no large excavations, and no embankments; but on one side of the river there is a bluff, and there will have to be a deep excavation, and on the other side a very heavy embankment. They have to go into the bottom and build a bridge fifty feet above low water. In that way there must be an immense embankment to approach the river and get high enough. That is the reason why it has to be quite wide.

The reservation is on both sides of the river. I have thought it almost impossible to build a suspension bridge there; but as this bill allows nothing but a suspension bridge, and as the companies must approach the bridge by an embankment fifty or sixty feet high running for a great distance, I do not think it could be got within one hundred feet if it could be within two hundred.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not amend the provision of which I am speaking by saying that three hundred feet shall be the aggregate for all the roads?

Mr. ROSS. It is contemplated that there may be more than one road using this same right of way, and the design is to include all

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the proposition is that they may all together have three hundred feet it is, perhaps, not objectionable.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The way it reads now I think it may be construed that each road may have three hundred feet.

Mr. TRUMBULL. To make that clear I move to strike out the word "all" where it now occurs in the section and insert after the word "exceeding" the words "for them all."

Mr. FESSENDEN. What objection is there to a proviso declaring that if only one road is built it shall have only one hundred and fifty feet?

Mr. POMEROY. The embankment would have to be as wide for one road as for two. The Committee on Military Affairs having required a suspension bridge, having thought it inexpedient to allow a pivot bridge, the embankment to approach it will have to be very high, and will require, I am sure, not less than three hundred feet for a base.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have modified the amendment slightly, so as to make it more specific. I propose to modify it so that if amended the section shall read:

That for the use of railroads leading to said bridge from either side of the river there is hereby granted a right of way through said Fort Leavenworth military reservation not exceeding for all of said roads three hundred feet in width.

Mr. POMEROY. That is right, I think.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Kansas of course is acquainted with the locality, and I desire to ask him whether this right of way would interfere with anything that ought to be reserved on the part of the United States in the military reservation? This giving them a right of way through the military reservation might empower the railroads to go across that reservation where it would subject the Government of the United States to great inconvenience. I think the rights of the United States in that reservation ought to be preserved. Whether they would be if the bill should pass as it is I am not sure.

Mr. POMEROY. The bill was referred first to the War Department, then sent out to the authorities at Fort Leavenworth, and put in its present shape according to their recommendations.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I see that there is a provision in the bill that it is not to interfere with the improvements.

Mr. POMEROY. It is not to interfere with any buildings or improvements.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "river," in line ten of section two, the words:

And the main span shall be over the main channel of the river at low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES B. TANNER.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is a little bill I desire to take up, House bill No. 1069; it is to pay a soldier $150. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1069) for the relief of Charles B. Tanner, late a first lieutenant sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $144 92, to be paid to Charles B. Tanner, late first lieutenant and aid in the first brigade, second division, second Army corps, to cover a period of service from November 8 to December 15, 1864, inclusive, at which time he actually performed duty and was regularly commissioned in the sixty-ninth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, but was not mustered in.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINNESOTA STATE UNIVERSITY.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 555, reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It is a bill that involves simply the construction of two statutes. The committee gave a good deal of attention to it, and came to what they deemed the right conclusion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 555) authorizing the allowance of the claim of the State of Minnesota to lands for the support of a State university was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in adjusting the claim of the State of Minnesota to lands for the support of a State university, to approve and certify selections of land, made by the Governor of that State, to the full amount of seventy-two sections, mentioned in the act of Congress approved February 26, 1857, without taking into the account the lands that were reserved at the time of the admission of the State into the Union and donated to that State by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN B. FRENCH.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to take up a little bill on the table, as that seems to be the fashion. The bill has already passed the House. It is a bill for the relief of B. B. French. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1325) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, for service performed from the 2d to the 14th day of March, 1867, inclusive, for which he has not been heretofore paid, the sum of eighty-five dollars.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to have some explanation of that little bill from the Senator from Maine. How does it happen that eighty-five dollars is due to Mr. French as a balance? He has got rather rich out of the public employments he has held, I understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The explanation is simply this: after he ceased to be Commissioner of Public Buildings, on account of the passage of a law abolishing the office, it was deemed necessary that he should remain there until the officer designated to take charge of the place could take possession, and he stayed there at the particular request of the Secretary of the Interior to take care of the books, papers, &c. This is to allow him the same rate that he had before he received a salary, for the time he thus stayed.

Mr. HOWARD. Does he say that he could not very well afford to do that little duty without additional compensation?

Mr. FESSENDEN. We know that men generally accept pay for what they do.

Mr. HOWARD. I asked the Senator if Mr. French had expressed any wish on the subject?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not had any conversation with Mr. French. I have reported the bill from the testimony before the committee that he performed the service at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, and that the service was valuable and necessary.

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose that is all the information we can get.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator would withdraw that motion, and allow me to have a few little private claims passed. We can administer a good deal of relief now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I submit to my friend from Wisconsin whether we ought not to adjourn? The hour is late, and the Senate is very thin.

Mr. HOWE. I know there is a thin Senate, but the business which I have in hand to-day I can do just as well where there are two or three met together. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does the Senator from Wisconsin think it best to go on with this business? If he insists on it, I shall withdraw the motion; but I fear that after he gets his business through some other business will be taken up that perhaps ought not to be passed.

Mr. HOWE. I should be very much obliged to the Senator if he would withdraw the motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

TIMOTHY LYDEN.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 445.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of Timothy Lyden, of Parkersburg, West Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Timothy Lyden of $302, in compensation of services rendered in the quartermaster's department, and for a period of captivity in rebel prisons.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT FORD.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 550.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 550) for the relief of Robert Ford was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $814 to Robert Ford, in full payment for his time and services as a teamster in the quartermaster's department of the Army, from May 1, 1862, to August 1, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PALEMON JOHN.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 433.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 433) for the relief of Palemon John was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to instruct the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to allow Palemon John a credit for the sum of $769 37, for that amount of revenue stamps lost or stolen from the mails while the same were in transit to the Commissioner from Palemon John, late revenue stamp agent.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKALEW afterwards said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider a bill passed a short time since, House bill No. 433. I do not know but that it is all right; I want to look at the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

SALLY C. NORTHROP.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 722, for the relief of Sally C. Northrop.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. That is a land-warrant case. I am inclined to think that it is an old case that has been rejected heretofore. I think it better that the Senator would let that go over.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator wishes to examine it, I move to postpone it.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1068.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1068) to provide for certain claims against the Department of Agriculture was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, in these words:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $47,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, from which shall be paid such indebtedness and claims against the Department of Agriculture contracted prior to the 1st day of July, 1867, and included in the report of the Committee of Claims herewith, as shall be submitted to the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, with sufficient evidence, under oath, as to the origin and validity of the same, respectively, and decided by the Fifth Auditor and the final accounting officer of the Treasury to be due to the respective claimants according to the rules of law and equity.

And in lieu thereof inserting:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized to audit the claims included in the schedule following, to wit: W. L. Ellison, $1 50; C. C. Anderson, $7 50; M. W. Beverage, $150; W. B. Berry, $6 47; J. H. Bourne, $33; John Bell, $22; J. Brewer, $35; E. Baker, $7 41; L. Bogges, $1 50; J. A. Blake, $4; Baltimore Journal of Commerce and Price Current, $15; George Brown, $1 13; L. C. Campbell, $250; G. L. Carrow, $85; Crut & Campbell, $20; Carr, Yates & Wiswell, $63 25; F. W. Christern, $2; H. L. Chapin, $6 50; Craiger & Clever, $5; Collins & Alderson & Co., $11 733 11; William B. Dana, $5; R. P. Eaton & Co., $1 50; Espey & Burdloff, $92; Samuel S. Foss, $2; Fisher & Schaeffer, $10 90; Nathaniel B. Fugitt, $364 41; Fowler & Co., $153 29; Z. D. Gilman, $22; William Hacker, $6 799 40; Hovey & Co., $0 83; International Exchange, (J. Mudie, agent), $2; Irving & Willey, $397 35; Journal of Commerce, $17; A. J. Joice & Co., $48 13; Aug. Jordan, $25; J. Knox, $15 50; J. M. Kuester, $2; J. F. Lubbo & Co., $391 05; Linton & Co., $45; A. M. Lawza, $6 in gold; D. T. Moore, $3; Pascal Morris, $13 223 60; J. Markritter, $10; W. B. Moses, $316 65; Myers & McGahn, $25 25; J. W. Martin, $86 98; E. Matlack, $0 25; Munn & Co., $3; National Intelligence, $16; Plant & Brother, $2; Z. Pratt, $10; Philips & Solomon, $15; F. & J. Rives, $5; William Smith, $6; John Saul, $45 65; H. A. Swasey & Co., $3; Schaeffer & Karadi, $67 70; W. B. Smith & Co., $4; E. W. Stewart, $60; E. Slade, $30; Stevens Brothers, (London), $58 20; Sibley & Guy, $44 97; J. Turner, $1; R. O. Thompson, $15; Charles S. Taft, $128 47; J. E. Tilton & Co., $3; Andreux, Villmorin & Co., $12 70; T. B. Winner, $1 50; William Wood & Co., $29; J. B. Ward, $35 38; G. E. Woodward, $2 50; Samuel Wagner, $2; J. F. Wright, $1; A. H. Young, $48 17; Paschall Morris, $20; A. S. Yorke, $65 20; Stevens & Brother, (London magazine), $80; James Sheehy, $6 50; R. O. Thompson, $80; W. C. Lodge, $35; James S. Lippencott, $428; J. F. Walfinger, $47 50; Samuel Rixgwalt, $194; William H. Gardner, $20; G. Hubart Bates, $37 50; William W. Bates, $204; H. D. Dunn, $232; K. A. Willard, $192; N. B. Cloud, $28; S. F. Baird, $20; H. F. French, $149 50; C. W. Howard, $67 50; John White, $15 56; Henry A. Dreer, $163 75; Israel S. Diehl, $900; and to allow so much of the same as shall appear upon due proof under oath to be due and unpaid for goods delivered and services rendered to the Department of Agriculture upon contracts made by the Commissioner prior to the 1st day of July, 1867, for the payment of the same, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any Commissioner or other officer of the Department of Agriculture shall hereafter, in the name of the United States, or in the name of said Department, contract for any goods or services for the use thereof beyond the amount of money appropriated and remaining in his or their hands unexpended at the time of such contract, the officer so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That appears to be a combination of a bill of particulars and a criminal code. I think the chairman of the Committee on Claims ought to explain that. If we stand by the criminal provisions we had better strike out the bill of particulars. If we stand by the bill of particulars we had better strike out the criminal provisions.

Mr. HOWE. I think we had better take them both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 3, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Bishop E. S. JAMES, of the Methodist Episcopal church.

The reading of yesterday's Journal was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

COLONEL F. W. ALEXANDER'S SAW BAYONET.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the select joint Committee on Ordnance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of adopting for use in the infantry regiments of the United States Army Colonel F. W. Alexander's saw bayonet, patented in 1864, and to report by bill or otherwise.

WASHINGTON IRON WORKS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1858) to aid the building of a rolling-mill and nail factory in the city of Washington, to be named the Washington Iron Works; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

REPORT ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. MOORE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and, under the law, referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of the House three thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Manufactures.

WASHINGTON CANAL.

Mr. MOORE also, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial in behalf of the property holders of Washington in relation to the Washington canal; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. JUDD. It was the understanding and order of the House yesterday that when we adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That was the order.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1027) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black river, in Lorain county, Ohio; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 313) to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. HINDS, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the constitutional convention of the State of Arkansas, for the public sale of the Hot Springs reservation, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. O'NEILL. In view of the slimness of attendance, and with no possibility of getting a quorum, I move this House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will, if the gentleman will renew my motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I will.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope we will not adjourn.

ADDITIONAL BOUNTIES

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House recommitted House bill No. 1279, in relation to additional bounties, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I now move that the bill be put on its passage.

The first section provides that when a soldier's discharge states that he is discharged by reason of "expiration of term of service," he shall be held to have completed the full term of his enlistment and entitled to bounty accordingly.

The second section provides that the prohibition of bounty in the fourteenth section of the act of July 28, 1866, to any soldier who shall have bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged, or given away his final discharge papers, or any interest in the bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not apply in cases when the full amount of bounty has been advanced by States, counties, or towns, to the soldiers or to their families.

The third and concluding section provides that the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any soldier who shall have died, after being honorably discharged from the military service of the United States shall be entitled to receive the additional bounty to which such soldier would be entitled if living, under the provisions of the twelfth and thirteenth sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," approved July 28, 1866, and the said provisions of said act shall be so construed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. This has the unanimous support of the Military Committee. The object is to cure some of the defects of interpretation by the Second Auditor.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I cannot see any reason why the purchaser should have the advantage of this. I am willing he should have refunded what he has advanced, but the balance should go to the soldier.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. This does not refer to the purchasers, but only to the States which have advanced the full bounty.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. But the State according to this bill does not get the difference.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. The State or the county gets the whole amount.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I desire to amend by adding "but the State which has advanced the bounty shall receive the same."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I am willing to have the bill amended so that the State or county which has advanced the bounty shall receive it.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Say "the State, county, or party."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. No, I cannot consent to include the "party." I do not want to make such transfers legal. I am willing to amend so as to say "the State, county, or town advancing the same," but I do not wish to have the bill so framed that fraudulent transfers made by parties shall be legalized.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It seems to me that as the bill now stands these parties will not be excluded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. They are already excluded by law.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to state that the committee were unwilling to make any change that would enable men who have been buying up soldiers' claims to draw any part of this money. We desired to cover only cases in which a State or some corporate body, such as a county or township, has advanced the money to the soldier as a matter of favor to him. We propose that in such cases there shall be paid back what has actually been advanced.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. But according to the bill, if the party that advanced the bounty is a State or county the transfer to a third person is legalized.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. The amendment corrects that now.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted to the committee, it was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I now withdraw the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

The CLERK. Add at the end of section two the following:

But a State, county, or town advancing the same shall be entitled to it.

Mr. COBURN. I would inquire whether there is any provision in the bill for cases where soldiers have lost their discharge papers?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. We provided for that by previous legislation. Where discharge papers have been lost the soldier can get his pay by applying to the proper auditor and making proof of loss.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I will allow it to be reported.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend the bill by adding to it the following new section:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the third section of an act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the pay of the privates in the regular Army and in the volunteer service of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 6, 1861, be, and the same is hereby, construed to mean that every private of volunteers entitled under and by virtue of the proclamations of the President and the general orders of the War Department, Nos. 15 and 25, dated respectively May 4 and May 25, 1861, issued in accordance therewith, prior to July 22, 1861, the date of the passage of the act entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," shall be entitled to and be paid the allowance of $100 provided by said general orders in all cases where said privates were honorably discharged or mustered out of service by competent authority.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I cannot yield to allow that amendment.

Mr. COBB. I wish to state that I will on the first opportunity report the amendment I have just offered in the shape of a bill from the Committee of Claims, to whom it is now referred, and ask that it be put on its passage. I desire to present, in this connection, extracts from General Orders Nos. 15 and 25:

"Every volunteer non-commissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer, who enters the service of the United States under this plan, shall be paid at the rate of fifty cents, and if a cavalry volunteer, twenty-five cents additional in lieu of forage, for every twenty miles of travel from his home to the place of muster—the distance to be measured by the shortest usually traveled route—and when honorably discharged, an allowance, at the same rate, from the place of his discharge to his home, and, in addition thereto, the sum of $100."

"Every volunteer non-commissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer, who enters the service of the United States under this plan, shall be paid at the rate of fifty cents in lieu of subsistence, and if a cavalry volunteer, twenty-five cents additional in lieu of forage, for every twenty miles of travel from his place of enrollment to the place of muster—the distance to be measured by the shortest usually traveled route—and when honorably discharged, an allowance, at the same rate, from the place of his discharge to his place of enrollment, and, in addition thereto, the sum of $100."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order in the morning hour is the bill reported from the Committee of Claims pending at the close of the morning hour yesterday, on which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I have been appealed to by the Committee on Appropriations, who desire to go on with their business now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I agreed to move to adjourn when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] yielded the floor to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I suggest that as the Committee of Claims are entitled to a morning hour to-day, the Committee on Appropriations, by unanimous consent, go on to-day, and that the Committee of Claims have a morning hour on Tuesday next.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I object, unless a regular morning hour is granted to committees for public business.

Mr. BLAINE. Give the Committee of Claims an extra morning hour by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Will that postpone the debate on the Alaska bill?

The SPEAKER. It will for one day.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I object.

ANTHONY BUCHER.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Anthony Bucher, reported on Friday last from the Committee of Claims by Mr. HARDING.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate, and if, in his opinion, it shall appear proper, issue to Anthony Bucher a Treasury note for fifty dollars to supply such a note as shall appear to have been destroyed by fire, and belonging to him, in the summer of 1867.

Mr. MAYNARD. This little bill involves a principle that I do not think has been settled by this House, and I do not think the House ought to settle it at this time and in this way. The principle is that when money of the Government is lost by destruction or otherwise it shall be reimbursed by the issuance to the party of the same amount. If, for example, I lose a hundred dollar greenback and show that it was burnt, and bring the case here, the Government is to make my loss good. It is an important principle, and one that I am not prepared to sanction. I think Government money ought to stand on the same footing as any other money. If a man loses his money it is his own loss.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The committee do not propose to put it on any other footing. It is put on the same footing as the money of the banks of the country. I will explain to the House the peculiarity of this case, and then the House will do as they see fit in regard to passing the bill. It seems that this man, who was serving in the Army, sent home to his wife in a letter a fifty dollar greenback and three five dollar greenbacks. She put the money in an envelope and secreted it in the straw bed. Some little time subsequently, while the wife of the soldier was in the garden, the daughter in emptying the straw bed set the bed on fire.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] that I think, by consent, we can now make an arrangement by which the gentleman can get his morning hour on Tuesday. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE] desires the passage of a bill, to be reported by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] from the Committee on Military Affairs, and to which I think there will be no objection. If that bill can be passed the gentleman from Massachusetts can then have a morning hour on Tuesday for his committee. And I suggest that we then go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the appropriation bills, with the understanding that no quorum shall be necessary, and that whenever an amendment is adopted by a majority of those voting it shall go to the House, and when it is rejected, let it stand the same as it would if there was a quorum voting, and with this further understanding that the amendments shall not be voted upon until we shall have a quorum on Monday or Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the proposition simply to be to finish the bills in Committee of the Whole and report them to the House; and the Chair will state to the House that any member can have a separate vote in the House on any amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It goes further than that. It interferes with the call of committees on Tuesday next. Now, there are some of us who are on committees which are behind others, and which will be postponed in such a way as to throw us entirely out. I cannot agree to such an arrangement.

Mr. MILLER. Will not the proposed arrangement interfere with the call of other committees?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] objects to the arrangement.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand the suggestion to be that there shall be an extra morning hour on Tuesday.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No; there is to be no extra morning hour. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE] will have accomplished his object if the bill is reported by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the House, if they will indulge the Chair, that it will avoid any conflict about committees not being called if they will give the morning hour of Monday to the Committee of Claims. That will not interfere with the call of any other committee whatever.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Let them have a morning hour after the regular morning hour on Monday, and I will not object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will modify my suggestion in that way.

The SPEAKER. That will not interfere with the call of any other committee, and the Committee of Claims will have an hour after the morning hour of Monday. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] as modified.

FORT GRATIOT RESERVE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 550, providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reservation in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. The first section authorizes the Secretary of War to sell, at such times as he may deem most advantageous to the interests of the Government, and in such manner as hereinafter provided, all that portion of the military reservation known as Fort Gratiot, in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan, which lies south of a line running due west from the south end of the Grand Trunk railroad wharf, on the St. Clair river, until it intersects the road known as the Lexington road, and all that portion which lies west of said Lexington road.

The second section provides that all that portion of the above described lands which lies east of a line running due south from the point of intersection with the Lexington road, mentioned in the foregoing section of this act, shall be divided into blocks and lots of convenient size for building purposes, with public streets conforming as near as may be, without detriment to the interests of the Government or the State, to the public streets of the city of Port Huron, adjoining such ground, and sold by lots at public auction at the city of Port Huron to the highest bidder, public notice of such sale having first been given for thirty days by advertisement in all the papers published in the city of Port Huron, and in at least two papers published in the city of Detroit, Michigan. A plat of this division, made in accordance with the laws of the State of Michigan, shall be filed with the proper officer of the city of Port Huron. The remaining portion of the military reservation, for the sale of which provision is made in the first section of this act, shall be sold at public auction at the city of Port Huron, after due notice as prescribed in this section, at such times and in such parcels as may be deemed most advantageous to the interests of the Government by the Secretary of War.

The third section provides that the proceeds arising from the sale herein provided for, after paying the attendant expenses, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States in the same manner as the proceeds from the sale of other public lands.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would call the attention of gentlemen to the following memorial, which gives all the reasons for the passage of this bill:

To the Congress of the United States:

The mayor and common council of the city of Port Huron respectfully memorialize your honorable body to pass an act authorizing the sale of all that portion of the Fort Gratiot military reserve not absolutely required for military purposes, for the following reasons:

The reserve now consists of more than six hundred acres of land, stretching from the St. Clair river on the east to the Black river on the west, its southern boundary bordering the most densely settled portion of our city, entirely checking its growth to the north. The entire reserve is now included in our city limits. Not one twentieth part of it ever was or probably ever will be used, in any manner, for military purposes. The remaining portion lies unfenced, uncultivated, and unprotected, an open common, which was once covered with a beautiful growth of timber, but which, in consequence of the many depredations which have been continually committed on it for years, is now in a wretched state of dilapidation, thickly strewn with dead, fallen, and decaying timber and stumps and a thick growth of underbrush and brambles, a pasture for large herds of hogs and cattle and a haunt for vile characters who daily and nightly infest it, committing their depredations, outrages, and crimes without fear of punishment; our State courts being entirely powerless in the matter, neither the city nor State governments having any jurisdiction whatever over it, and the tribunals of the United States being inaccessible, no court, marshal, or district attorney being nearer than Detroit, a distance of more than sixty miles. Cases of robbery, assault with intent to kill, and many other grave crimes have been committed on the reserve, and the parties escaped before any proper authority could be reached for their arrest; and whenever any of these cases have been tried it has been at an expense to the United States ten times as great as though they had been tried in our local courts.

Our only railroad depot and a flourishing village are located immediately adjoining the northern boundary of the reserve, and large numbers of people are hourly passing over it, to and from our city. The extent of the reserve is so great that the troops stationed on it cannot prevent depredations being committed; there is not more than one soldier to every ten acres. Each of the different post commanders which have been stationed here has complained that the attempt to prevent depredations on so large a territory, surrounded by so dense a population, was imposing too heavy a burden on the small garrison stationed here. The British Government have disposed of their military reserve on the Canadian shore opposite the reserve here. The river bank on the south half of the reserve is being very rapidly washed away by the force of the current; very many rods have disappeared in the last few years; the amount washed away is each year rapidly increasing. If this is permitted to continue it will soon endanger the northern portion of our city. The Government now owns to the north of the military reserve, at the head of the St. Clair river, a reserve known as the light-house reserve, consisting of about one hundred and fifty acres, with a front on the river and lake of about three quarters of a mile, over which the military authorities exercise control and which would be available in case of hostilities. It is hardly to be presumed that in case of hostilities with the British Government we would station troops on the Canadian frontier to act on the defensive. The only object of a military reserve would be to prevent by the use of artillery the navigation of the river by the enemy. The portion asked for in this memorial would not be required and is not favorably located for this purpose. After disposing of all that portion of the reserve which we ask for, the Government would have left, including the light-house reserve, more than two hundred acres of land, with a front on the river of more than a mile, and that, too, just where it would be required, directly at the head of the river, at a point where the rapidity of the current renders navigation difficult, and where the river is considerably narrower than at any other point on the whole Canadian frontier.

The only reason we have ever heard assigned for retaining by the Government so much unoccupied territory was to prevent the troops coming directly in contact with the citizens. After disposing of the south half of the reserve there would still be left a distance of about half a mile between the post and the city, a distance several times as great as that now between the post and the village to the north of it. Not a single regular soldier was stationed at this post for fourteen years previous to the close of the war. In our judgment no greater necessity exists for them now than then, and we expect to see the post abandoned again when our Army is reduced to a strictly peace footing. From the foregoing it will be seen that the reserve is much greater in extent than ever was or ever will be required for military purposes; that for many years it was entirely abandoned; that the southern and western portion is entirely valueless to the Government; that it is a burden on the military authorities; that it is rapidly being destroyed by the forces of the current; that the Government will not and the people cannot protect it; that in its present dilapidated condition it is a nuisance to both the Government and the people here; that it entirely obstructs the growth of our city in that direction; that it encourages a large amount of crime which we are powerless to prevent; that the Government would suffer nothing, and both it and the people here be greatly benefited by its sale.

The above memorial was adopted December 16, 1867. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and caused the seal of the city to be affixed.

[L. S.] JOHN JOHNSTON, Mayor.
ALBERT DIXON, Clerk.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I desire to suggest an amendment to the second section of this bill. This bill was drafted by me, and at the time I did not know the exact officer with whom this plat should be filed. I have since ascertained the proper officer, and therefore I move to amend section two by striking out the words "proper officer of the city of Port Huron" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "register of deeds of St. Clair county, Michigan."

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. TROWBRIDGE was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to move an amendment to the last section, to strike out the words "after paying the attendant expenses;" so that all the proceeds of this sale may be paid into the Treasury, and all the expenses may be paid here.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWWELL] was instructed by the Committee on Reconstruction to report a bill from that committee. He is not now present, and on his behalf I ask unanimous consent to report the bill, and to have the bill and accompanying report printed, and the bill recommitted to the committee.

No objection was made; and the bill (H. R. No. 1853) for the removal of certain disabilities from the persons therein named was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 818, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments, in which the consent of the House was requested.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the amendments of the Senate to the civil appropriation bill, just reported from the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the Senate amendments to the legislative appropriation bill, all debate upon the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto shall terminate in three minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. JUDY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

The pending amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts authorizing the publication of the debates in Congress are hereby repealed from and after the 4th day of March next, and the joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and required to invite proposals for the publication of the actual proceedings and debates in Congress, upon a plan and specifications to be previously published by them, and shall also ascertain the cost of such publication by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and shall report as soon as practicable such proposals and estimate of cost, together with a bill to provide for the publication of the debates and proceedings of Congress.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. DONNELLY, to add to the amendment of the Senate the following:

And from and after the 4th day of March, 1869, unless it be previously otherwise ordered by Congress, the proceedings and debates of the two Houses shall be published daily at the Congressional Printing Office, the reports thereof being furnished by reporters provided by each House for itself, in such manner and under such regulations as it may prescribe.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon the pending amendment of the Senate, by order of the House, will close in three minutes.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I wish to state that when I reported, by order of the Committee of Ways and Means, a tariff bill a few days ago, I gave notice that when the House should go into Committee of the Whole I would move to lay aside other bills for the purpose of taking up that bill. But as the House is very thin this morning, I will defer that motion until Monday, giving notice that on Monday, when we go into Committee of the Whole, I will make that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am glad that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] has given that notice, in order that on Monday we may have a full House, and that that vote may be considered a test question as to whether or not the House will consider the tariff bill at this session.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. That can hardly be considered as a test question. I am in favor of the tariff bill, but I shall vote against postponing in Committee of the Whole all other bills, unless we shall by that time have disposed of certain bills which are now pending.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I merely give the notice.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to repeat anything that I have heretofore said on the subject of reporting our debates. I hope this amendment of the Senate will be adopted. To the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] I have no special objection, though I do not attach as much importance to it, perhaps, as he does. I hope the Senate amendment will be adopted for two reasons. I think it important that the mode of publishing the debates be so far changed that the reports, instead of being laid on our desks at noon, when it is very inconvenient for us to take them up and examine them, shall be furnished at such an hour in the morning that they may be laid on our tables at breakfast.

I understand (and my information is such that I have not felt at liberty to disregard it) that the amount at present paid for reporting and publishing our debates is much greater than would be necessary under a different arrangement for reporting and publishing them in as accurate and creditable a manner as at present. For this reason I think that in pursuance of the legislation adopted at the last Congress we ought to suspend the present mode of publishing the debates and let the matter be reexamined by appropriate committees of the two Houses, aided by the report of the Superintendent of Public Printing, so that when another arrangement for publishing the debates shall be adopted the House and the country may understand that it is based upon the best attainable terms, and that the impression which has so largely prevailed shall no longer have anything to rest upon. I understand that the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] who has championed the present publishers, is perfectly willing that the matter shall take that direction, and that the amendment of the Senate shall be concurred in.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know that I am the special champion of anybody except the truth.

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not say that the gentleman was the "champion" of these publishers; I said he had championed them.

Mr. BLAINE. There is no necessity for any debate upon the matter, because the publishers of the Globe want this amendment of the Senate adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. The amendment simply leaves open to future action the question what we shall do about the Globe.

Mr. DONNELLY's amendment to the amendment of the Senate was not agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-fifth amendment:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all advertisements, notices, proposals for contracts, executive proclamations, treaties, and laws, required by law to be published in the District of Columbia, shall be published only in the two papers selected under the act approved May 18, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1867, and for other purposes," but only when the same shall be delivered to such papers by the proper head of a Department for publication, and all of section two of the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," preceding the proviso thereof, is hereby repealed, and no advertisement whatever in newspapers published in the District of Columbia shall be paid for by any disbursing officer, and if paid shall not be allowed by any accounting officer unless published in pursuance of this act.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence with the following amendment:

Strike out all of said Senate amendment after the word "under," in line five, as follows:

The act approved May 18, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1867, and for other purposes," but only when the same shall be delivered to such papers by the proper head of a Department for publication, and all of section two of the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," preceding the proviso thereof is hereby repealed, and no advertisement whatever in newspapers published in the District of Columbia shall be paid for by any disbursing officer, and if paid shall not be allowed by any accounting officer unless published in pursuance of this act.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

Three papers authorized by law; and no publication appertaining to any one State, district, or Territory shall be transferred or paid for in any other State, district, or Territory; and the act approved May 18, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1867, and for other purposes," and all of section two of the act approved March 2, 1867, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," shall continue in force.

Mr. PHELPS. What is the effect of that amendment? Is it not to monopolize the advertisements in this District in three instead of in two Republican papers?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think the gentleman understands the amendment. The proposition to add another paper was voted down yesterday.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask whether this does not add another paper to the two Republican papers now monopolizing the public printing in this District?

Mr. BLAINE. It does not.

Mr. PHELPS. What is it, then?

Mr. BLAINE. I understand the proposition to add a third paper was voted down by the House. Now the Committee on Appropriations recommend a non-concurrence in the two hundred and twenty-fifth amendment, because it leaves to the heads of Departments to say whether they will give out any advertisements or not. If you pass that you might as well say it shall not give out any, for they will give none to the Republican papers here. The amendment of the committee provides all advertisements not proper to be published in the District of Columbia shall not be published here, but that all legitimate advertisements shall be given to the two papers authorized by law. That is the whole of it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-sixth amendment:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1868, the annual salaries of the Comptrollers of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Customs shall be $4,500 each; of the Solicitor, the Auditors, the Register, and the supervising architect of the Treasury, the Commissioner of the Land Office, and the Commissioner of Pensions, $4,000 each, and the additional amount necessary to pay the increase of salaries provided for by this section be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman whether the committee designs to refuse this increase of salary to the First Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The committee have no desire on the subject. They recommend non-concurrence so the matter can go to the committee of conference and the meritorious cases provided for.

Mr. GARFIELD. All I wish to say is this, and the gentleman will certainly agree with me: there is no officer receiving the same amount of pay in the whole Government of the United States so valuable as the gentleman who is now the First Comptroller of the Treasury, who, I believe, saves to the Government more than any other man in it. He is receiving now a salary entirely insufficient for a man of his ability and the importance of the place he holds. It was fixed at the foundation of the Government, and if any man can show me any officer of the United States Government whose services are worth more than the services of Robert W. Taylor, in his present position, I shall be surprised. I do not say all these salaries ought to stand as fixed in the Senate bill, but I should be unwilling to give any vote that would refuse this proposed increase to the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio cannot say anything in the way of compliment of the First Comptroller of the Treasury to which I will not agree. If this is non-concurred in, and goes to the committee of conference, they will give it due consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. With that expression of his kindly disposition, I will not trench further upon the time of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say if the salaries of any of these gentlemen as heads of bureaus are increased I want that of the Commissioner of Agriculture increased also.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only speak of that one that I particularly know about.

Mr. PIKE. I hope you will not commit the absurdity of raising the salaries of subordinates and having that of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to remain where it is.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] asked if the First Comptroller of the Treasury was from the district of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and he answered that he was. Now, though he is not, however, from my district or from my State, I happen to know that the salary of the First Comptroller is to-day what it was established in gold at the foundation of the Government, namely, $3,500. The Treasurer of the United States receives, I believe, something like eight thousand dollars, and the Comptroller of the Currency about six thousand dollars. Many officers of the United States receive very much higher salaries than this officer whose services are worth more to the Government than any one officer in the Treasury Department except the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PIKE. Why any more than those of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. PAINE. It is not possible for me to stop to answer that, but for any man who understands the duties of the Comptroller, who knows that he is, as it were, an independent officer of this Government, to ask me why his services are more important than those of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury seems to me very strange. Now, I trust Congress will not adjourn without giving this officer a salary which will enable him to continue in office, for I know his present salary renders it utterly impossible for him to remain there.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was non-concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-seventh amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That each night watchman at the Treasury Department shall, from the 1st day of July, 1868, receive a compensation of $900 per annum, and an amount sufficient to pay said increased compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, is hereby appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Two hundred and twenty-eighth and last amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no statuary, paintings, or other articles, the property of private individuals, shall hereafter be allowed to be exhibited in the Rotunda or any other portion of the Capitol buildings.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the committee propose to allow no article of private property in the Rotunda? For instance, a gentleman with a cane in his hand?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Oh, no; it says "to be exhibited."

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the language is too broad.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope to satisfy gentlemen on this subject by adding the following as an amendment:

And it shall be the duty of the superintendent in charge of the public buildings to remove all such statues, paintings, and other articles, being the property of private individuals now in the Capitol.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not exactly agree with this amendment of the Senate in the shape in which it stands. I think another limitation to it would make it right. I do not believe we ought to reject everything simply because it is individual property. There may be articles of individual property that we would desire or be perfectly willing to have exhibited there. The restriction I suggest would be to reject everything that is put there as an advertisement or in the nature of an advertisement.

Mr. BLAINE. How could you tell?

Mr. MAYNARD. Those who administer the law must have some judgment.

Mr. BLAINE. I suppose the Commissioner of Public Buildings, General Michler, has just as good taste as anybody, but everybody comes there with pictures that they want to exhibit, and the place looks like an old second-hand picture shop. Now, if you do not put it down absolutely, by a prohibition, you will always have the place cluttered up with unseemly articles. We do not want anything of the sort on exhibition.

Mr. MAYNARD. I agree with the gentleman entirely. We have the place cluttered up with objects put there as specimens of some trade, calling, or pursuit, making it an advertising shop. But there may be a work of art, picture, or statue that is private property, to be sure, but which the public would desire to see.

Mr. BLAINE. If it is proper to be exhibited in the Capitol it is proper for the Government to secure it, and the Government can buy it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by inserting after the word "exhibited," in line three, the words "as an advertisement or as a specimen of art or skill."

Mr. BLAINE. I hope we shall not adopt that.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by inserting after the words "allowed to be exhibited," the words "or made;" so that it will read:

That no statuary, paintings, or other articles, the property of private individuals, shall hereafter be allowed to be exhibited or made in the Rotunda or any other portion of the Capitol building, &c.

I offer that amendment for this purpose. I understand that there is an individual employed in making statuary in some of the rooms of this Capitol, who, during the war, went to South Carolina and tendered his services to the rebels to aid in casting bronze cannon. I understand that he occupies some rooms down here in the Capitol, and has them free of rent, and is employed on work that is exhibited in the Capitol. My amendment is intended to reach him.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Let it say so then.

Mr. KELSEY. That is precisely what I mean.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Then name him.

Mr. KELSEY. I used this language because it is the shortest way in which I could reach the object at which I aimed, and I have endeavored to state that object so that nobody can misunderstand what I mean by it.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will name the person I think I will go with him; but it seems to me to be a continuation of an attack which I mean to comment a little upon hereafter upon another person whose work is nearly finished.

Mr. KELSEY. I desire to say to the gentleman that I am aiming at no other person. I have named the person that I strike at, and I have used this language because I suppose it is more appropriate language to use in a bill than to name an individual.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman put in the name? I believe it is Clark Mills. Let him insert the name of Clark Mills.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope we shall not put this in. The amendment of the Senate is well enough as it stands.

The question was taken on Mr. KELSEY's amendment to the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move that the amendments of the Senate be laid aside, to be reported to the House, and that the deficiency bill be taken up.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The committee accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1341) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with, and the Clerk proceeded to read it by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I offer the following amendment, to which there will be no objection, to come in at the end of line twenty:

A sufficient sum is hereby appropriated to pay the official reporters of the Globe in each House the amounts which the Comptroller of the Treasury may find severally due to them for services during the sessions of the Fortieth Congress, under the eighteenth section of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved July 28, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I move to amend this bill by inserting after the paragraph relating to the Pension Bureau the following:

Census Office:

For the purpose of paying the amount due to certain United States marshals and other assistants for services rendered in taking the eighth census in the year 1860, in the State of West Virginia, $5,376 09: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid on account of any claimant who participated in the late rebellion, or gave to it any aid or comfort.

This is the amount ascertained at the Department to be due.

Mr. BLAINE. I personally investigated this matter myself, and I know it to be entirely correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following clause was read:

For casual repairs of the Patent Office building, to complete pavement on the south wing, $8,000.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend by inserting after the words "pavement on" the words "the lower floor of;" so that it will read:

For casual repairs of the Patent Office building, to complete pavement on the lower floor of the south wing, $8,000.

I desire to have this amendment made so as to require the lower floor to be repaired instead of the one above it. The lower floor is very much out of repair, as every gentleman knows. The amendment was agreed to.

The following clause was read:

Capitol Building:

For the payment of outstanding liabilities incurred by the late Commissioner of Public Buildings for materials furnished and labor done in repairing the old portion of the Capitol building prior to and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $5,484 22: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid until the said accounts shall have been fully examined and approved by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

To pay Samuel Gardiner for services as electrician in lighting the Dome for the months of June, July, August, and September, 1866, $400.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from the late Commissioner of Public Buildings.

The Clerk read as follows:

37 EAST CAPITOL STREET, March 17, 1868.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Samuel Gardiner, who put up the electrical lighting apparatus at the Capitol, (the admiration, and justly so, of all who witness it) was employed by me to take care of it during the months of June, July, August, and September, 1866. There being no appropriation out of which to pay him, I promised him that as soon as an appropriation should be made he should receive his pay, at the rate of $100 per month.

When I left the office of commissioner Mr. Gardiner had not been paid, but I supposed he had been before this time, having long since certified his account. I now find that he has not.

He did his duty faithfully, and is as honest, honorable, and upright a man as lives, and is entitled to his pay, and I hope you will aid him all you can in getting it.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

B. B. FRENCH,

Late Commissioner of Public Buildings,
Brevet Brigadier General NATHANIEL MICHLER, in charge of Public Buildings, &c.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I suppose, strictly speaking, this amendment is not in order.

Mr. KELSEY. I do not see but what it is in order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I raise the point of order that this proposed amendment is not for a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.) The Chair thinks it is too late to raise the point of order.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. KELSEY, but before the result was announced.

Mr. KELSEY called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, and Mr. KELSEY were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 29, noes 32.

The CHAIRMAN. A majority voting against the amendment, it is rejected.

Mr. KELSEY. No quorum has voted.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It was the general understanding by the House that the majority in the Committee of the Whole should decide questions without regard to whether there is a quorum present or not; but that a vote should be had in the House on every proposition submitted in Committee of the Whole, whether adopted or rejected by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that before going into Committee of the Whole the House ordered, by unanimous consent, that the Committee of the Whole should not be broken up by reason of a quorum not being present.

Mr. KELSEY. I have heard of no such understanding or general consent, and I object to it.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask to have read what was the understanding of the House. My understanding is that even where an amendment is voted down in Committee of the Whole it shall still be voted upon in the House.

Mr. PIKE. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. KELSEY] will be allowed to have a vote on his amendment in the House. I understand that is all he wants.

Mr. KELSEY. That is not all I want. I do not ask for a vote in the House. I insist that the rules shall be observed here in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the agreement in the House was that a majority vote in Committee of the Whole should decide all questions, whether there be a quorum voting or not. Upon that understanding the Chair decides that the amendment of the gentleman from New York is lost.

Mr. KELSEY. I appeal from that decision. Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I shall certainly appeal from that decision, for my understanding was that there should be a vote in the House on every amendment offered in Committee of the Whole, whether adopted by the committee or not.

Mr. KELSEY. I insist that the roll shall be called. There was no quorum voting on the last vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report from the manuscript of the reporters the agreement which the House made by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELSEY. I make the point that the agreement referred to did not apply to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the agreement made by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois." * * * * * "I suggest that we go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the appropriation bills, with the understanding that no quorum shall be necessary, and that whenever an amendment is adopted by a majority of those voting it shall go to the House, and where it is rejected let it stand the same as it would if there was a quorum voting."

Mr. KELSEY. The appropriation bill referred to was the legislative, executive, and judicial bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will suspend. This agreement, made in the House, stands as the order of the House, by which this committee is to be guided. The present occupant of the Chair was not in the House when the agreement was made; but he feels bound to enforce it as the order of the House. Therefore the Chair has decided that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not agreed to, a majority of those present having voted against it. And the Chair refuses to entertain the appeal from that decision, because the committee has no power to reverse the order of the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Indiana. I move that the committee rise. If the understanding was such as is now stated it was not so understood by a great many of us.

The motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Indiana, was not agreed to.

The following paragraph was read:

Treasury Department:

For temporary clerks in the Treasury Department: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to classify the clerks authorized according to the character of their service, $20,000.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend by striking out the proviso in the paragraph just read.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 5, noes 40.

Mr. KELSEY. No quorum has voted.

The following paragraph was read:

To complete the building used for court-house and post office at Springfield, Illinois, $30,000.

Mr. COBURN. I move to amend by adding after the paragraph just read the following:

That the sum of $3,500 be appropriated for repairs and improvements in the building erected for the post office and United States courts at Indianapolis, Indiana; to be expended under the direction of the clerk of the district court of the United States of said State.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. We have already made an appropriation—certainly once, and I am not sure but twice—for this same purpose.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] that in one of our appropriation bills there is a general appropriation for everything of this kind.

Mr. COBURN. If that will cover the repairs contemplated in the amendment I withdraw it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It covers everything of the kind.

Mr. COBURN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph last read the following:

For constructing the United States court-house and post office at Madison, Wisconsin, $50,000.

I understand that the recollection of the committee is that this amendment was adopted in the committee, but by some oversight it has been omitted. I understand the committee are entirely satisfied of the necessity of the appropriation.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I did not understand that the amount was $50,000. The matter, I believe, was before the committee; but I do not know whether it was definitely passed upon. I should have been opposed to it in committee as I am opposed to it now, but the House has overruled me again and again on all these questions.

Mr. BLAINE. My recollection is that the committee passed on it favorably. I know it was the intention of the committee to include it. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 15.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAUM. I submit the following amendment:

Add the following as a new paragraph:

For work on the public building now being erected at Cairo, Illinois, to be used as a post office, custom-house, and court-house of the United States, $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended an appropriation of $100,000 for this work, $50,000 in the present bill and $50,000 in the bill which has passed the House. An amendment covering an appropriation of $49,000 was adopted by the House in a bill passed some time ago. I believe that some of the committee has consented this sum shall come in, while I regard it not as much as should be appropriated. Rather than have a fight I have consented this small sum shall be appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary repairs of the roof, and alterations in the building used for custom-house and post office in Chicago, Illinois, $20,000: And it is hereby provided, That the commission appointed by the joint resolution of Congress "to procure a site for a building to accommodate the post office and United States courts in New York city," approved January 22, 1867, is hereby continued.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The right to object to any item not in order was reserved upon this bill by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and the Speaker expressly stated that gave the right to any gentleman to make the point. I make the point that this proviso is not in order. I believe this commission has expired. I do not know what the effect will be; but I think it will do no harm to strike out the proviso.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. We may lose the benefit of the commission. The commission can do no harm.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. We do not lose the labor of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Soldiers' bounties:

To facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties under act of July 28, 1866, as follows:

For fuel and gas, $700.

For carpentering, $2,000.

For fitting house, cases, &c., $500.

For rent, $1,200.

For fifty chairs, $300.

For one messenger, three laborers, and two night watchmen, $4,000.

Mr. PRICE. What are these for? I cannot exactly see what they are for.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will tell the gentleman. The chairman of the committee, who took charge of this bill, has a communication from the War Department on the subject. This is for extra room for fifty or one hundred clerks.

Mr. PRICE. Why did you not say so?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. We cannot put all the explanations into the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

City of Washington:

To enable the chief engineer of the Army to reimburse to the corporation of the city of Washington for expenses incurred in improving the property of the General Government in said city, under provisions of act of May 5, 1854, and in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, in book of estimates of appropriations, pages 244 and 245, $296,943 88: Provided, That section fifteen of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the city of Washington and to repeal all acts heretofore passed for that purpose," approved May 15, 1820, and section three of an act approved May 5, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act to incorporate the inhabitants of the city of Washington, passed May 15, 1820," are hereby repealed; and no improvements of the streets, alleys, avenues, or other property of the United States, in the city of Washington, shall hereafter be made until an appropriation shall have been made therefor; and such appropriation, when made, shall be expended under the direction of the chief engineer of the Army.

Mr. MAYNARD. I make the point of order that the proviso is general legislation, and not in order to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word. The Committee on Appropriations put in this appropriation on condition—

Mr. INGERSOLL. I raise a point of order. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order that this was not germane, being independent legislation, and it was sustained by the Chair. Now, my colleague proposes to argue the question.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Well, then, I move to strike out the whole of the paragraph. The Committee on Appropriations only put in this amendment for the purpose of stopping this fraud and swindle upon the Government which has been carried on so long in the city of Washington.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not be deterred by any threats of this kind. If this legislation is right it ought to pass. The Committee on Appropriations has put into this bill legislation in regard to affairs in this District, which properly comes within the province of the Committee for the District of Columbia. Now, the spirit with which we legislate for the capital of our country, the point of all others that is the object of observation of foreigners who come here, is certainly not a very enlarged or liberal one. We legislate for more people here than live in some of the small States. How much time and attention we give to their affairs gentlemen know as well as I do. If it is right they should have this sum of money let us appropriate it. If it is right that these walls should be rebuilt let the Committee for the District of Columbia examine them and report an appropriation. I dislike this sort of legislation, saying, "We will give so much money if you will give up a part of your charter."

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I do not know what the gentleman means by talking about this belonging to the Committee for the District of Columbia. From the commencement of this work there has never been a dollar appropriated for it, except what has been reported by the Committee on Appropriations. We have already given $4,000,000 to be squandered upon it, and one half of the money has been stolen.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. More than that.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Now we want to put a stop to this.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am not speaking of the merits or demerits of this appropriation, whether it is right or wrong. What I did speak about was the principle of granting these appropriations upon condition that the law should be changed, and the rights of the people under their charter should be limited by this amendment. If the appropriation is right, let us pass it; if it is wrong, strike it out. But let the Committee for the District of Columbia adjust the question of the charter of this city.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. The Committee for the District of Columbia has no more to do with this than the man in the moon. We have voted appropriations to the amount of $4,000,000 for this work. Three times we have finished and stopped it, and three times we have added $110,000 at the close of the year in a deficiency bill. We thought we would try now and put in something effectual, saying that they should not go on next year. And now it seems it is the old game over again. I shall go for striking out the whole of it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike out the last word. I apprehend that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not understand the position of my honorable friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] with regard to this proposition. The gentleman from Tennessee objects to this independent legislation as not belonging to the Committee on Appropriations and not being proper in an appropriation bill. Now, no one can dispute the correctness of that position. The gentleman from Tennessee does not insist that the appropriation proper shall come from the Committee for the District of Columbia, nor has any one else ever contended that it was the province of the Committee for the District of Columbia to report such an appropriation. We all agree that it is the province of the Committee on Appropriations. But what have the Committee on Appropriations done? In this deficiency bill they have reported an appropriation of a sum of money, under the estimate of the War Department, in virtue of a section of the law which this bill now proposes to repeal. What we object to is that in this bill, in carrying out the recommendation of the War Department, you propose to repeal an existing statute.

A MEMBER. It ought to be done.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, if it ought to be done, it should be done in a proper way; and so it is held by the rule and by your chairman. Now, in regard to there having been immense sums of money squandered and stolen in prosecuting this work I have my doubts. The appropriations for the District of Columbia have been miserly within the last six or seven years. You have done but very little toward sustaining the dignity of the Government at your national capital. You have appropriated but a trifling sum in the past half dozen years.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. How much?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Not half as much as you ought to have appropriated. You have not appropriated a single dollar by virtue of a single appropriation bill that you have ever reported to the House that has not been warranted and authorized by law and based upon some existing statute which has been passed by Congress. Now, what is the law? This appropriation is made in virtue of a statute which simply declares that the Government of the United States shall pay for improvements made by the city authorities lying contiguous to the property belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman and I do not understand this matter alike. We certainly had this claim settled and audited, and I thought we had appropriated the amount added.

Mr. INGERSOLL. That I do not complain of. I say the amount is satisfactory, but I do not desire that it shall be coupled with a proposition to repeal the law which authorizes these improvements to be made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. One word in regard to this matter. I think I am safe in saying that the Committee on Appropriations never would have reported in favor of paying this amount unless coupled with the condition that this law of May 5, 1864, should be repealed. It is one of the laws passed during the rebellion, without any particular regard to what we were doing. Now, what is it? I will read it:

"That in all cases in which the streets, avenues, or alleys of said city pass through or by any of the property of the United States the Commissioner of the Public Buildings shall pay to the duly authorized officer of the corporation the just proportion of the expenses incurred in improving said avenue, street, or alley which the said property bears to the whole cost thereof, to be ascertained in the same manner as the same is apportioned among the individual proprietors of the property improved thereby."

Under that law, without reserving to ourselves any right of control over these contracts, the city government went on and has brought in a bill of $296,000 for the Government to pay.

Mr. INGERSOLL. How many years has that been accumulating?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The estimate was sent in here in December last.

Mr. INGERSOLL. It is for deficiencies running over from year to year.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Only a very short time, as the gentleman will see by looking at the estimates which I have here.

Mr. DELANO. I suggest to the gentleman that the Thirty-Ninth Congress settled a balance for this sort of business with the city of Washington.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman is right, and we had hoped when that was done that we would have had no more of these bills. But when this Congress met an estimate for a deficiency where you had made no appropriation to carry on this work, of $296,000, was brought in, which we are to pay out of the pockets of our constituents. Well, sir, there were some considerations which induced the Committee on Appropriations to recommend that the sum in the bill, $296,000, should be appropriated, provided we could repeal this law altogether, and could provide further that no more work shall be done unless a contract is made and the money appropriated for it. Does my friend and colleague [Mr. INGERSOLL] object to that? Why does he oppose this proviso? Why will he stand in the way of this reform? Why will he not let us provide here in this bill, while we pay this outstanding claim, that hereafter we will not permit the corporations of Washington and Georgetown to go forward and mulct us out of two, three, or five hundred thousand dollars more?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DELANO. I renew it. The proviso attached to this appropriation ought to be preserved if the appropriation is preserved. The section of law under which the Government can be made responsible for claims of this sort on the part of the corporation of this city is one that ought to be repealed. I know, from having examined these claims before, that we are liable to be imposed upon by false accounts and false estimates. The present law charges the city with its portion of the expense according to the relative value of the property benefited by the improvements. In the Thirty-Ninth Congress we settled up all the old claims of this sort against the Government and in favor of the corporation, and supposed that we were done with them. But it was found that under the law as it now stands these claims continue to multiply and be pressed upon the Government to an unreasonable extent. I therefore favor striking this all out, or else to retain this proviso to guard the United States against the impositions which it constantly suffers under the present arrangement. I think a careful examination of this subject by any candid man will convince him that we should either preserve all this part of the bill as printed or strike it all out.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I want the Committee of the Whole to understand this case, and then they can do just what they think to be right. Originally the Government of the United States received as a bounty, a bonus, a gratuity, from the proprietors of the real estate here a certain number of lots, from the sale of which was derived $1,000,000 at least. That $1,000,000 was appropriated by the Government—

Mr. DELANO. Allow me to say that I have been over that whole subject, and I know that the Government has fully accounted for all that amount four or five times over.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I did not say the Government had not accounted for it. I was merely stating what the Government had received. And it never has spent one fourth of that sum in beautifying and adorning this city, except where the city has paid out an equal amount for the same purpose. Under the present law, which it is proposed to repeal by the proviso in this bill, what are the rights of the Government? Here are Jackson square, Lincoln square, the Circle, and other squares and public avenues over which the city has no control whatever, no municipal authority. The present law provides that when the city authorities make a public improvement, such as constructing a sewer, paving a street, or making a permanent public improvement of any kind passing by any of the Government reservations or grounds, the Government shall pay its pro rata share, the same as a citizen does in reference to his property. If the Government has been swindled under such an arrangement, so have the citizens here been swindled. And if the citizens have been swindled, then they have swindled themselves, for these improvements have been ordered by those they have themselves elected. Now, the truth is that where the Government has paid a dollar for these improvements the city has paid five dollars. The Government has not been called upon to pay one dollar, except in the case of improvements passing by the Government reservations and public grounds. Now, it is proposed to repeal this law. If you do so what will be the result? The city proposes to make a sewer on Virginia avenue, for instance. When the work reaches a Government reservation it must be stopped.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. They can come to Congress and get an appropriation.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes, sir; the work must be stopped until an appropriation for it is obtained from Congress. And so it will be with every other improvement, no matter how important and necessary it may be, or how trivial it may be, if it should pass by any Government reservation or public ground. The Government is now bound by law and in equity to pay its pro rata share of any improvement by which its property is benefited. But if the present law shall be repealed, then there must be a special act of Congress before any such improvement can be made by the city. Now, that is as much as to say that you cannot trust the administration of the city in this respect, so far as Government property is concerned, although at the same time, to the same extent and with the like authority, the administration of the city is exercised in regard to its own tax-payers. Repeal the present law, and you will have a hundred special bills before Congress for these improvements. Let the law remain as it now is, and you will have no such trouble in regard to these things.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DELANO. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I renew the amendment. I think we had better agree to let this section stand as it is. Let this city be repaid what it has expended; and let there be an examination hereafter of this whole matter by some appropriate committee before we make any more appropriations. I withdraw the amendment.

On the motion to strike out the paragraph there were—ayes 43, noes 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out the paragraph is agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Has a quorum voted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already passed on that question.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on ordering tellers.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I make this point of order: when it appears that no quorum has voted, is it not the duty of the Chair to appoint tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already passed upon that question.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a point of order. I desire to know in what respect the rule has been changed, so that when the committee is found without a quorum it can go on and do business?

The CHAIRMAN. By the order of the House all questions arising in Committee of the Whole in the consideration of this bill are to be determined by a majority vote of those present.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, sir, I shall ask for a separate vote in the House on this amendment.

The following paragraph was read:

For the survey of northern and northwestern lakes, $75,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read. The same appropriation has already been made in the river and harbor bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Reconstruction:

For deficiency under the reconstruction acts for the several military districts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865:

For the first district, $6,000.
For the second district, $127,898 25.
For the fourth district, $53,200.
For the fifth district, $45,000.

For the following amounts, estimated as necessary in carrying out the reconstruction acts from and after the 30th day of June, 1865:

For the first district, $93,000.
For the second district, $15,000.
For the third district, $15,000.
For the fourth district, $75,000.
For the fifth district, $3,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to put a question to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move an amendment?

Mr. PHELPS. No, sir; I simply wish to make an inquiry. I wish to know whether the chairman of the committee is able to furnish at this time statistics showing the total amount appropriated for reconstruction since the passage of the act of March 2, 1867, including the items now incorporated in this bill as deficiencies?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending. Unless the gentleman moves an amendment debate is not in order.

Mr. PHELPS. I move, then, to amend by striking out the last word of the paragraph last read. I do it for the purpose, if possible, of eliciting from the chairman the information I have thought we ought to have. I do not think the House ought to be called upon, or this committee, to vote these additional items in the nature of deficiencies without at least some explanation from the gentleman who has charge of the bill of the purpose for which these items are required, and why the amounts appropriated have failed to be sufficient. For that reason I have asked the question.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I would like to answer the gentleman, but it would take too long.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional labor cleaning the center building of the Capitol, repairing the Washington statue on the east grounds of the Capitol, cleaning and repairing columns in the building, laying a new brick pavement on the west front, and repairing fountains, $1,500.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike that out. According to the theory laid down by the committee this work should be done at the expense of the city, never mind who owns the property. It seems to be the rule acted upon by the Committee on Appropriations, that the city should pay all the expenses of the Government in the city of Washington. My amendment, therefore, is in accordance with the views of the committee.

Mr. KELSEY. There is another reason it should be stricken out; it is in another bill.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. We want the city, not the District, to pay for its own work.

Mr. MILLER. Let me ask a question. Does the city of Washington want to pay for this?

Mr. INGERSOLL. This is on the same line as the previous action of the committee.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it is hereby provided, That hereafter no contract shall be entered into for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement whatever, which shall involve the expenditure of a larger sum of money than the amount in the Treasury appropriated for the specific purpose, and no person shall be employed by any Department of the Government unless an amount of money shall have been previously appropriated sufficient to pay all such persons. And if any officer of the Government shall contract for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement which shall involve a larger amount than the specific sum appropriated for such purpose, or shall employ any persons in any Department of the Government unless an appropriation sufficient to pay all such persons shall have been previously made, such officer shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than two years, and shall pay a fine of $2,000, and shall thereafter be deemed incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to move an additional section.

Mr. POLAND. I make the point of order that the provision just read is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not too late; the gentleman rose in time.

Mr. POLAND. I understand this to be general legislation, and not only general legislation but penal legislation; but I would not object if the section was not so loosely drawn as to be a dangerous one.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope my friend from Vermont, whom we all know to be an excellent lawyer, will move an amendment. This is an evil which should be remedied.

Mr. POLAND. Introduce a bill and refer it to my committee.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will make a bargain; if he will withdraw the point of order and prepare a section, I will let him offer it in the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. Bargaining in legislation has a bad sound.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It has not a bad sound that we should try to prevent frauds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the provision out, as being general legislation.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend by offering the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the benefit of the several benevolent institutions and charitable societies in the District of Columbia in full for deficiencies in the fiscal year just ended, and for the purposes herein specified for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, namely:

Government Hospital for the Insane:
For the support, clothing, medical and moral treatment of the insane of the Army and Navy and revenue-cutter service, and of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane, including $500 for books and stationery and incidental expenses, $90,500.

For finishing, furnishing, lighting, and heating the unfinished part of the east wing of the main hospital edifice, $7,000.

For the purchase, by the Secretary of the Interior, for the agricultural purposes of the institution, one hundred and forty-eight acres, more or less, of land lying directly east of the present grounds of the hospital, and separated from them by the public road, $23,000.

Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb:
For the support of the institution, in addition to the existing appropriation, to meet the increased expense of maintaining pupils whose admission was authorized by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1867, $5,000.

For continuing the work upon the buildings of the institution, in accordance with plans heretofore submitted to Congress, $48,000.

For the support of the institution, including $1,000 for books and illustrative apparatus, $25,000.

For the proper inclosure, improvement, and enlargement of the grounds of the institution, in accordance with plans heretofore submitted to Congress, $5,600.

Provided, That hereafter the United States shall be represented in the board of trustees of said Institution for the Deaf and Dumb by three trustees, to be appointed at the beginning of each Congress, as follows: one Senator in Congress, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and two Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives: And provided further, That no part of the real or personal property now held or hereafter to be acquired by said last-named institution shall at any time be sold, aliened, or conveyed away, or in any manner used, except for the purposes of said deaf and dumb institution, without the express assent of the Congress of the United States, first had and obtained through an act of Congress duly passed and approved: And provided further, That so much of the act of February 16, 1837, as allows the payment of $150 per annum for the maintenance of each pupil admitted from the District of Columbia and from the Army and Navy be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum:

For the purchase of land and erecting buildings to take the place of the premises now used, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000.

For the support of the asylum, over and above the probable amount which will be received from independent or pay patients, $15,000.

For the compensation of the Providence Hospital, in Washington city, District of Columbia, $30,000.

For the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, $10,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I make the point of order that these appropriations are the subject of two other separate appropriation bills of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] has given notice. They do not belong to this bill, and the gentleman has a right to go into the Committee of the Whole upon those bills, and as we have closed debate it is unjust, unfair, and unparliamentary to consider these matters now.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, the objection that it is unjust, unfair, and unparliamentary to offer this amendment comes with an ill grace from the gentleman from Illinois. I introduced, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, in February last two small bills appropriating money for benevolent institutions in the District of Columbia, and by reason of objections interposed by the gentleman from Illinois they have been delayed till this moment. I am afraid they will not come in at all, hence I avail myself of this opportunity to wash my hands of this whole matter. I am in favor of carrying out these appropriations for the District of Columbia, and I appeal to gentlemen to support me in my endeavor to get these appropriations passed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I just made a suggestion to my friend to move to lay aside the other business in Committee of the Whole, and take up his two bills in committee after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. SPALDING. If that is the understanding I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I made that suggestion to the gentleman before he offered his amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I will agree to that.

Mr. BLAINE. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line three hundred and forty-eight:

For supply of deficiency in payment for material for gates for Judiciary Square Hospital, $868.

The Surgeon General has written a letter on this subject in which he says there is that amount due, and the special appropriation being exhausted and the accounts of the disbursing officer being closed it will be impossible to pay the contractor except by special appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that appropriation will be allowed. The communication from the Surgeon General came to me, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, yesterday a little too late to offer the amendment in the proper place. So I put the matter in the hands of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I agreed to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to go back to page 4 and insert an amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I reserve an objection until I hear the amendment read.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to insert at the end of line seventy-four the following:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to ratify, confirm, or recognize the validity of any treaty.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not see that that has any applicability here, or that there is any necessity for it. I object, therefore, to going back.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will allow me to be heard.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend by adding, as a new section, what I send to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid, to the same classes of officers and other persons in the civil service of the United States Government at Washington embraced in the joint resolution of Congress entitled "Joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employees in the civil service of the Government at Washington," passed February 28, 1867, an additional compensation on their respective salaries as fixed by law, or where no salary is fixed by law, upon their pay respectively, from and after the 30th day of June, 1867, to the 30th day of June, 1868; including, also, such persons as have been employed in any capacity in any of the Departments, and the watchmen on the Dome of the Capitol and in the Capitol grounds, the inspector of marble and the foreman of mechanics at work on the Capitol extension and the watchmen in said extension, whether inside or out, and to the employees of the jail; and to include not only those now in service, but those who have at any time during said year been in service, as follows:

To all those whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,400 an increase of fifteen per cent. upon the amount of their compensation.

To all those whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,600, but does exceed $1,400, an increase of twelve and a half per cent. thereupon.

To all those whose annual compensation does not exceed $1,800, but does exceed $1,600, an increase of ten per cent. thereupon.

And a sufficient sum to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy my five minutes. A word will be sufficient. Some time ago we passed a bill giving twenty per cent. additional compensation to all whose salaries are under $2,500; but a scare-crow—I think that is the name—a scare-crow came on here from New York and coursed over the ground one night, and next day the friends of the bill scattered like the antelopes of the mountains, scared to death; the bill was defeated, and the scare-crow went back to New York triumphant. [Laughter.] Now, this amendment contains less than one third the amount that was appropriated by that bill, and we can surely afford to give this small pittance to these men. I have heard it said that a good many of them are married. I saw a list of the unhappy men who are married, [laughter;] and more than three fourths of those who will be benefited by this amendment have that misfortune. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "the members of the Metropolitan police."

Mr. BLAINE. That is right.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Yes, that is right. They are the poorest paid men in the city of Washington or in the employ of the Government.

Mr. POLAND. The Metropolitan police only receive ninety dollars a month, making $1,080 a year. Their original pay was sixty dollars a month. We passed an act two years ago giving them thirty dollars a month in addition, but it was to be paid by the cities of Washington and Georgetown. They are paid only sixty dollars a month by the General Government, and thirty dollars a month by the citizens of Washington and Georgetown, making ninety dollars a month. My proposition seems to meet with such general favor that I will not occupy further time in advocating it.

Mr. MULLINS. While this is being done, I notify the committee that at the proper time I will move to amend the amendment by inserting a proposition that there shall be paid back to each tax-payer to the United States twenty per cent. of what he has paid since the time to which this amendment goes back. You propose to run your hands into the pockets of the hard-laboring people, who labor fourteen hours a day, and take from what little wealth they may have accumulated this twenty per cent., to be given to those who are laboring under contracts only eight and nine hours a day. I cannot see the justice of the proposition unless you intend to pay back twenty per cent. to the tax-payers who are doing all within their power to extinguish this debt which is hanging on the body politic like a nightmare. You propose to deplete the Treasury this much and to stop this much from being used in the extinguishment of the public debt for the purpose of putting twenty per cent. in the pockets of men who are laboring under positive contracts. Sir, if they are not receiving the amount due to them, in the name of God pass a law to increase their contracts. But they were legitimately entitled to make contracts by law, and they have seen fit to make contracts with the Government, and if they are not satisfied let them go out of office. I can find ten men to one to fill their places. The country to-day is coming here from every quarter asking for offices; and if these men cannot live at the present rates let us see if we cannot get men from another quarter equally as good, if not better, for the same or a less price. Propositions have been made to me by men competent to fill any offices to fill these offices at a much less rate than that at which they are now filled. And now you propose to take this out of the pockets of the people of the country who make their living by night, who work from twelve to fourteen hours a day.

Mr. SPALDING. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is willing to relinquish the additional $2,000 a year which we put into an appropriation bill for his benefit and mine for the benefit of the tax-payers of the country?

Mr. MULLINS. You did it yourself. I was not here to stop it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. POLAND, to include in the amendment of Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, the members of the Metropolitan police; and upon a division there were ayes 14, noes 29.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. POLAND called for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were six in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I had supposed that this proposition for increase of salaries had been set at rest by the action of the House heretofore upon a similar proposition. But it has come up to-day in a modified form. In the few minutes allowed me under the rule I cannot say all upon this subject I would like to say.

Mr. Chairman, this Congress upon its organization promised the people that the expenses of the Government should be curtailed, and at least a portion of the burdens they had so patiently borne should be removed. For that purpose, and with these objects in view, the joint select Committee on Retrenchment was raised. Among the subjects committed to its charge was the investigation of this very matter of the pay of the clerks in the Departments. I will not say with the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. SCHENCK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. ELIOT,] that we have worked night and day, in season and out of season. But I will say we have given it every attention its importance demands, and have found that many of these places are nothing but sinecures, that many of the incumbents in other places are utterly worthless to the Government, and as a whole the persons for whose benefit this amendment is intended are better paid than persons performing similar service in any city in the United States. I make the assertion here that nowhere can it be shown that so large an amount of money is paid for so small an amount of work. Not only is the salary as large or larger, but these clerks never work but six hours a day, and oftener but four, against ten and twelve hours in other places. Not only so, but most of them are granted furloughs from one to two months each year without any abatement of salary for their absence from duty.

Early in the session the Committee on Retrenchment introduced into the House a resolution calling on the Departments for information as to the cost of this twenty per cent. for the year ending July last. In answer to the inquiry the following figures were furnished:

War Department.....	$345,402 62
Navy Department.....	47,015 77
Treasury Department.....	647,334 67
Post Office Department.....	55,508 01
Interior Department.....	124,212 63
Patent Office Department.....	31,203 02
State Department.....	17,386 60
Agriculture Department.....	20,079 01
Executive Mansion, Coast Survey, navy-yard, Observatory, Arsenal, city post office, public buildings, Bureau of Freedmen, Capitol and Treasury extension, Attorney General, estimated...	50,000 00
Total.....	$1,318,142 33

Nearly one million and a half dollars, Mr. Chairman, of the hard earnings of the people taken from the Treasury and distributed as a gratuity. I will not say where the bulk of it will finally go, for every gentleman on this floor well knows. Ask the proprietors of the jewelry stores, the billiard saloons, the places of amusement and debauchery, if they feel any interest in the passage of this amendment.

This amendment proposes to go out and hunt up every worthless drone who has been expelled from the Department for incompetency during the year and give him an additional twenty per cent. But, worse than that, several persons have been detected in criminal practices within the year and dismissed. Some of them are now either in jail or held to bail to answer for the crimes they have committed. Lest there might be a few dollars of the people's money left in your Treasury this amendment calls up all such; and you manifest your benevolence by visiting the prisoner and ministering to him in his afflictions.

Mr. Chairman, these are but items of the cases in which you are doing injustice to the people in passing this amendment. If you pass it, never again attempt a defense of your extravagance before the people. Discharge your Retrenchment Committee, and give loose rein to every cormorant who seeks entrance to your Treasury.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] certainly cannot have heard my amendment read, or he would not make the objection he does to it. And I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MULLINS] if it was not too delicate a matter, and I will ask any gentleman here to state how he justifies receiving $5,000 a year, in some cases for months before he was elected? I have heard of no scruples of conscience from any one about that.

Mr. MULLINS. I will answer the gentleman. I take it by virtue of the law which you yourselves passed, and which I never asked you to pass. I do not ask for any more than the law gives me.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. So the gentleman would take advantage of an unjust law, while he would begrudge a pittance to these poor people who have large families to support.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ELA. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And to all persons in the employment of the Government of the United States in the city of Washington whose compensation is below the sum of $1,200 per year there shall be paid extra compensation at the rate of twenty per cent. thereupon.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if there is any class of persons entitled to an increased rate of pay under the provisions of the proposed measure it is those who are compelled to labor, not six hours a day, but ten hours a day, or more. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] proposes to exclude from the benefits of his proposition the employes of the Government Printing Office; and for that reason I protest against the adoption of his amendment. I desire that they shall be included.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Let me say to the gentleman that I find upon inquiry that the Superintendent of Public Printing has the right at any time to add to the pay of the employes of the Government Printing Office, and that their compensation has already been raised.

Mr. ELA. There is a law expressly prohibiting the Public Printer from paying to the employes of the Government Printing Office more than is paid in printing offices outside. He is restricted in that way. Now, I repeat that if there is any class of persons entitled to the additional compensation of ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent., it is those who are engaged in the Government Printing Office, and also those Government employes generally whose compensation is less than $1,200 a year. The persons employed in the Government Printing Office work three or four hours a day longer than those engaged in the Departments. The men who receive less than $1,200 a year have families to maintain as well as those who get higher pay, and I protest against any legislation from the benefits of which they shall be excluded. I undertake to say that the employes of the Government Printing Office are generally competent to go into the Departments and take clerkships and perform the duties of those clerkships as well as they are performed by the present incumbents.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Does not the gentleman know that the pay of the employes of the Government Printing Office is not fixed by law, but is left to the discretion of the Superintendent of Public Printing, and that he has already raised their compensation thirty-three and a third per cent. higher than that which is paid for the like work anywhere else in the United States?

Mr. ELA. I know that the Superintendent of Public Printing is, as I have stated, restricted by the limitations of law as to the amount which he shall pay. In addition to that, the employment of these printers will not average more than ten months in the year, if it averages nine; and when they are out of employment their pay is at once cut off. If they are absent from their work a single day a deduction is made from their pay; and if they are not in attendance at the sound of the whistle they lose a quarter of a day's pay. With the clerks in the Departments the case is different. They are absent for weeks and months at a time, and no deduction from their pay is made. I protest against this proposition for increased pay unless it shall include those who work more hours per day and receive less pay than those now included in the amendment.

Mr. ELA's amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I desire simply to say that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ELA] altogether misunderstands my proposition. Under it those who receive the lowest rate of pay, (whatever it may be,) less than $1,400, will receive fifteen per cent. additional.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to move to strike out all that part of the amendment which proposes to give this increase of pay to persons not now in the public service. If the pending proposition should in its present form become a law it will give this additional allowance to every person who has been discharged from office, no matter for what cause, though it may have been a misdemeanor or a crime. The persons now out of the public service whom this amendment proposes to pay are scattered all over the United States, so that it will be almost impossible in many cases to discover where they are and how much they are entitled to receive. Besides that, as I have already suggested, this proposition will pay them without regard to their deserts or the cause by which their connection with the public service has terminated. The amendment, if I am not mistaken as to its scope, is one which no gentleman, when he properly understands it, can support. A provision of this objectionable nature was the chief thing that caused the reconsideration and rejection of the bill on this subject heretofore passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 605, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, and had directed him to report the same back to the House recommending concurrence in some, non-concurrence in others, and concurrence in some with amendments.

Also, that the committee had under consideration House bill No. 1841, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DIXON was granted leave of absence until Thursday; Mr. GERZ until Tuesday; and Mr. VAN AUKEN for one week.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order. And pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the pending section be closed in two minutes after its consideration shall be resumed by the committee.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Say ten minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will say five.

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not contemplate that we would be called upon to vote on this question of twenty per cent. in committee, and that it should be decided without a quorum. I thought the only amendments under consideration were the Senate amendments to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill. I desire to withdraw unanimous consent to any arrangement heretofore adopted.

The SPEAKER. It was adopted by unanimous consent; and the Chair knows no way to rescind the order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.
Mr. MAYNARD. Does the Chair decide we can go on and legislate on all matters without a quorum.

Mr. BLAINE. The committee does not legislate.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole does not legislate any more than the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand that less than a quorum can do no business.

The SPEAKER. That was decided before the House went into committee on this bill by unanimous consent, and it can only be rescinded by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.
Mr. MAYNARD moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

CESSION OF LAND TO THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, relative to the cession to the United States of a tract of land near New London, on the Thames, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The motion to close debate was then agreed to. The question recurred upon the motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1841) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The pending question was on the amendment to the amendment, to add the words "and to include only those now in service."

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, there were—ayes 30, noes 28.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, demanded tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move to amend by adding the following:

To each private soldier who served in the Army in the war against the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, twenty per cent. on the amount paid such soldier for such service.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to add the following:

And that the members of the Metropolitan police shall receive ten per cent. on the amount of their present compensation.

I desire to state to the committee that the Metropolitan police—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted by order of the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I understood that five minutes were allowed.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes 20, noes 38.

Mr. ELA. I move to add the following:

Including persons employed in the Government Printing Office.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes nine, noes not counted.

Mr. MULLINS. I move the amendment that I notified the House of a few moments ago, to add the following:

Resolved, That the Treasurer be, and he is hereby, required to refund to each person, firm, or party twenty per cent. of the amount of taxes for public revenue which have been paid by the same to the United States revenue collectors from the 30th day of June, 1857, to the 30th day of June, 1868.

The question being taken on the amendment there were—ayes 20, noes 9.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, demanded tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I offer the following amendment:

Also, that all pensions to the widows of soldiers who perished during the war for the suppression of the rebellion be increased twenty per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELA. I move the following amendment, to come in previous to the last paragraph:

Provided, That the above additional compensation be paid out of the appropriations made for members of Congress until their compensation is reduced twenty per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GETZ. I move to amend that last amendment by striking out "twenty" and inserting "fifty." Twenty per cent. would not be enough to pay the compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, as amended, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Ohio ask now that the committee lay aside this bill and take up his two appropriation bills?

Mr. SPALDING. No, sir; I shall not ask it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being House bill No. 1841, making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, had made sundry amendments thereto, and had directed him to report the bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I now offer the amendment in relation to extra compensation in the form in which I originally offered it in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that if it is the same amendment that the gentleman offered in Committee of the Whole, and has been considered by the Committee of the Whole, it is in order to offer it in the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It was rejected by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That may be; but if it was considered in Committee of the Whole it is in order to offer it in the House.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill, and also of the amendments of the Senate to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, until Monday next after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged question. I submit a report from the committee of investigation relative to the impeachment of the President, that it may be printed. I shall not ask any action on it until there is a fuller House, and I do not care to have it read. I move that the report be recommended and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, in writing, was communicated by Mr. MOORE, his Private Secretary, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 365) constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed on behalf of the Government of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 867) for the relief of Jonathan Jessup, postmaster at York, Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 764) for the relief of certain exporters of rum;

An act (H. R. No. 1120) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the names of certain vessels;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 295) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) for the relief of Robert Lindsay;

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for four days was granted to Mr. ROBERTSON.

ARMS FOR THE MILITIA.

Mr. PAINE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Reconstruction, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1355) to provide for the issue of arms for the use of the militia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and requires the Secretary of War to deliver to the Governor of each State and Territory represented in the Congress of the United States, at the seat of government of such State or Territory for the use of the militia thereof, as many serviceable Springfield rifled muskets, of caliber fifty-eight, with accouterments and equipments, and serviceable field-pieces, with carriages, caissons, equipments, and implements, as the Governor of such State or Territory shall require for the use of the loyal militia therein, not exceeding two thousand rifled muskets, with accouterments and equipments, and two field-pieces, with carriages, caissons, equipments, and implements, for each congressional district and Territory so represented, upon the certificate of the Governor showing to the satisfaction of the General of the Army that the regiments and companies for which such ordnance and ordnance stores are required are duly organized of loyal citizens of such State or Territory under the laws thereof; and the ordnance and ordnance stores shall thereafter remain the property of the United States, subject to the control of Congress.

Mr. PAINE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONVICT IMMIGRANTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress a copy of a dispatch from the United States consul at Elsinore, and of an instruction from the Secretary of State to the United States minister at Copenhagen, relative to an alleged practice of the Danish authorities to banish convicts to this country. The expediency of making it a penal offense to bring such persons to the United States is submitted to your consideration.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 29, 1868.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the message and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 502) to incorporate the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington;

A bill (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of William B. Todd;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue, third district of California; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the following House bills, and agreed to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 373) to place the name of Mahala A. Straight upon the pension-roll of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 456) granting a pension to the minor children of Pleasant Stoops;

A bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to George F. Gorham, late a private in company B, twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 521) to place the name of Solomon Zachman on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 522) granting a pension to W. W. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. No. 525) granting a pension to Jeremiah T. Hallett;

A bill (H. R. No. 661) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of William Craft;

A bill (H. R. No. 662) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of George R. Waters;

A bill (H. R. No. 663) granting a pension to Cyrus K. Wood, the legal representative of Cyrus D. Wood;

A bill (H. R. No. 664) granting a pension to the minor children of Charles Gouler;

A bill (H. R. No. 666) granting a pension to Henry H. Hunter;

A bill (H. R. No. 669) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Myron Wilklow;

A bill (H. R. No. 670) granting a pension to the widow and children of Andrew Holman;

A bill (H. R. No. 672) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Charles W. Wilcox;

A bill (H. R. No. 673) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of John S. Phelps;

A bill (H. R. No. 675) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Cornelius L. Rice;

A bill (H. R. No. 676) granting a pension to Thomas Connolly;

A bill (H. R. No. 677) granting a pension to the minor children of James Heatherly;

A bill (H. R. No. 770) granting a pension to John H. Finlay;

A bill (H. R. No. 771) granting a pension to John H. Lay;

A bill (H. R. No. 773) granting a pension to William H. McDonald; and

A bill (H. R. No. 825) granting a pension to John W. Hughes;

And that the Senate had appointed as the conferees upon the part of the Senate Mr. VAN WINKLE of West Virginia, Mr. TRUMBULL of Illinois, and Mr. EDMUNDS of Vermont.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A bill (S. No. 487) to disapprove an act of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory redistricting the Territory and reassigning the judges thereto; and

A bill (S. No. 564) concerning the tax commissioners for the State of Arkansas.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs two bills which have been referred to that committee, with a substitute, which I ask to have printed and recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot report a substitute for two bills. He can report a substitute for one bill, and report back the other bill and move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well; I will do that. I report back, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House bill No. 1139, to establish, under the direction of the Secretary of State, agencies in Great Britain, Germany, Sweden, and Norway for the promotion of emigration to the United States, with a substitute, which I ask to have printed and recommitted.

The SPEAKER. This can be regarded as an original bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well; I report it, and ask that it be printed and recommitted.

The bill (H. R. No. 1355) for the encouragement of immigration was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 1139, of which I have just given the title, and also House bill No. 1145, to establish an unpaid emigration agency at Liverpool, Glasgow, and Dublin, in Great Britain and Ireland, and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. SHELLABARGER, on account of ill health.

REGISTERING, ETC., OF SHIPS OR VESSELS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Commerce, with the recommendation that the same do pass, Senate bill No. 505, to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman explain the object of this bill?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It proposes to change a provision of the present law which requires all the owners of a vessel to make oath every time the vessel is transferred. That provision has been a dead letter for some years past, but has been revived lately, and is deemed the cause of unnecessary trouble.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARK AUG. GUARDIAN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce, for action at this time, Senate joint resolution No. 36, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Aug. Guardian.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 46, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday next.

PETITION.

The following petition was presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Catharine Skinner, for a pension.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 6, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. A. D. GILLETTE, D. D.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Friday last was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the 16th ultimo, information in relation to prohibiting Oneida Indians from cutting and removing timber from the common lands of the tribe; which, on motion of Mr. POMEROY, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FOURTEENTH CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the several States by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress passed on the 13th day of June, 1866, to be designated article fourteen of amendments to the Constitution of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of citizens of Steuben county, New York, praying the passage of the House bill granting pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

Mr. POMEROY. I have received a petition, very numerously signed, asking for a mail route from Waterville, the terminus of the Union Pacific railway, central branch, by way of Salina, Sharpe's, and Creek county, to Wichita, Kansas. I believe we have passed a post route bill this session; I should have been exceedingly gratified to have got this route upon the bill; but as it is, I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, that it may receive the attention in the next bill that comes from the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a memorial of citizens of New Jersey, protesting against the ratification or confirmation by Congress of any conveyance of any part of the Yosemite valley by the State of California to individuals; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented the petition of John Bulfinch, praying compensation for the use by the Government of his schooner Wings of the Morning and damages sustained by the explosion of the Government warehouse in Mobile in May, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CATFELL presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying the adoption of measures for the reduction of taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill

(H. R. No. 202) to create the office of surveyor general in the Territory of Utah, and establish a land office in said Territory, and extend the homestead and preemption laws over the same, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of O. N. Cutler, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 591) for the relief of O. N. Cutler. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union, reported it without amendment and without any recommendation.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 570) for a grant of land, and granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Potts, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 595) for the relief of John Potts. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 592) relating to the Commissioner of Patents; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 593) in addition to the acts concerning naturalization; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of L. Merchant & Co. and Peter Rosecrantz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 869.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever any person, who has participated in the late rebellion, and from whom all legal disabilities arising therefrom has been removed by act of Congress by a vote of two thirds of each House, has been or shall be elected or appointed to any office or place of trust in or under the Government of the United States, he shall, before entering upon the duties thereof, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation, and no other:

"I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God."

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed two amendments to the bill. The first amendment was in line five, to strike out the word "has" and insert "have."

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is merely a verbal amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be considered as agreed to, unless objection be made.

The next amendment was after the word "thereof," in line nine, to insert the words "instead of the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois if I understand the operation of the amendment proposed. It is not to alter the bill substantially as it comes from the other House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; to make it more definite. One is grammatical, to strike out the word "has" and insert "have"; and the other is to insert a provision that the oath prescribed shall be in lieu of the oath required by the act of July 2, 1862.

Mr. SUMNER. That I understand is the effect of the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives, is it not?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it was intended to be that.

Mr. SUMNER. The language being "he shall before entering upon the duties thereof take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation, and no other." That is the language of the House bill, and now it is proposed to insert "instead of the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862."

Mr. TRUMBULL. To make it a little more specific.

Mr. SUMNER. I simply wished to understand it.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. YATES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 417.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 417) to amend an act entitled "An act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a territorial government for New Mexico," was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The act referred to is to be amended so as to provide:

Every bill which shall have passed the council and house of representatives of said Territory shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor of the Territory; if he approve he shall sign it, but if he do not approve it, he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, who shall enter the objections at large upon their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that house it shall become a law, the Governor's objections to the contrary notwithstanding. But in such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and entered upon the journal of each house respectively. And if the Governor shall not return any bill presented to him for approval, after its passage by both houses of the Legislature, within three days, (Sundays excepted), after such presentation, the same shall become a law in like manner as if the Governor had approved it: Provided, however, That the Assembly shall not have adjourned sine die during the three days prescribed as above, in which case it shall not become a law.

The bill further provides that the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico shall hereafter be ex officio superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and shall have control and management of all public buildings now erected, in progress of erection, or to be hereafter erected, and of all grounds pertaining thereto; and he is to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall establish such rules in relation to these public buildings and grounds as in his judgment he may devise, and for his services as such superintendent the secretary is to receive an annual salary of $1,000. It is to be the duty of the secretary of the Territory, upon the convening of the Legislature thereof, to administer the oath of office to the members-elect of the two houses and the officers thereof when chosen; and no other person shall be competent to administer the oath, save in the absence of the secretary; in which case any one member of either house may administer the oath to the presiding officer elect, and he shall administer the same to the members and other officers. The annual salary of the secretary of the Territory is to be $3,000 per annum from and after the 1st day of February, 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. I see from the reading of the bill that the salary of the secretary of the Territory is to be increased and redete back a year or so. I inquire the object of that? Is there any necessity for it?

Mr. YATES. Only that that officer has been in office that long; that is all.

Mr. HARLAN. What is the salary of the secretary now?

Mr. YATES. The salary is $2,000.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to amend the bill so as to make the increase of salary to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. YATES. I accept the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill in section two, line eleven, by inserting after the word "dollars" the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand that this bill increases the salary of the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico $1,000. Am I right?

Mr. YATES. One thousand dollars is added for his services as superintendent of public buildings and grounds.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It takes that much from some other officers?

Mr. YATES. No; it gives him $1,000 as superintendent of public buildings and grounds.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not informed in regard to the bill, but if you increase the salary of one of these secretaries to $3,000 the Senate may as well understand they will all be after the same thing. I do not wish to interpose any objection to it more than call attention to it. I leave the subject to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations, who usually look after those matters.

Mr. YATES. I see that there is a mistake in the printing of the bill. In the twenty-first line of the second section the word "three" is printed by mistake for "two." I move to amend it by striking out "three" and inserting "two;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the annual salary of the secretary of said Territory shall be $2,000 per annum from and after the 1st day of February, 1867.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I see that the bill makes provision in reference to the veto power of the Governor? Is that a new provision? How does it change the existing law?

Mr. YATES. The veto power of the Governor of New Mexico is now unqualified. He can veto any law passed by the territorial Legislature, and it cannot be repassed over his head by a two-thirds vote. This enables a two-thirds vote to pass a bill over his veto.

Mr. POMEROY. It changes the organic act, then, in that respect.

Mr. YATES. Yes, to conform to what our Constitution is, and what the constitution of Kansas is.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know what were the reasons which influenced Congress when in passing the organic act for the Territory of New Mexico it provided that the Governor might veto a bill and there should be no remedy in the Legislature. If there were good reasons for it formerly, and those reasons do not exist now, it may be very well to make this change; but I do not understand how the fact is.

Mr. YATES. Under the law as it now stands the veto power of the Governor is absolute.

Mr. POMEROY. I understand that, but I say there must have been some reason for it at the time the law was passed, and I want to know whether that reason exists to-day.

Mr. YATES. I will state, for the information of the Senator, that the Legislature has passed a great many laws which have not gone into force because of the Governor's veto. The object of this bill is to regulate the veto power and to allow the representatives of the people in the territorial Legislature to overrule a veto by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. POMEROY. It may be right. The only question I had was why it was not put so in the beginning? Why New Mexico was made an exception to all other Territories? If the Senator and his committee agree that the change should be made I will not oppose it.

Mr. RAMSEY. The organic acts of the Territories differ; they are not alike in this respect. Some territorial Governors had an absolute veto previously to the organization of New Mexico, and the committee have endeavored to make the veto power uniform throughout the Territories, to make it in all cases a qualified instead of an absolute veto.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think some little explanation ought to be given of this bill. I suppose my attention was called to it heretofore, but I perceive that it was reported in March last, and other things have excluded it from my mind. I should like to have some explanation of the bill from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. YATES. I have already said that under the law as it now is the Governor of the Territory of New Mexico has an unqualified veto power, without any limitation whatever. The object of the first section of this bill is to provide that the territorial Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, may overrule his veto. The other section is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the supervision of the public buildings and grounds.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If that is all I see no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi was passed on Friday. It is a bill granting some two or three hundred thousand acres of land in the State of Minnesota to improve the Falls of St. Anthony. I do not know but that it is right; but I have been told this morning that the falls are owned by private individuals, and the bill ought not to pass. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider in order that I may have an opportunity to examine and look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. POMEROY. I will call it up for consideration at some future time.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senator will do it shortly; within a few days.

Mr. POMEROY. The information which I have received only came to me this morning. I did not know it before. I desire to examine the bill before it goes out of our hands.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is true that the falls in a measure are private property; but the navigation of the river above the falls, which has been much damaged by them, is public property; and the injury to that navigation is what the people there complain of.

Mr. POMEROY. I will inquire of the Chair if the bill to which I refer has gone to the other House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it has.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I move that the Secretary be directed to request the return of the bill from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

LADIES' MOUNT VERNON ASSOCIATION.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Committee on Claims presented to the Senate to-day a report without expressing any opinion on the question which the bill presents. It is a bill providing compensation upon certain grounds for the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association. Their memorial I presented to the Senate some three or four weeks ago. It states the whole case, and presents one, as I think, that will command the favor of the Senate. It is shortly this: they were incorporated for the purpose of securing the tomb of Washington. They were comparatively without funds after having paid the purchase-money for the place. The only source of revenue they had was what they received from the passengers, who from day to day went from this city in a steamer under the control of the association, yielding them several thousand dollars, and with that they were enabled to keep the premises in repair. The United States, during the war, having occasion for the use of the steamer, took possession of it, and they lost, therefore, that source and the only source of revenue they had. They are now utterly destitute of all means with which to preserve the house and the tomb of Washington. Their memorial was presented to the House of Representatives, and a bill identical with the one upon your table was reported by the appropriate committee, and was passed by a very large majority, but the yeas and nays being called it turned out that there was not a quorum, and upon that ground, and that ground alone, it was defeated. The friends of the bill there are exceedingly anxious that the Senate should act upon it, if the Senate shall see fit to act upon a measure like this at once, there being no doubt that it will forthwith receive the sanction of the House of Representatives; and I am sure that every member of the Senate will instinctively be ready to do anything that shows the veneration in which we all hold the remains of Washington, and everything connected with the place where, for so many years, he resided, and where amid the tears of the nation he died. I move, therefore, that the Senate take up that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $7,000 for the relief of the association.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I do not know why we should pass this bill. Unless Congress is going to take possession of Mount Vernon and take care of it I do not see why we should make this appropriation. I should be quite willing that Congress should do it in order to rescue it from the disgrace of such care as it has had for the last few years. I understand it is in a very dilapidated condition; but this appropriation is to keep a certain family housed therein, and to contribute to their support.

So far as the equities of the case are concerned any party that suffered damage during the war, any watering establishment that did not receive as much patronage during the war as it would have done if there had been no war, would have the same right and the same claim to come to Congress for a further compensation.

I have been informed—I know not with what truth—that the party who has charge of this Mount Vernon establishment is a regular secessionist, one of the fiercest of the tribe, of the feminine gender. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I have so understood. So far as my sympathies are concerned I am free to say that I have none in favor of the appropriation. I do not think that the matter is well managed, or will be by the parties who now have it in charge.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator who moves the bill will give us some statement or explanation in regard to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did.

Mr. CONKLING. It is a round appropriation of $7,000 for the benefit of this association. I know that the Senator did say something about it; but I should like to know what has been done a little more specifically with the money, and how it is that its returns, heretofore understood to yield so much, have fallen short.

Mr. JOHNSON. I gave the only explanation that I thought necessary to be given;

but the honorable member, although always attentive to everything that happens in the Senate, was not within the sound of my voice. The Mount Vernon Association, as I understand, was incorporated for the purpose of purchasing, after the Government had refused to take it upon the terms which were insisted upon by the former proprietor, the Mount Vernon property. In the absence of some care, it was certain that the whole place of Washington would soon be in a dilapidated condition, and one, should it occur, disgraceful to the country. As to what are the sympathies of these ladies I know nothing, nor do I care. They are ladies of education, and devoted to the memory of Washington. Whether they sympathized or did not sympathize with the South in the late rebellion is a matter I know nothing about, and I have never heard it suggested except by my friend from Vermont.

But however that may be, they have taken charge of the property. After appropriating all the money they could raise to the payment for the property, they had nothing with which to keep the place in repair except what they derived from the use of a steambot that plied regularly between Washington and Mount Vernon. That gave them one, two, or three thousand dollars a year; and with that they were able to keep the property more or less in repair. The Government, however, found it necessary to take possession of the steamer; and they held it, I believe, until the war terminated. The effect was to deprive them of their only resource. The consequence has been—not from any fault of theirs, not because they have appropriated whatever has been received to their own personal uses, but because of the inadequacy of the means—that the house of Washington and the tomb of Washington are more or less in a state of dilapidation. No American with a heart in his bosom—and thank God we all have American hearts—would for a moment bear the thought that a place like that, consecrated in the memories not only of his own countrymen, but of the world, should be in any danger even for a moment of going to ruin. The object of this appropriation is to enable them to prevent that which would be a catastrophe of which the nation would be ashamed should it occur.

If there is any doubt that the money will be properly appropriated to the purpose for which, as I understand it is needed, I will move to amend the bill by providing that it be applied to the repair and preservation of the property. With such a provision as that I suppose there would be no objection to the passage of the bill. My friend from Vermont is perfectly willing to give this, or even a larger sum in order to preserve the property; but how much is to be given? These ladies from moneys advanced in every part of the country have paid I do not know how many thousands of dollars for the purchase of the property; I think it was nearly one hundred thousand dollars. Is it proposed to return that? I suppose not. Is it supposed that the property will be better taken care of by any agent who might be employed by the Government than it will be by these ladies whose hearts are so obviously in the work? I should suppose not.

The fact is, it ought to be in the care of woman and not of man. It is her sympathies which more especially will cling around the memory of him who stands peerless in the world's esteem. It is but a poor trifle that is needed. Shall we not place it in their hands to be applied for the purpose for which they ask it? What is it? Seven thousand dollars. What are we appropriating for the Army which owes its first reputation to the valor and the counsels of him whose remains now rest in the tomb at which hundreds and thousands of people are daily shedding their tears? We appropriate to the Freedmen's Bureau—an appropriation of which I do not complain—not $7,000, but hundreds of thousands; and that appropriation is made, or will be necessary, because of an act which we have passed at this session—of that, I repeat, I do not complain.

It may be necessary. Congress deems it to be necessary. It is supposed to be called for by the wants of a peculiar class. But while we are doing that, shall we be more than niggard when we are called upon to aid woman in preserving the tomb of Washington?

I move to amend the bill by adding the words, which I stated just now, for the preservation and repair of the property.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland to add the words "under the direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia" to his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that; but the committee will not be here.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They can give direction about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it necessary at all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it was not the $7,000 that I begrudged; but it was the slovenly and disloyal manner in which this whole business has been conducted to which I objected. In the first place, a very large price was obtained for this property; I believe something like a thousand dollars an acre, when it was worth less than a single hundred dollars; and I do not understand, as the Senator from Maryland does, that we even now have the tomb; that the tomb and about two acres of land were excepted from the purchase. So far as that is concerned we have no charge of it whatever. I have not been there for many years; but I learn that the buildings are in great need of repair, and that only a very small number of the rooms are open to the inspection of visitors. The library, for instance, is not to be seen by visitors who go there, and only three or four of the rooms are allowed to be open to be seen by visitors, and all the remainder of the building is occupied by the family that pretends to have it in charge. I desire to have this thing investigated. Instead of placing this money under the control of the Committee on the District of Columbia I prefer to have the bill referred to that committee, and have them make an examination and see whether we ought to vote anything at all, and if they report anything, then see in whose charge it ought to be confided. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I presume there is no difference of opinion in this body, nor indeed in the nation, as to the esteem in which the memory of Washington is held; nor do I suppose there is any difference of opinion as to the propriety of holding sacred the grounds where he lived and died and was buried. But there is in the country some dissatisfaction in regard to the management of this Mount Vernon Association. I was spoken to yesterday by a lady who has had something to do with raising funds for the purchase of this property, and learned from her that there had been no meeting of the officers of the association for a long time. She herself was in correspondence with some of the vice regents who were inquiring of her as to the condition of things at Mount Vernon and what was being done, and although she did not herself know the facts personally she had understood that persons had been supported at Mount Vernon who had been living upon this fund and who had been actively sympathizing with the rebellion; and the officers who ought to know, so far as she was informed or could ascertain, did not know the way in which this fund was being managed.

While I should be willing to vote for this proposition, if this donation be needed, or anything that might be reasonable and proper to preserve this property, I think from what I have heard that some inquiry should be made before this appropriation passes. I like the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, to let this bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, or some committee, to ascertain what the facts are. It is due to the officers of the association itself, because there is a widespread belief among many persons who have taken part in raising this fund, and who have desired to aid in every way they could to preserve this property, to improve and ornament it, that the affairs of the association have not been properly managed. If this impression is untrue, it is due to those in charge that it should be corrected. That there is such an impression among those friendly to the association I am certain.

Under these circumstances I think the Senator from Maryland himself will see the propriety of having the bill referred and an inquiry made, so that it may be known how the affairs of this association are managed. There is no report showing the condition of things, so far as I am informed, and so far as others, who have taken some pains to try to inform themselves, know. The Senator from Maryland may be better posted. He may be able to state more specifically than I am advised, or those persons who ought to know are advised, in regard to this matter. I hope the bill will be referred and an inquiry made, for the reports that have obtained credence in the country among the friends of this association are very damaging to the association itself.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There seems to be no difference of opinion as to the necessity of making a small appropriation to preserve this property. The only question that is raised is as to the propriety of placing the money in the hands of the association itself. If there be objection well founded to the management of the property I should not wish to see the money placed in the control of persons who are mismanaging it; but I could not vote for the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey. I do not think a committee of the legislative department, of the appropriating department, ought to be in the possession of an executive power controlling the use of money appropriated. I do not think Congress ought to control appropriations after they are once made. I suggest to the Senator that the military officer who, under existing law, has charge of the public buildings in the District of Columbia shall have charge of this appropriation. I will cheerfully vote for it if he will accept that amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I accept that amendment—"the Secretary of War."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know who it is. It is the person who is Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. SHERMAN. "The officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds."

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the motion, that the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds shall have charge of this appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that, so far as I am concerned, that it shall be under the military officer who has charge of the public buildings and grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope that will not be done. As the bill is now amended I do not see any propriety in referring it. That fund is not ours. We, the Government, contributed nothing toward it. We have no control or supervision of it, no management of it; and if this bill is now referred to a committee of Congress it precludes action for a year, or until another session of Congress and another season roll around. I think that there are values in this world for us to look after which do not appertain to railroads, or to public lands, or to revenue, or to iron-clads, but which appertain to a great national sentiment, which the people will approve of our attending to. It is a great thing for a nation to have a commanding spirit, a great man who was a good man, and the people of this country go by thousands to the grave of Washington, and they are profited by it and the country is benefited by it. There is not a place on earth where there are more sacred associations connected with Christian patriotism than at Mount Vernon; and I hope that without delaying this subject, postponing it, referring it to committees, having it now under the charge of the Secretary of War, or of some other officer, so that there is no question but that it may be properly appropriated, this appropriation may be made. Why, it is very little that we do. The people have bought the property; we have done nothing; and this is the first appropriation, I believe, that we have been called upon to make.

Mr. JOHNSON. The first.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey reminds us that the people go by thousands on pilgrimages to Mount Vernon. That is true; and they bring back by thousands one report, that this property needs supervision, that the house needs repair, that generally more money should be spent there in order to keep the place in order. That is the report, I believe, that is brought back by all these pilgrims. It seems to me that is enough to justify our action. We did not originally give the money by which this purchase was made; nor have we contributed at all to keep these ladies in the supervision of the place. Let us not, then, undertake to play the critics. Finding, however, that there is need for something to be done there, it seems to me proper and becoming that Congress at this moment should step in and supply the means. The sum proposed is not considerable. It is what I think for the purpose we may all be content to appropriate. I hope, therefore, it will not be done.

Mr. Tipton. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the special order.

The President pro tempore. The morning morning hour having expired—

Mr. SUMNER. I think we can have a vote on this bill now.

The President pro tempore. The special order is the tax bill.

Mr. SUMNER and others. Let us vote on this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. There cannot be a vote now; there will be further debate.

The President pro tempore. If this bill is continued, the question is on referring it to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN. I think if it is to be referred it ought to go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is a more appropriate committee than the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. Postponing this bill until to-morrow will do no hurt. I prefer to go on with the tax bill.

EVENING SESSIONS.

The President pro tempore. House bill No. 1284 is the special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. To expedite our progress on the special order, I submit this motion:

Ordered, That during the pendency of the tax and funding bills the Senate will, unless otherwise ordered, take a recess at five o'clock p. m. until half past seven p. m.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether he thinks it advisable to provide for that in advance?

Mr. SHERMAN. This enables us to have an evening session.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senate will bear in mind that the measures we are about to consider are such as will probably require the best attention of the Senate. If the Senate sits from twelve o'clock until five engaged in real work it will hardly be in a condition to come back at half past seven and continue the same class of work.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly indifferent myself; but I think it will expedite business to have the Senate keep the power to have an evening session. The order can be changed; if on account of the heat or any other cause a night session should be found to be not advisable we can dispense with it by an adjournment. I think we had better adopt the order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am perfectly willing to vote for night sessions and serve at night sessions, after the day of adjournment shall have been fixed, when the necessity for them shall be entirely manifest; but with the present weather upon us I think it is unnecessarily exhausting to the Senate for us now to have night sessions. I am not quite sure that there is an absolute necessity for it. Probably if we sit at night during this week and next week we shall work so hard as not to feel like having night sessions when they shall be absolutely necessary.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the motion. As I understand the motion, it is an order for a recess from five to half past seven o'clock to consider the tax bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; during the pendency of the tax and funding bills.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend so that the evening session shall be provided for, but given to other business; and I hope the Senator from Ohio will consent to that. It must be known to the Senator from Ohio and to the Senate that there are a great many pending bills of great importance; and while perhaps they are not of equal importance with the tax bill, they certainly are of transcendent consequence, and we ought to have some portion of the time to give attention to them. If we work here all day upon the tax and funding bills, the two special orders, which I am willing to do until they are disposed of, I think that will be giving time enough to them, while in the evening we may come here to attend to other business. If you exclude other business, you necessarily defeat a great deal of it; because if you drive much of the other business up to the end of the session, it may occur to the President to exercise that constitutional control that he is ever given to, and either put bills in his pocket or veto them just before the end of the session. I might refer now to many bills, which I do not wish to do, that are of sufficient importance, to say the least, to merit our attention at an early day, and I hope the evening sessions will be devoted to them; I therefore move that amendment.

The President pro tempore. The Senator from California moves that the order be so amended as to embrace other business to be considered at evening sessions.

Mr. CONNESS. That the evening sessions shall be devoted to general business.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope I shall be excused if I come back to my original suggestion. It seems to me we had better let each day take care of itself. At five o'clock in the afternoon, if we feel disposed to come in the evening, we can take a recess; if not, we can adjourn. It seems to me that we had better wait until the hour comes each afternoon and then determine what course we shall take.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Massachusetts will allow me to suggest that the motion to take a recess is not strictly in order except by unanimous consent; but this motion that I have submitted is in the usual form, and a recess will be taken unless a majority of the Senate desire to adjourn. If so, a motion to adjourn at any time is in order, and of course that dispenses for that evening with the evening session. We have the whole matter then within our control, so that a majority of the Senate can determine whether they will sit in the evening or not. I trust this order, which is in the usual form at this period of the session, will be adopted.

Mr. MORTON. It will be very inconvenient, if not impossible, for some of us to attend evening sessions, and I beg leave to suggest that so far as I have any opinion in regard to them there is nothing gained by them; and I think that the legislation performed at evening sessions might be of a somewhat dangerous character. If you have a quorum you will scarcely have anything more; you cannot get a full attendance of the Senate at night. I understand the House of Representatives have been holding evening sessions for some time past, and I understand they have had great difficulty in getting a quorum.

Mr. CONKLING. No more in the evening than in the day.

Mr. MORTON. The Senate can do as much work as they can do well between twelve o'clock and the time for adjournment for dinner. If you throw the evening sessions open to bills of every kind, a good many bills will be likely to slip through here at night that ought not to be passed at all.

Mr. POMEROY. I think there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from California says, that we must either not do our business if we intend to have an early adjournment or we must devote some special time to it. It is simply a question of neglecting to do the public business, or else we have got to have some evening or some day devoted to something besides the tax bill. I remember to have seen some members of the Senate together recently somewhere, and no two of them agreed on a single proposition in reference to the funding bill. If no two members of the Senate do agree in regard to the provisions of the funding bill now, it cannot be passed speedily; it must remain here day by day and week by week if it is going to be pressed to a successful vote; and if that be so, we ought at least to have now and then a day, or an evening at any rate, for other business. There are reports of committees of conference on very important measures that will excite some debate, and may require time for their consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Kansas. He wants some evening when general business shall be considered. After the tax bill shall have been passed, with such amendments as may be made by the Senate, it must necessarily go back to the House of Representatives, and there, inevitably, will be a considerable interval during which pressing legislative matters of a general character may be taken up. I doubt whether additional time would be gained for general legislation by intermingling it now with the tax bill.

Mr. POMEROY. This order embraces the funding bill as well as the tax bill, and I do not think the funding bill will be disposed of in a week. If the Senator from Ohio will strike out so much of the order as relates to the funding bill I will vote for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Both bills are now the special order; and this question is only a question as to whether we shall have night sessions.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think a special order can be made to cover two or three separate bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been done.

Mr. POMEROY. Perhaps it can be done if nobody objects. A special order can be made of any one bill only by a two-thirds vote, but we have had no two-thirds vote on that question yet.

Mr. CONNESS. There is a bill before the Senate, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, that I deem of great consequence, and which I wish to have action upon at an early day—I mean the bill for the protection of American citizens abroad. If the order proposed by the Senator from Ohio shall obtain it will be equivalent to the defeat of that bill, and, I may say, of many others. I have waited with patience, and proper patience, for the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to call up that bill, or to propose to appoint it as a special order for a particular time, which, however, he has not seen fit to do. Until some time should pass, it occurred to me that it would be improper for me to call it up, and therefore I have desisted; but I shall feel obligated to call the attention of the Senate to that bill, and seek to get a vote upon it at an early day if it shall not be called up and pressed on the attention of this body by the honorable chairman to whom I refer. Now, sir, the adoption of the order proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be a prohibition of that and of other business.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from California certainly does not want to misunderstand the proposition.

Mr. CONNESS. I would not, of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. This resolution has nothing to do with the business that shall be transacted. These two bills are made the special order by a previous order, and this simply provides a mode by which the Senate may hold evening sessions if it is desirable. Without the adoption of this resolution any Senator might object to a motion for a recess, and thus prevent an evening session; but with this resolution the Senate in the evening may if it chooses lay aside for the time being the tax bill and take up the bill the Senator refers to.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I desire to ask my friend from Ohio whether he would feel it incumbent on him to oppose such a course on the part of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. That has nothing to do with the question, but I will answer with entire frankness that, so far as I am individually concerned, I shall oppose considering anything else until the tax bill is disposed of.

Mr. CONNESS. Then the Senator announces that if this order be made he will insist, with his great influence in the Senate in the position in which he is placed, upon occupying the whole time, day and night, until these two bills are through with. It is to that that I am opposed, and I hope the Senate will not order it. I would prefer the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that we go on considering the two bills in charge of the honorable Senator from Ohio and leave it to be determined by the Senate on each day whether we shall continue the consideration of those bills or take up other bills to be specially named, as well as the establishment of an evening session; but I shall not vote to now order evening sessions to be occupied exclusively, in addition to the day sessions, by these two bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, it has now got to be the 6th day of July. The House of Representatives has sent us a resolution providing for an adjournment on the 15th. I suppose we desire to adjourn some time during this month; and from my experience in the Senate I am induced to say that if we intend to adjourn at any time during this month we must now put the control of the business of the Senate into the hands of those who have charge of the bills which must be passed before we adjourn, and not allow the wishes of Senators as to individual bills, which are not of such pressing importance, that is not such as of necessity require to be passed at this particular session, to interfere with it.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] presented to us the other day a bill which he considered, and which a great many considered of importance to be passed at once, if passed at all, as possibly it might be vetoed; but the Senate seemed to think that it was not of any consequence compared to a few matters of incorporation of very important companies here in the District of Columbia, and two or three things of that sort, and passed it over, so that the time for it has perhaps gone by. I do not think such a course of legislation will possibly bring us to a close of this session within any reasonable time.

Now, sir, we have before us a bill of one hundred and thirty pages with reference to the internal revenue. Everybody concedes that it must be passed. What process has it to go through? We must act on it here, and it will necessarily elicit very considerable debate. Then it must go back to the House of Representatives with the amendments we make, and be considered there. Then it must go before a committee of conference, and be considered there before it is finally closed. Senators will see that if this process is to be gone through with this bill, and we are to get away at any time within six months, there is only one thing for us to do, and that is to take up the bill at once and consider it, and stick to it until it has been done. That has been the course pursued when we have had bills of that description before us heretofore. We cannot take it up one day and then allow something else to interpose, and other questions to be brought up continually, and hope to get through and get away from here in any reasonable season.

In addition to that there is the funding bill, which the Senate has made a special order, and which will necessarily elicit some debate, but it is not a long bill, and can be disposed of probably in a comparatively short time. What more have we? We have yet unfinished several of the most important appropriation bills. Two, at least, I think, have not yet been reported to the Senate, the deficiency bill and the Indian bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Indian bill has been reported but not acted upon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are other appropriation bills yet to come to us from the other House. Then there are appropriation bills that we have passed which will take up a considerable time yet before they are finished, on account of the amendments between the two Houses.

Now, let me say to the Senate that, if they design to get through at all, they must take up those bills which must necessarily be disposed of before we adjourn, and stick to them until they are passed, and then, if there is any time left in which we can take up other matters, take them up. It is the only way we can possibly expect to get through business in any reasonable time and get away.

As to evening sessions, I will not object to the motion of the honorable gentleman from Ohio, because it leaves it in the power of the Senate to control the matter by an adjournment at any time; but we know from our experience how very severe it is in this extremely hot weather to work here all day and then come and work here all the evening with the heat from the gas above coming down upon us. You will hardly get a quorum here, and if you devote the evening to general business, which is not of this pressing importance in which everybody is interested, the result is that you will probably get through a great deal of bad legislation, or of legislation in a very bad shape, because nobody except those who feel particularly interested in it will be here. Of all times in the world to take up general legislation under such circumstances that it cannot be known beforehand by Senators what will be taken up the evening is the worst time to expect good legislation. You ought to have something before the Senate in which all are interested, which will bring a quorum of Senators here to attend to it.

I hope, therefore, that if we are to consider the matter of evening sessions at all, it will be left at present, while this extreme heat lasts, at this period of the session, within our own control, and that when we have an evening session it will be devoted to that kind of business which will bring enough of the Senate here to secure proper and reasonable and safe consideration. But, sir, at present, though I am perfectly willing to agree to it for the sake of these bills which are of so much importance, it will be difficult to hold an evening session, because we all know that we are to expect nothing but very hot weather from now until the end of the session, and that in the last days of the session we must necessarily hold evening sessions, and sometimes perhaps sit all night, as we have done frequently—I have been here once in my life forty-two hours without sleep, day and night successively—I do not want to do it again during my legislative career.

If we go straight along with these absolutely essential bills and attend to them until they are disposed of, we may have some chance of getting through in a reasonable time and in a reasonable manner, and preserve our health; but if we are to devote evening sessions to general business, we shall not only have a great deal of poor legislation, but wear ourselves out. I hope nothing of that kind will be done. I am therefore in favor of the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SUMNER. I will make one more suggestion. It does not seem to me that the Senate can attend to more than one important matter at a time. It cannot be driving two good horses abreast. It may, I know, take up some small matters, but it can attend to only one important bill at the same time. Now, the Senator from Ohio moves his tax bill. It seems to me we should proceed with that to the end, and then take up another important bill, occupying ourselves in the morning hour, or, should we have an evening session, in the evening session with such other less important matter as we may then attend to.

And this brings me to the allusion of the Senator from California. He seemed to complain that I, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, had not asked the attention of the Senate to the bill reported from that committee some few days ago. I doubt not that the Senator from California has kept the run of the business of the Senate much better than I; and yet sitting in my seat all the time I have not known any moment when that bill could properly have been moved. It is an important bill, calculated to invite discussion, which ought to be discussed. When the time comes I shall have great pleasure in meeting, and in endeavoring to explain it to the Senate. I do not think it expedient, however, to mix that measure with the tax bill. Let us finish the tax bill; and then, if the Senate are disposed, they may proceed with the bill to which the Senator from California refers.

Let me add, also, that the Senator from California knows well that there is another matter in executive session in which he is much interested, in which I am interested, and on which I think we ought to secure the attention of the Senate before an adjournment. That matter was reported some time ago, long before the bill to which he now calls attention. I should like to appeal to that Senator to unite with me in an effort to obtain an executive session either in the forenoon or in the evening, and the earlier the better, in order to consider that matter. I do not name it in public because it belongs to our executive business. The Senator will understand what it is.

Mr. CONNESS. I only wish to say that one of the objects I have in view in moving and voting against the entire monopoly of our time by any two bills is to consider just such subjects as that to which the Senator alludes. The argument made by the Senator from Maine amounts to this, as I understand it, that we shall take up the tax bill, the funding bill, the appropriation bills, and give all the time to them, and then adjourn. That is practically what it amounts to. I am prepared to stay here until all the essential legislation is done; but I do hope that pending the consideration of those bills we shall allow the evenings to remain free and unoccupied, so that we may select them for the business to which the Senator last referred, or other important business now pending in this body.

The Senator understands as well as any Senator here that a chairman, being charged with the conduct of business, has devolved on him the special duty of pressing it upon the attention of the body of which he is a member, and that the committee who authorize him to make a report will always stand by him in securing such attention; and he cannot by any smooth words pass off on an humble member of the Senate like myself the responsibility for delay in the important matters to which reference has been made. It is his business and his responsibility if they be neglected. I stand here ready to sustain him with my vote in securing the attention of the Senate to this and all other bills that he has in charge if he will but do his part in pressing them on the attention of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, this is the motion that is always made at this period of the session by the Senator who has charge of the financial bills before us, whether bills of appropriation or bills for raising money; and it is always agreed to. The only question is whether we shall make a motion every day that an evening session shall be held if we desire it, or whether we shall make a motion every day that we shall omit the evening session if we desire to do that. Certainly the latter is much preferable. The business that it is conceded by all must be passed should be in the control of the Senator who has charge of it; and I hope we shall agree to his proposition.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I agree that this motion is made every session, and, perhaps, agreed to every session, and I guess it will be this session; but I should rather be excused from agreeing to it myself. This bill, I suppose, will be passed in some shape. If my own wishes were to be consulted, however, I think I would rather adjourn to-day than pass the first section of the bill, at all events; but I suppose that it will be passed. I submit, however, that there is no sort of necessity that it should be passed between this and the 15th of July; nor is there any sort of necessity that we should adjourn by the 15th or the 30th of July, or by the 30th of August. The public will not suffer, so far as I know, if we stay here a month and a half, unless we pass this bill in the mean time. I think we have until December next to complete the business of this session. It is uncomfortable staying here, I admit. Our health may require us to get away as soon as we can; but in my judgment we shall legislate more profitably both to the public and to ourselves individually if we do not try to do two days' work in one. There is time enough to do all that there is to be done, I think, and yet do but a single day's work in a single day. I never could understand when our time is unlimited the philosophy of waiting until the hot weather comes, when it troubles an able-bodied man to breathe at all, and then to crowd on all the steam of which you are capable, running clear up to eighty pounds. It is suggested to me that the House of Representatives makes us do it. I do not think the House does any such thing. We cannot charge that on the House; we do it voluntarily. We find this business here, and we fix a day ahead when we think we would like to go home, and then we work with reference to going home, and not so much with reference to doing the business. It is perfectly right that the Committee on Finance should control the time of the Senate; that the business recommended by that committee should have preference here until it is disposed of; but I do not think it is within the province of that committee or any other to say how many hours in the day we shall work. If it does belong to them I do not insist upon the eight-hour rule, but I am rather inclined to protest against the sixteen-hour rule. I think we should control our time. If at any time the chairman of the Committee on Finance thinks we can economize labor and strength by holding an evening session, let him say so, and I have no doubt the Senate will be willing to do it. If any subject comes up which it is important should be passed upon a particular day, he can not only make us sit during the day and during the evening, but during the night to dispose of that particular subject; but when we are working on bills which may be passed any time during the session I hope the chairman of the Committee on Finance will work us as easy as he consistently can. I will work as long as he says.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have only one remark to make, and that is that, in my judgment, it is not advisable to hold evening sessions for the transaction of business unless we know beforehand what business is to be transacted. I think that notice in some way ought to be given during the day time as to the business to be done at night.

Mr. CONNESS. Allow me to make a suggestion. If the Senator will move to amend the original order, so as to let the Senate each day appoint the business that shall be done during that evening, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I made this remark simply by way of opposition to the amendment of the Senator from California, because some of the members will be unable to be here on account of physical disability, if not from other causes, every evening, commencing work at ten o'clock in the morning, and unless there is some business of importance before the Senate in the evening they may not esteem it necessary to be present. I think that if the order is left to stand as it is proposed by the Senator from Ohio a special motion can be made, if it be desirable that some evening be set apart for the discussion of a bill, for instance the bill suggested by the Senator from California. He can make his motion at any time that a certain evening be set apart for the discussion of that bill, and then we shall know that the bill is coming up and those interested can come here and attend to it.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand it will require then a two-thirds vote of the Senate to set aside the special order now proposed by the order of the Senator from Ohio. That is the difficulty, and therefore I am opposed to his order.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have already spent some forty minutes on this matter, and I think we ought to come to a vote on it. A majority of the Senate can at any time postpone a special order; it does not require a two-thirds vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the order proposed by the Senator from Ohio. Both the amendment and the order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the order of Mr. SHERMAN, as follows:

Ordered, That during the pendency of the tax and funding bills the Senate will, unless otherwise ordered, take a recess at five o'clock p. m. until seven and a half o'clock p. m.

The amendment of Mr. CONNESS was to add, "and that the evening sessions thus ordered shall be devoted to the consideration of other general business on the Senate Calendar."

The amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the order proposed by Mr. SHERMAN,

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to that order if the funding bill is stricken out. The funding bill is a Senate bill, while the tax bill is a House bill. I have no objection to sitting at night for the tax bill, but to attach to the House bill a funding bill, and say they must both be stuck together and kept together, and be the order of the Senate until they are both completed, is an unheard of thing.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Osborn, Sherman, Tipton, Willey, and Williams—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Davis, Fowler, Howe, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Welch, and Yates—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Norton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Wilson—20.

So the order was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAXES.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will expedite the consideration of the tax bill if the Senate will dispose of the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance as they are reached in the reading of the bill in its order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken if there be no objection. The bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal tax on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The first section of the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law has not been paid, a tax of fifty cents on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or person having possession thereof before removal from distillery warehouse; and the tax on such spirits shall be collected on the whole number of gauge or wine gallons when below proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of proof-spirit as defined in this act; and any fractional part of a gallon in excess of the number of gallons in a cask or package, shall be taxed as a gallon. Every proprietor or possessor of a still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, and every person in any manner interested in the use of any such still, distillery, or distilling apparatus, shall be jointly and severally liable for the taxes imposed by law on the distilled spirits produced therefrom and the tax shall be a first lien on the spirits distilled, the distillery used for distilling the same, the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, together with any building thereon, from the time said spirits are distilled until the said tax shall be paid.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be the same and no higher than that upon other distilled spirits.

Mr. COLE. I hope that will be passed over for the present.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are so many amendments that I think we had better act on them as we go on regularly. This is a very simple question, and might as well be determined now as any other time. The question presented is simply whether brandy, which now pays one dollar tax, shall pay fifty cents or one dollar.

Mr. COLE. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the tax on brandy made from grapes one half what it is on other spirits, twenty-five cents a gallon. Under the law as it now stands the tax upon brandy manufactured out of grapes is but half that upon other brandies. There is a good reason for this; a reason that has been recognized by Congress, I believe, upon the passage of every one of the tax bills that have been acted on heretofore. To those who are acquainted with the business of making wine and grape brandy the reasons will be very obvious; but perhaps not to those who are unacquainted with that business.

This brandy is manufactured out of the refuse substance that is left after the wine is manufactured; and if there is this heavy tax, this tax out of proportion put upon it, it must necessarily result in destroying or breaking up this manufacture of brandy; and it will result in so much loss to the country. Unless this description of brandy has some advantage of this sort, it cannot come in competition with brandy that is made in the other forms. This has been determined frequently before. There is no doubt about the truth of what I say. The substance out of which this is manufactured is called the lees or the pumice, as it were, of the grapes, after the wine has been pressed from them. This brandy is used afterward to some extent in perfecting the wines. It is necessary in the vineyards for this use. If this tax is put upon it, it will to a great degree hamper this product. I have received an earnest letter from one of the most distinguished citizens of California, a member of the State Senate, which I will ask the Clerk to read, bearing immediately on this subject; and I will state further that I have received several communications on the subject. The vine-growers of California are very much alarmed lest there should be no discrimination made on their behalf, as has been the case heretofore.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA,
June 12, 1868.

DEAR SIR: Telegraphic reports from Congress that it is intended to reduce the tax on whisky to sixty cents per gallon, and nothing being said of grape brandy, have filled the vine-growers of the State, and particularly the people of this southern section of the country, with alarm that there is no one in Congress to attend to their interests.

If the tax on whisky is reduced to sixty cents the tax on grape brandy ought to be abolished altogether or the vine-growing interest of the country will decline instead of becoming one of the important branches of our agriculture.

I have been solicited on all sides by the friends of vine-culture, who are becoming a most influential class, to call your immediate attention to the grape brandy interest, and that you will defend it faithfully in Congress, and that you will unite with you in that defense all the representation from the Pacific slope.

Very truly yours,
PHINEAS BANNING.
Hon. CORNELIUS COLE, Washington city.

Mr. COLE. I am not prepared now to go into a full explanation of this subject. I do not think it worth while. I wish the chairman of the committee could have consented to let it go over until I could have come into possession of all the facts. I was not aware it was coming up at this time, and I have not the data before me that I wish I had and that I could have if the subject were postponed. I hope, however, the Senate will agree to this rule that has prevailed heretofore to exempt this description of brandy from the tax that is imposed upon other brandies and whisky.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senate should be put in possession of the facts in relation to this case before they are called upon to vote. The present duty, the lowest duty upon brandy, is three dollars per gallon. The present internal tax on brandy is one dollar per gallon. By this bill it will be reduced from one dollar to fifty cents; the precise amount that we levy upon the rawest kind of whisky. The brandy made from grapes, as I understand, is a very excellent article, and sells for a greatly increased price above that of whisky. It is a favor to have it placed upon the same level with whisky, a favor which the Committee on Finance were very ready to concede; but after this article has been protected by a duty on foreign importations to the extent of three dollars per gallon, to ask anything more on the part of Congress it seems to me would be asking too much.

I know that my fascinating friend on my right [Mr. CONNESS] will present this case as one of peculiar hardship to California; but I think it is a very great favor that we allow this article to be taxed no more than the corn whisky made in the western States. I trust, therefore, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from California will not be assented to.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, we ought to acknowledge with becoming thankfulness the boon that this Committee on Finance, and especially my friend from Vermont, have granted us in not proposing a special additional tax upon brandy made in the United States from grapes. We are to thank the great organ of home manufactures, my honorable friend from Vermont, the originator of all tariffs—at least the children think so—in this country, because he has not seen fit to tax out of existence one of the greatest growing interests in the American Republic.

I was only surprised, Mr. President, coming to earnest considerations, at the ground upon which my friend puts his action upon this subject. Three dollars per gallon is imposed upon foreign brandies by our tariff, and therefore it is a favor to the home manufacturers and growers of brandy made from grapes that a special additional tax over and above that which is imposed upon corn whisky is not imposed upon the home-made brandy, for, says the Senator, brandy made from grapes is excellent! Well, now, I ask my honorable friend if there is any brandy in the world not made from grapes?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, from apples and peaches.

Mr. CONNESS. Well, Mr. President, there is a liquor nick-named brandy, but it is more properly called apple-jack when made from apples, and it ought to have such a designation applied to it according to the fruit from which it was extracted. But, Mr. President, there is no pretense by anybody who has any information on the subject that brandy is manufactured from anything else than grapes. Why, sir, the brandies that we get from Europe are made from the vines grown in France and Germany and Italy, or else they are base concoctions made up for us in imitation of those brandies. But, sir, there are no new brandies sent here for sale. A brandy made from grapes, within five or ten years after its manufacture, is not fit for human consumption, and it is not consumed. The brandy upon which three dollars per gallon is imposed of duty at our ports is worth when it comes into the market for sale and for my friend's consumption eight, twelve, or fifteen dollars per gallon. It is of the vintage of 1800 or 1815, and so on down to within ten years of the present time; no other class of brandy can find sale in an American market or in any market. I desire to correct gentlemen in their statements, in their impression in this regard. The distillation from grapes is when distilled and for a long time thereafter, utterly unfit for consumption, that until it gets years and years of preservation, and is toned down by the evaporation of the alcohol from it; and during those years it has to be kept at the cost of interest upon the money. Besides, a vineyard to produce it must be planted many years in advance of a crop; and although they begin to get some few grapes from vines planted in the third and fourth year in California, there is no crop of grapes from any vineyard there or elsewhere in less than eight, ten, twelve, or twenty years. Yet during all that time interest has to be paid upon the money by which those vineyards, extensive vineyards, have been planted and are cultivated and sustained.

Again, let me tell Senators that in California, the only country that possesses advantages that rival France and Italy and Germany in the production of the grape, we have peculiar difficulties to contend with. We have there no timber to make our casks from; at least none yet. We import them at immense prices. Though we have great natural advantages by reason of our climate and soil, we are under disadvantages in every other respect in the high price of labor; in the time necessary in bringing forward the vineyards; in the years necessary to put brandy in the market and make it fit for sale and consumption; we are borne down by the high rates of interest, and very few of our wine-makers—very few of those who begin to plant their vineyards reap the result of their crops; their vineyards pass, like many other costly investments, into other hands, and finally those who buy a vineyard already growing a crop, bringing new capital into connection with its products, eventually if you do not tax them out of existence, may make a business that is worthy of their attention.

Mr. President, after the question was fully discussed here a year ago and the reasons given pro and con., a section was agreed upon as at least a reasonable concession to the great growing interest that we are endeavoring to represent. It is found on page 477 of the Statutes-at-Large for 1865 and 1867, section twelve of the act of March 2, 1867:

"That there shall be levied, collected, paid on brandy made from grapes one dollar per gallon; and if any person shall knowingly manufacture, compound, put up, sell, or dispose of, or cause to be manufactured," &c.

And then follows the penalty to be imposed for attempts at making a bogus or factitious or simulated article. That was agreed to; and there has not been a complaint made through the internal revenue authorities that it has led in any respect during the year of its existence to one single attempted fraud.

Now, my honorable friend from Vermont and the Committee on Finance seem to think that as they are reducing the tax on spirits produced from the cereals, it is a great favor to us engaged in the production of brandy. Why, Mr. President, the cases are entirely different. The man who engages in making spirits from grain goes into the market and brings his grain, and in a given number of days it is transferred into spirits, and passes from his hands into the market for sale. The country yields its annual grain crop. But it takes years and years to produce a crop from grapes on a vineyard capable of producing a crop. In the State of California at this time there are probably not less than twenty million vines planted, and yet the product of the vineyards there is still inconsiderable; but within ten or fifteen years to come the interests of this country will be promoted by that crop to a greater extent than, perhaps, in connection with any single article produced in the United States. We send now, for either real or simulated brandies, to Europe millions of our gold annually, which we shall then be enabled, if we do not crush this interest out of existence, to keep within our own hands, dealing with our own people and enriching ourselves.

Mr. President, I do not deem it possible that it should be necessary to say anything further in regard to this question. When receiving the other day telegrams from various sections of my State, and presenting them here with the wish that they should be referred to the Committee on Finance, I supposed that that committee would take this matter into generous consideration. I supposed that the fostering hand that has brought American manufactures and products up to a competing condition with those of other nations of the world would not be denied to us in connection with this interest. But, Mr. President, I confess my surprise, particularly at my friend who sits at my left hand, [Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont,] that he turns away from this interest, that he fails to investigate and ascertain its exact condition, that he denies its demands, and that he who has been known so proudly through the country as the one who favored and conducted the productive interests of this country to their present condition of success by a reasonable protection, denies that need of protection to us and to this interest that we represent here.

But, Mr. President, it is not to the generosity of Senators that I would appeal, but to their sense of justice, to remind them that that country lying on the broad shores of the Pacific is not our country, but it is their country; its products are their products; its advance is their advance; its success becomes their success, and its glory their glory. They must not forget, Mr. President, as I have taken the opportunity to remind them on more than one occasion, that the Government of this great continent is carried on upon one side of it while some of its greatest and grandest works are being carried on upon the other side, thousands and thousands of miles from where that Government is conducted. We cannot expect, Mr. President, that honorable Senators and legislators here will enter exactly and familiarly into the consideration of the details of the interests of that great region; but we ought to expect and have a right to expect, and we do receive from many Senators, I confess, acknowledge with great gratification, that considerate regard from time to time to which we are entitled.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will vote for the adoption of the amendment offered by my colleague. It is asking nothing new; it is maintaining what has been conceded heretofore. It is in behalf of one of the greatest growing interests of America. And, sir, I do not know how I shall return to the sunny land where this great interest is being carried on after having been voted down upon a proposition so simple and embracing so much natural justice. I trust, therefore, for the favorable vote of the Senate upon this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] evinces a great deal of spirit in this matter which I think the figures hardly justify, in behalf of California. The Committee on Finance, finding that there was some doubt whether or not this bill reduced the tax on brandies, proposed to put on this proviso. If the Senator will look at the law he will find that brandy being taxed specifically at one dollar the first section of this bill might be held not to reduce that tax; and the committee in order to give brandy the benefit of the reduction which this bill extends to other spirits placed it at fifty cents, also. Now the Senator speaks as if this was a matter in which California alone was interested. So far as the production of brandy from grapes is concerned Ohio has the same interest as California.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will be very much surprised when I tell him that California does not yield us one twelfth part of the amount that is received from this single article of brandy. Brandy is not only made from grapes; brandy is the distillation of fruits; whisky is the distillation of grain. Brandy yielded us last year altogether in the United States of America $855,075 47. How much of that came from California? One would suppose that no State in the Union was producing any brandy but California. The fact is that the amount received from California was $67,819, while the little State of New Jersey makes apple-jack and peach brandy which yielded us a revenue of $289,595.

Now, Mr. President, this item is an important one in our revenue, amounting to nearly a million dollars, and we cannot afford to surrender it upon a mere talk about the growing vines of California. We must get some revenue from it, and there is no reason in the world why brandy distilled from grapes ought not to pay as much revenue as brandy distilled from apples or from peaches or from any other fruit. No discrimination ought to be made. Indeed, there is no reason that any man can give for making any discrimination between spirits produced whether from fruit or from grain. They are all a convenient subject of taxation, and every nation has a right to get from spirits distilled from grain or from fruits any amount of tax that can fairly be levied on them. Then brandy from grapes is the most valuable of all distillation, worth several times per gallon what any other distillation from any other substance whatever is. Our Ohio brandy sells for from five to ten dollars a gallon.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator at this point at what age that is after its distillation? I want him to be exact about these things.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very good brandy in three years, and whisky is not good under that time. No white man, or black man either, ought to drink whisky until it is three years old, although a great many do, because they cannot afford to wait. When brandy is three years old it is worth at least three or four times as much as whisky, because it is more valuable, it is finer in every way, it is a more valuable article of commerce. It is perfectly idle for the Senator from California to ask us to surrender $850,000 of revenue merely to encourage the people of California in growing grapes when the highest product we have received from them on this tax is $67,000. I have no doubt that the advantages of California as a grape-growing State will not be affected in the slightest degree by this tax. They ought to be satisfied with the reduction of one half the tax now imposed by law. So far as I know, the other States which will contribute a much larger sum than California to this tax make no complaint. They ask to be put on a footing of perfect equality, and there is no reason in the world why we should surrender this revenue. I appeal to Senators, therefore, and ask them to remember that they cannot yield to the appeal now made by the Senator from California without applying the same rule to all the other States, and without surrendering a revenue which yields in the aggregate under the present law about a million dollars, which probably at fifty cents a gallon will yield us not less than $500,000.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to add a few words at this time to remind the Senate of the material errors in the statement of the honorable Senator from Ohio. He holds California responsible, and judges its grape-growing and brandy-producing capacities for the ten years of its existence as a producer of those commodities—

Mr. SHERMAN. Only one year.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator does not understand me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I spoke of only one year, 1867, last year, which was the largest product of California.

Mr. CONNESS. I have not made myself understood by the Senator. I remind the Senator that the present population of California were nearly ten years in that State before they practically discovered the value of that country and its climate for these purposes; so that its productiveness had a beginning at a period only ten years past. Hence it is a growing interest there, not an established interest. When it becomes an established interest it will not ask relief from taxation.

But the honorable Senator does the State of California injustice in this regard: he compares the tax derived from grapes to the total tax produced from double the amount imposed upon spirits from all other sources except grain.

Mr. SHERMAN. Peaches, apples, and grapes.

Mr. CONNESS. Peaches, apples, and grapes included. I have heard the honorable Senator before this speak of the superior advantages of Ohio as a grape-growing country and of the value of the crop produced there. We have known as well, or nearly as well, as the honorable Senator of the advance made in producing wines and brandies from grapes in the State of Ohio before we began. Not to know of the history and advance made by the celebrated Longworth, now deceased, would be to argue one's self unknown. But, sir, I remind the Senator that for all Ohio has done in that regard, and for all it is capable of doing, we will exceed it, he keeping his heavy hand off, a thousandfold.

The difference, too, will be shown here, Mr. President: the wines and brandies produced in the State of Ohio, and in New Jersey, and in Michigan, or wherever they are grown on this side of the Rocky mountains, are only those produced from indigenous grapes; grapes not superior in their qualities; from a few kinds native to this soil and severe climate, while in California we have transferred to our soil every known quality of grapes on the face of the earth; and where I have my residence in that State, at an elevation from the sea of twenty-five hundred feet, the choicest grapes of Europe grow and prosper in the most wonderful manner without any attempt at preserving them from the effects of climate or frosts.

Let me not be replied to on this point by saying, "these natural advantages are enough." Not so, sir. The production of this interest must be encouraged there as the production of silk must be encouraged there, because it is the natural home for both products. It is where American enterprise and intelligence applied to those two great products can be carried on with great success to completion.

But, Mr. President, it is not my intention to occupy too much of the time of this body on this question. I only regret the view taken of it by the members of the Committee on Finance, and will close by saying that I know if they would transfer themselves to our side of this continent for a while they would return here abandoning all such notions as they have now on this subject.

Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator from Ohio has not stated this case quite fairly, and consequently I must call his attention to the facts. The amount received from brandy in California was $67,819 13; and that all comes from grapes. They manufacture from nothing else that I am aware of.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do not they make any apple-jack?

Mr. STEWART. No; I never heard that they did. Ohio is the other grape-growing State. Ohio and California are the only two States that manufacture from grapes to any extent worth noticing at all. The whole amount received from Ohio from this manufacture from grapes, apples, and peaches—they are counted together, I suppose, and it is impossible to distinguish them, and they manufacture a little apple-jack there—is $11,905 50; so that it is safe to say that the whole amount of revenue derived from grape brandy in the United States cannot exceed $100,000. This amendment refers to brandy made from grapes. The amendment of the Senator from California refers to brandy made from grapes.

It was stated further by the Senator from Ohio and others that there was no special reason why this interest should be favored; it is a very small interest, and will make very little difference to the revenue. I have a special reason. Last year I had occasion, while canvassing California, to travel through the great grape-growing region. The country is prolific in the production of the article, but the people engaged in it are poor. It takes a great deal of time to cultivate the vines and bring them to maturity. It is a new interest. They do not understand the manufacture of wines. The manufacture of wine and brandy from grapes, I will state, is dependent the one upon the other. It is impossible to make wine unless you save the refuse, so to speak, that is not used for the purpose of making wine, and work it into brandy. The wine interest is an important interest. What little they can make on the manufacture of brandy will enable them to go on. I believe if you do not relieve this interest you will seriously injure the whole enterprise. If they understood it as they do in Europe perhaps it might be otherwise. There are some experienced persons there struggling to get along, and it is a magnificent country for the purpose, and it is going to be a great interest. Reducing the tax one half will make very little difference. You only lose three or four thousand dollars in Ohio. I think if you encourage the production in California you will eventually make it one of the great interests of the country. I was in Sonoma last year, where the principal manufactories are. They have to wait several years, and they had great quantities in casks there which they were unable to bring into market on account of the competition, and several of the leading men there have actually been broken up. Colonel Haraszthy, who has done more to develop the grape interest than any other man, who has been in Europe several times, and spent his time and substance in promoting the manufacture of wine and brandy in California, has been broken up, which has been a great drawback upon the grape interest in that section. He was the leading man engaged in it.

In view of the importance of the interest, if it is allowed to prosper, I think it but reasonable that this reduction should be made. The whole of that coast from Mexico up to Oregon is suitable for the culture of grapes. It stands upon a different principle from the manufacture of brandy from peaches. You do not manufacture wine from peaches. There is no other interest depending upon it, no interest to be fostered. If we can raise our own wine in this country, it will be a very important item. It is stated by men who profess to understand it that the Pacific coast west of the Sierra Nevada mountains is capable of producing more grapes and more wines, if the interest can be cultivated, than all Europe put together. Some of the best judges from Europe so regard it. But they have to wait very long for their returns, and there are a class of men who have gone into it, many of them Germans and foreigners, who are poor and who have hard work to struggle along. They have come to this country to try to cultivate this interest, and I feel a great deal of sympathy for their efforts, having been among them and seen them, and I could not say less than this to the Senate in their behalf. I do not think it is well to say that the whole revenue derived from brandy is dependent upon this one item, which is so small in the aggregate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I doubt not the Senate are perfectly willing to be just and even generous in the arrangement of the tax upon the brandy made in California or made anywhere else from grapes; and I only use the language "made from grapes" because that is the language of the law. But I desire that the Senate may understand precisely what they have done and what it is proposed to do. I am not unwilling to be placed in the attitude of a friend to American manufactures or to American productions of any kind; and I am proud when I hear it stated that the number of vines in California has increased from ten millions in 1864 to twenty millions in 1868. I am willing to concede that the brandy made there is a very pure and excellent article, not of the highest flavor, but still an article recommended generally by physicians.

Now, what are the facts? In 1861 we only imposed a duty on foreign brandy of one dollar per gallon. As we imposed the internal taxes upon spirits and brandy made here at home we gradually increased it up to the sum of three dollars per gallon. I am not to be told that I am not a friend of encouraging home manufactures when the protection that we give home-made brandy is $2 50 a gallon after we have subjected it to the tax proposed by this bill. If we could do without the revenue I should be perfectly willing to reduce the duties upon foreign brandy one half. It is only for the purpose of revenue that they ought to be kept up to the extravagant figure of three dollars a gallon. But while they are so kept up, so small is the quantity produced in all the land that it is a direct bonus of nearly two dollars a gallon for every gallon that is made in this country.

I am not willing to go further than that. It is a sorry pittance, I know, that my friends from California claim. They ask that we shall not only reduce it from one dollar a gallon to fifty cents, but that we shall split peas, and reduce it to twenty-five cents a gallon. If there is any claim for that in respect to this article, why should there not be a claim in respect to peach brandy or apple brandy? Either of the articles is worth very much more than whisky, and they all have to be kept to a very considerable age before they are suitable to sell. The idea that brandy has to be kept from 1800 or 1805 or 1815 to the present moment before it is fit for use I will say is a very mistaken idea. I have been informed by some of the largest keepers of wine and brandy that no liquor really improves for more than ten years, and it must be a liquor of extraordinary body to do even that. It must be something like Madeira wine, or brandy, or something of that character, that will improve after it is more than three or four years of age.

Mr. CONNESS. What does the Senator mean by "body?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Alcoholic strength. Now, Mr. President, I have no interest in this matter. We make no brandy or any liquor of any kind in my State. All I desire is to be just and even generous on this subject. I merely desire that the Senate should understand what the facts are in the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from California.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let it be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Finance report the following proviso to the first section of the bill:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be the same and no higher than that upon other distilled spirits.

It is proposed to amend the proviso so as to make the tax on brandy made from grapes one half the tax upon other distilled spirits.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one other fact in regard to this matter that I ought to state to the Senate. We have removed all restrictions from the distillation of brandy that are so burdensome to the whisky distiller. We put no tax at all upon wine made in California or elsewhere, so that the only tax on the production of the grape is this fifty cent tax on brandy. But that is not all. We have relieved them, as you will see by the next section, from all the restrictions and requirements as to the distillation of whisky. They would be very burdensome to the small distillers of brandy from peaches and grapes; and the next section provides:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, exclusively, from such of the provisions of this act relating to the manufacture of spirits as in his judgment may seem expedient.

This is copied from the existing law. The Commissioner, by general regulations, relieves them from all the requirements about keeping books and all special taxes and all stipulations of that kind, which would be embarrassing to small distillers of brandy. So that the only tax that will be left upon the distillation of brandy from grapes is the fifty cent tax. It seems to me under these circumstances we ought to make no discrimination and keep up no discrimination.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I suggest to the honorable Senator who proposed the amendment to add the words "or other domestic fruits" after the word "grapes."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not in order now.

Mr. DAVIS. I merely suggest it to the Senator who moved the amendment.

Mr. COLE. I cannot accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and of Senators to the fact that brandy manufactured from grapes in the manner suggested is very different from brandy manufactured from peaches or apples. Brandy manufactured from peaches and apples includes the whole product from that fruit, all that can be made out of it. It is not so with this brandy manufactured from grapes. First, the wine is pressed out, and from the residue, the lees, the substance which otherwise would be thrown away, the brandy is manufactured. Each owner of a vineyard has this substance upon his hands after he has manufactured or pressed out his wine, and unless he is encouraged to make this further use of it by getting the brandy out of this refuse substance it will be thrown away, and in that way of course the Government will be injured, because this product, which would pay if the amendment to the amendment is adopted twenty-five cents on the gallon, would afford some revenue; whereas if it is thrown away, as it was formerly, there will be nothing from it. As it is now, the small vineyards cannot use it unless they can take it to some larger owner of a vineyard who has a distillery, and who will buy it of them, or perhaps manufacture it for them. It is not every little vineyard that can afford the machinery and apparatus to get the brandy out of this refuse substance. Senators, therefore, must see that it occupies a different ground from brandy which is manufactured from apples or peaches.

I will add but one word more. There has been no fraud perpetrated under this law. There is no complaint from any quarter on that score. This brandy has paid its tax honestly and fairly, and will do it, wherever it is imposed, or whatever amount may be imposed. The fact is that the internal revenue districts of California have been better administered than those in other portions of the Union. I made a statement some time ago which I will repeat now, that the tax upon spirits in the first district of California, which comprises San Francisco and this wine-growing region, was nearly as great as the entire tax from whisky in the ten districts of New York, including the cities of New York and Brooklyn. This ought to be sufficient to convince Senators that there are no frauds perpetrated there at all events, and that the tax is well collected in that portion of the Union. I hope the same rule that prevailed under the old law will be allowed to exist under this, and that the amendment to the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. There are two reasons to my mind why the tax on brandy made from grapes ought to be more, or at least equally as much, as the tax upon brandy made from apples or other fruits, one of which was stated by the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat. After the wine is expressed from the grape there is a refuse from which, as the honorable Senator says, the matter of brandy is extracted. He says if the brandy is taxed this refuse will be thrown away, and therefore lost. He further made the remark that the brandy which is made from peaches and apples is the aggregate value of the raw article. That is true. The fruit that can first be used in the manufacture of wine, and from the refuse of which brandy can also be made, is certainly capable of sustaining a higher tax than where the entire fruit is consumed in the manufacture of brandy. Therefore, the honorable Senator's reason is against his conclusion, and strongly supports the conclusion that brandy made from the grape ought at least to pay as high a tax, and I think a higher tax, if any discrimination is made, than brandy made from apples or peaches.

There is another reason why the tax upon brandy made from the grape ought to be larger. It is the most valuable. It commands a higher price in the market. Brandy made from the apple I presume, and I think such is the fact, does not command half the price that brandy made from the grape does. There are apple orchards all over the mountain regions of the United States, and the man who owns an apple orchard erects a shed and gets a small still and he manufactures brandy from his own orchard or from the orchards of his neighbors. This is a manufacture that is very extensive in the mountainous portions of the United States. To be sure, when you get so far south that it is too warm for the apple tree to flourish, there is no apple brandy manufactured; but in the whole chain of the Alleghanies and the spurs of the Alleghanies there are in the aggregate a very large amount of apple orchards, and the fruit is mostly applied to the distillation of apple brandy. A great many inhabitants in the mountain regions of the country have no other sources of revenue than this distillation into brandy, and from the brandy, the result of their distillation, they derive all the revenue that they make at all. Others, of course, have smaller branches of other industries combined with it, and make profits from other sources besides the distillation of apples. But the amount of brandy distilled from apples, which is the exclusive revenue of very many men, in the aggregate amounts to a great deal. I do not think that the brandy distilled from apples especially, and also from peaches, ought to be taxed fifty cents. I think the honorable Senator from California would add to the strength of his proposition if he would adopt my suggestion. If he does not, I shall vote against his amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I submit to the honorable Senator from Kentucky that he can offer that proposition as an amendment after this has been voted upon.

Mr. DAVIS. I would rather put it in company with the proposition to tax brandy made from grapes. I think the whole family, as they are all brandies, might move along harmoniously together.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suppose we can discuss the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky when it is offered. At present we have simply an amendment proposed to make a discrimination similar to that which is in the existing law. By our present internal tax law, while the duty on spirits generally is fixed at two dollars a gallon, that on brandy made from grapes is fixed at one dollar, being one half the former amount. Now, when the general level of spirit duties is to be brought down from two dollars to fifty cents, the Senator from California proposes that the duty on grape brandy shall be brought down from one dollar to twenty-five cents, being a corresponding decrease in the existing duty to that which is provided for spirits in general. In the first place this discrimination is not a novelty. It is not a new and extraordinary thing proposed for the first time by the Senator from California. He proposes to continue in the new law the principle which is already in existence in the present law. His amendment is not obnoxious to the charge that it is to overturn any settled principle in our revenue system or to introduce any novelty in our enactments. Another consideration has occurred to me.

We impose no tax upon wine produced in this country from grapes. Our native wines are as yet exempt from the direct pressure of our financial burdens. Our financiers have not proposed to us to resort to that object for raising means to meet the burdens of the Government. Domestic wines are exempt, while you impose very heavy duties, such as the public necessities demand, upon all wines imported from abroad. Now, sir, this production of grape brandy is connected with the production of domestic wines. It is a part of the general production from vineyards, and it seems to me that if there is any good reason for exempting our domestic wines from taxation, necessarily there must be good reason for treating the production of brandy from grapes at least with indulgence.
